KANSAS CITY, KAN.—Many a small town, or suburban community, bases its prosperity on the quality of the moving picture shows provided by its theater.

But here is a case where the downtown business district of a city of 100,000 has lots of business when the show is running—and little when it is not.

The city is Kansas City, Kansas. There are three or four distinct communities in this spread-out city; one where the packing houses and hundreds of small homes are located; one a mile northward along Central avenue, a business street built up through a residence district; one on the northern edge, a mile from Minnesota avenue. But Minnesota avenue is the chief street of the city, where the larger stores, the banks, city and county buildings and postoffice are.

There is now only one picture show running on Minnesota avenue, the Electric. It provides as good pictures as any shown in Kansas. It also gives some vaudeville on the program. The Electric has a seating capacity of 1,800; and it is usually well filled for three performances on week days, five on Saturdays.

For two weeks this summer the Electric was closed for redecorating. And the influence of the theater on the shoppers was plainly apparent. Minnesota avenue even on Saturday nights was almost deserted—there was not 25 per cent. of the numbers of people usually seen there. The stores suffered in consequence. There was a difference, for instance, of $25 a day in the receipts of a druggist, a shoe merchant, a furniture dealer, jewelrs. Dry goods merchants suffered similarly. Their business picked up again to the volume of before the closing after the theater reopened.

During the two weeks that the Electric was closed the people to the south went to the Central avenue shows, those to the north to the shows in the northern suburbs—or they went over to resorts in Kansas City, Mo., or stayed at home. They did not visit Minnesota avenue.

There are hundreds of instances over the country of communities which, like Minnesota avenue in Kansas City, Kan., have fine stores, wide and well lighted streets, plenty of facilities, such as soda water stands, drug stores and so forth, but which don't seem to have any "pep" except such as is contributed by the picture show.

Those which have the picture show too, but don't get the crowds, evidently lack one thing—the quality of show given in the theater, that brings the people, even in competition with easily available amusement parks, bathing beaches, and the excitement and attractions of a greater city such as Kansas City, Mo., a 20-minute ride from Kansas City, Kan.

S. H. Shirley Now Metro Manager.

Kansas City, Mo.—S. A. Shirley has been made manager of the Metro Film Service office here. He took active charge of the office July 27. He comes direct to this position from the General Film Company at Boston, Mass., where he has had considerable experience in the executive end of the work. He has been in the moving picture business for about eight years.

Edward Kelley Added to General Film Forces.

Kansas City, Mo.—Edward Kelley has been added to the poster department of the General Film Company. F. M. Labrast has been added to the shipping department of the same company. This is another step in the general shakeup experienced in that company during the last month.

H. C. Robertson With Goldwyn Sales Forces.

Kansas City, Mo.—H. C. Robertson has been added to the sales forces of the Goldwyn office here. He is the brother of Richard Robertson, manager of the Kansas City office. Mr. Robertson will travel in Kansas.

Notes for Greater Vitagraph Branch.

Kansas City, Mo.—C. F. Doles succeeds Joseph T. Hagerty as southern Kansas representative of the Vitagraph company. It is reported that Mr. Hagerty will soon go to New York. Mr. Doles has had considerable selling experience.

The Greater Vitagraph office at Kansas City has made several changes within the last week. Joseph Howe, formerly of the General Film Company, is now shipping clerk. Earl Meyers has been put in the poster department, and Miss Ida Meador, formerly Triangle cashier, is now cashier at the local Vitagraph office.

Y. Darnell, traveling representative of Greater Vitagraph, was in Kansas City on his return from Chicago, where he represented the local Vitagraph office.

Chas. Gregory Managing Goldwyn Shipping.

Kansas City, Mo.—Charles Gregory, formerly of the shipping department of the World Film, has been made manager of the shipping department of the Goldwyn office at Kansas City.

L. B. Douglas Promoted.

Kansas City, Mo.—L. B. Douglas, formerly in charge of the serial department of the Universal Film and Supply, has been made manager of the publicity and advertising department of the same company. In this position he has charge of the multigraphing and printing work of the office. The office is now operating a new policy in aiding the exhibitor to properly advertise his productions free of charge on request. Mr. Douglas will be in a position to co-operate with the exhibitor in exploiting the Universal features, especially the serials, as these two departments are very closely associated.

H. H. Young to Manage U. Serials.

Kansas City, Mo.—Harry H. Young has been appointed manager of the serial department of the Universal Film and Supply, succeeding L. B. Douglas. Mr. Young was formerly with the World Film and Mutual offices here.

Charles Hardin Out of Local Metro.

Kansas City, Mo.—Charles Hardin, the oldest film exchange manager in Kansas City, and who managed the Metro office here, has resigned his position with that company. Mr. Hardin was manager of the Fox office here for a year and a half. He was later sent to take charge of the Southern division for Fox, but being dissatisfied with the territory returned to Kansas City as manager of the Metro office. The Metro Pictures Corporation, in consideration of his services while in charge of the Kansas City office, presented him with a twenty-one jewel Hamilton watch. Mr. Hardin has not announced his plans for the future, but it is said that he may go to Atlanta, Georgia, to take charge of the E. and H. Film Company, of which he is president.

Theater Notes Across Kansas.

Ottawa, Kan.—The Star theater here has been making extensive improvements recently, which include the construction of a new floor and a redecoration of the interior.

Junction City, Kan.—The opera house here is now under the management of Bert R. Gallup, who will soon open the theater as a motion picture show. The building is held under lease by the Junction City Amusement Company.

Ottawa, Kan.—H. E. Shaw has bought the Pastime theater here from Hartley Brothers of this town. Mr. Shaw has much experience in the moving picture business.

Augusta, Kan.—The airdome here has been reopened by Jesse Owens and C. E. Troutman.

Esbon, Kan.—The Esbon moving picture theater has been bought by Wm. Dixon, of Severance, Kansas. Mr. Dixon is installing a new machine and other new equipment.

Galena, Kan.—Mrs. Fannie Jacobs has bought the Gem theater here.

Satanta, Kan.—Hutchison Brothers have completed the building of the new picture theater here.

Among Missouri Theaters.

West Plains, Mo.—Mrs. Norton Henry is now managing the Famous theater here.

Greenfield, Mo.—Orville Engleman has bought the Bijou theater here from Mrs. Horace Howard and Mrs. Elsie Smith.

Clarence, Mo.—Marion Lilly has bought the Star theater here from N. S. Jensen. This theater has been closed for several weeks for remodeling, but will soon be reopened.

Centralia, Mo.—H. R. Miller has bought the Gem theater at Centralia from C. E. Walker. He will take charge Aug. 1.

Oak Grove, Mo.—D. F. Trigg and N. W. Lemasters are backing the enterprise to establish an airdome for Oak Grove.

New Nebraska Theaters and 'Changes.

Havelock, Neb.—Ralph W. Wolverton has bought the Joyo theater here from Rowland Meyers.

Seward, Neb.—Fred and William Mayland are having a building remodeled in which they will open a moving picture show.

Lincoln, Neb.—A building permit has been granted to Nellie C. Buck for the erection of a motion picture theater that will cost $15,000

Corsicana, Texas.—Work has begun on the erection of an opera house that will cost $35,000 for M. L. Levine. The building will be completed in about six months.

Westpoint, Neb.—The Ideal theater here was damaged by fire to the extent of $50.

Here and There in the Southwest.

Lexington, Okla.—The Amusement Company has been chartered with a capital stock of $1,000,000 by E. B. Abernathy, Jay Sherman, Edward Law.

Wadena, Ia.—Geo. Jone has closed his theater here.

Weleetka, Okla.—The Orpheum theater here has been extensively remodeled, the building being made two stories high with a balcony. New seats and a new screen will soon be installed.

Vernon, Texas.—More's theater has been chartered with a capital stock of $30,000 by R. L. More, L. K. Johnson, and F. L. Massie.

Fort Smith, Ark.—The Palace theater, which was recently purchased by Mrs M. Donnell and Mr. J. W. Scott, is being repaired, and will be opened soon.

Other Visitors in the City.

Visitors in Kansas City last week were: C. Glauber, Majestic theater, Wellington, Kan.; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Savage, Deluxe theater, Hutchinson, Kan.; O. H. Thompson, Plattsburg, Mo.; M. W. Hubbell, Trenton, Mo.; W. W. Wurtenberger, Empress theater, St. Joseph, Mo.; F. B. Davis, White Way theater, Belleville, Kan.; Mrs. Jack Reinhardt, Idle Hour theater, Augusta, Kan.; L. L. Eagle Theater to Be Enlarged.

ST. LOUIS MO.—Frank Root, proprietor of the Eagle theater at Broadway and Lafayette avenue, has just concluded negotiations for additional footage of ground for the enlargement of his theater, and work will begin at once. Mr. Root is a pioneer exhibitor of the South Broadway district. Several years ago he opened up the Eagle theater, and by giving careful attention he soon built up his business to such an extent that more room was needed, and a new building was erected a few feet south of the old. Now this has grown too small, and the present alterations and enlargements are necessary to accommodate the audiences. Mr. Root's success in the show business is due to a close personal supervision by himself and his wife, who also devotes her time to the enterprise.

New Manager for Bluebirds.

St. Louis, Mo.—G. F. Hennessy has been appointed manager of the Bluebird exchange at 3547 Olive street. Mr. Hennessy was formerly employed as road representative for the exchange, and his promotion to the position of manager was a natural evolution because of the number of Bluebird contracts he brought in. Hennessy is one of the youngest managers on Film Row, but he has had a number of years of experience in the feature end of moving pictures.

Sam Shurman Will Boost "Gray Ghost."

St. Louis, Mo.—Sam Shurman has been appointed traveling representative by the Universal exchange, and will boost Universal films with special emphasis on the "Gray Ghost" serial from now on.

Midwest Film Corporation Moves.

St. Louis, Mo.—Ted Morse, manager of the Selznick productions for St. Louis, Missouri, and Illinois, has moved his headquarters from the Plaza building to the third floor of the Empress Theater building on Olive street.

Standard Corporation Gets New Manager.

St. Louis, Mo.—F. J. Fegan has been made manager of the Standard Film Corporation, third floor of the Empress Theater building, who distribute Art Dramas through the St. Louis territory. Mr. Fegan is known to the film trade, having been road representative for the General, and manager of the United Film Corporation while that exchange operated in St. Louis.

Paramount No Longer a "Branch" in St. Louis.

St. Louis, Mo.—A. D. Flintom, of the Paramount interests in Kansas City, visited St. Louis last week to confer with G. W. McKean, local manager for Paramont, and completed arrangements that will make the St. Louis Paramount office a regular distributing exchange hereafter instead of a branch of the Kansas City.

Manager Thomas, of the Fox exchange, gave a rather elaborate private showing to the trade and newspaper men of "The Honor System," at 11 a. m., on August 1.

New Des Moines Theater Is to Be a Beauty

Men Interested in Majestic and Casino Theaters in Des Moines Take Lease and Will Spend Much Money to Make a New Theater.

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

DES MOINES, IA.—C. C. Taft, big wholesale fruit dealer; A. B. Frankle, of the Casino and Majestic theaters, and Ira B. Thomas, prominent lawyer of Des Moines, all big stockholders in the corporation that operates the Casino and Majestic, have taken a long time lease on the first two floors of the building just west of the new thirteen-story Register-Tribune building, on Locust between Seventh and Eighth streets. A thoroughly modern and up-to-the-minute photoplay house is to be installed. The company has organized with $100,000 and they plan to spend $70,000 in improvements. The company of Kraetch & Kraetch has secured the contract and plans a beautiful house seating 1,400 people. Building operations begin the first of October and the contract calls for completion the first of January.

Mr. Frankle says that the photoplay houses will be the finest in all Iowa, and one of the finest in the middle west. He believes that with the opening of the Register-Tribune building late this fall a great influx of business will be drawn to this block. The new theater will be just opposite the recently remodeled Theater Royal.

A. H. Blank May Build, Too.

With this new theater and the steady rumor of another big one to be erected by A. H. Blank of the Garden theater in this city, Des Moines theaters will undergo a distinct change for the better. With the completion of the cantonment here and the arrival of at least 50,000 more people to the city of Des Moines, and considering the many visitors to the city and the training soldiers, the theater men of Des Moines look forward to a big increase in business.

Sergeant Hanley Stirs Des Moines.

Des Moines, Ia.—For four days, beginning Wednesday, the 25th, the Majestic theater exhibited some interesting war pictures in connection with the personal appearance of Sergeant Hanley, one of the thirteen survivors of the famous Princess Pat regiment of Canada. From the first day the Majestic had splendid crowds, taking into consideration the intense heat that prevailed all through the four days.

On Friday afternoon Sergeant Hanley spoke to the women of the city exclusively, telling them of the great necessity of their supporting their soldiers at the front for the soldiers, as well as their own protection. On Saturday afternoon he talked to the soldiers themselves, and it is a fact that his pictures and talk awakened the city as it never could have been awakened to the realization of the crisis that faces the United States. Des Moines people, although they responded nobly to the Liberty Bond and Red Cross appeals, have been most unpatriotic in many other ways, and without doubt Sergeant Hanley has done a great deal toward impressing them with the need for active support as well as money.

H. R. Harrison, formerly salesman for the Favorite Features Film company of Minneapolis, is superintending the showing of these pictures.

Hot Weather Wreaking Havoc With Iowa Business.

Des Moines, Ia.—Des Moines and all Iowa are shriveling up with the intense late July and August heat. Fifteen to twenty per cent. of the exhibitors over the state have closed down entirely until the end of the hot spell. Those who are brave enough to face the lax crowds have cut their shows down to one or two a week. In the larger towns and cities suburban houses are shut and the smaller houses in the congested districts are closed down. The exchanges are feeling the loss of business badly, their receipts dropping down away below the average. Old timers complain that they have never seen such a condition of business, especially in the towns of below 1,000 inhabitants, and there are so many such in Iowa. The temperature plays around 94 and 98 constantly, with no relief to amount to anything when the sun goes down. Even the evenings offer no coolness and it is not to be wondered at that the theater men show to empty seats.

Naturally the program exchanges complain the heavier, since it is the smaller towns that patronize them. The feature exchanges notice the sinking of receipts heavily, but still manage to smile wanly. It will be the middle of September or later before great improvement will be noticed.

Metro Offering Open Booking on Old Subjects.

Des Moines, Ia.—The Des Moines Metro is sending post cards to the exhibitors in Iowa and Nebraska offering about 45 of their first releases, featuring Mary Miles Minter, Mme. Petrova, Emily Stevens, Ethel Barrymore, Bushman and Bayne and Emmy Whelen, for open booking. Manager Skirboll reports excellent results from the plan. The Metro is also boosting the big feature, "The Slacker," and contemplate showing it in Des Moines during the State Fair the latter part of August.

Schwarz, General Auditor of Mid West, Transferred to Des Moines.

Des Moines, Ia.—Sam S. Schwarz, auditor of the Mid West Photoplay corporation, and at present stationed in the Kansas City office, is to be transferred to the Des Moines office when that office takes over the shipping and complete handling of the Mid West pictures in Iowa and Nebraska, leaving the Missouri and Kansas business to Kansas City. Schwarz will act as general auditor of all of the A. H. Blank Enterprises.

Albia's Comet Theater Has Had Thirty-eight Competitors.

Albia, Ia.—In the ten years that J. E. Benton of Albia has been operating the Comet theater he has fought with thirty-eight different competitors. Benton is the second oldest exhibitor in the state of Iowa, J. M. Heffner of the Bijou in Mason City claiming the title of the oldest. Heffner, who is a captain in the Iowa National Guard, has reported for service and left the management of the theater in the capable hands of Mrs. Heffner.

Walter Davis Again at Helm of the Palace.

Des Moines, Ia.—It is reported that Walter Davis, former successful manager of the Palace theater of this city, is back on the job again, taking up his work on the 29th.

I. J. Cummings Takes Over Comet Theater.

Clarinda, Ia.—I. J. Cummings of the Bon Ton in Clarinda, Ia., has taken over the Comet theater in Gravity, formerly owned by Savage and Wagner.

L. A. Sheridan, manager of the Des Moines Pathe, is not so very downhearted over the summer slump in business. He made a business trip to Albia, Creston and Osceola last week and brought "home the bacon."

San Francisco Reaps Harvest from Camps

Business Is Active, Though Only Advance Guard of Troops Are in Camp Here —Visitors from Outside Points Are Many—Hot Weather Holds.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The concentration of troops at this city is making summer business quite active, especially in the downtown district, and in the neighborhood of the army camps. Work is under way on the great cantonment down the peninsula, and several hundred soldiers are already on the ground, causing considerable activity in moving picture circles in suburban towns. Within three months a great tented city will be ready for occupancy near Palo Alto, and here at least 40,000 men will be quartered. Arrangements are already being made for the erection of additional places of amusement and for the running of automobile busses to nearby towns. Thousands of visitors are now coming here to see the camps and to visit the soldiers quartered here, travel from outside points being the heaviest ever known, with the exception of the Exposition year.

In the interior extremely hot weather is still being experienced, and many theaters are being conducted at a loss. Others are closed and will not be reopened until the hot spell is broken. Exhibitors are in fine spirits, however, feeling that the coming season will be a very satisfactory one for them. Crops were never as large before, everyone is working, wages are high, and money is being freely spent. They have been coming to San Francisco in large numbers of late to escape the heat and to arrange for fall bookings, and local exchanges have been doing a very heavy business.

Lesser Off for New York.

San Francisco, Cal.—Sol. L. Lesser, head of the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., has left on another of his frequent trips to New York and while away will make purchases of films and attend the meeting of state rights buyers to be held in New York in August. Leon Netter, who has been here for some time, making his headquarters with the All Star, has also left for New York, and Mike Rosenberg, of Seattle, is to be on hand to attend the convention of buyers.

Film Folks Take Vacations.

San Francisco, Cal.—The vacation bee has struck film row and there is scarcely an exchange organization intact. Louis Hyman, head booker for the All Star, has left for a stay in the Lake Tahoe region, and Miss Freda Rubenstein, the personal representative of Sol L. Lesser, returned recently from a visit to the Russian river. Charles I. Luntz, traveling representative of this firm, is also back from a combined vacation and business trip to Los Angeles. Marion F. Kohn, of the Consolidated Film, is rusticating on the Russian river, while Walter G. Preddey, the popular supply man, is motoring to Lake Tahoe and other beauty spots in the high Sierras. Max Morris, of the Western Poster company, is another who has succumbed to the charms of the Northern California mountains, and is motoring in the Lake Tahoe regions with his family. He expects to be away for about a month, hunting and fishing, and plans to return home by way of Yosemite. Miss Gertrude Edwards, of the Triangle office, is enjoying a stay at Monte Rio.

Fox Manager Home from Convention.

San Francisco, Cal.—William Citron, who has had charge of the local Fox exchange since this branch was established, has returned from his trip to New York where he attended the convention of Fox managers. The return was made by the way of the Southern states, Salt Lake City and the Feather River Canyon. He brought back with him an assistant in the person of J. J. Mooney, of New York, who will handle the Standard pictures.

Triangle Manager Off for Meeting.

San Francisco, Cal.—Ben F. Simpson, manager of the local Triangle branch, has left for Salt Lake City to attend a meeting of western Triangle representatives to be held there. Sales Manager W. W. Hines is to be present, and some of the new plans of this organization will be disclosed. Mr. Simpson reports that exhibitors are taking a great interest in the Hart and Arbuckle reprints soon to be offered, and that many are arranging for the showing of all of these a second time.

Markowitz Brothers Join Hands.

San Francisco, Cal.—Abe Markowitz, who recently resigned his position with the California Film exchange, has affiliated himself with his brother Dan, who conducts the Western Film exchange and who controls a number of feature productions in this territory.

Charles Klopot Plans to Enlarge Business.

San Francisco, Cal.—Charles Klopot recently returned from a trip through the Pacific northwest and announces that he has completed arrangements for an expansion of his business in that territory. He is preparing to engage in the theatrical business there and will conduct a chain of theaters featuring musical comedy and moving pictures, using these houses as an outlet for his state rights purchases.

To Take Outfit to Panama.

San Francisco, Cal.—Dr. George A. Miller, formerly of this city, but now in charge of the Methodist Missions at Panama and Costa Rica, recently purchased a projection machine and a quantity of educational film from the Independent Film exchange, and will leave shortly for the Isthmus.

Rialto to Test Billy West.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Rialto theater has booked the new Billy West comedies, and the first of these will shortly be shown at this big Market street house.

Fire Destroys Films.

Fruitvale, Cal.—A fire occurred recently in the operating room of the Family theater at 3279 East Fourteenth street, and a near-panic resulted. Patrons made their way to the exits, however, without any difficulty, and the blaze, which was confined to the operating room, was quickly extinguished. Several reels of the "House of Bondage," controlled by Davis Bros., of San Francisco, were destroyed, but they managed to get another copy and all bookings are being filled in their proper order. The Family theater is conducted by J. McInerny and Manuel Serano. A fire occurred also at the Empire theater, San Jose, about the same time, and here eight reels were lost.

Hill Off for Portland.

San Francisco, Cal.—C. M. Hill, who has been in charge of the San Francisco office of the Progressive Motion Picture company during the absence of J. W. Allen in the Orient, has left for Portland, Ore., to open a new branch for this concern.

Sells Equipment to University.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Atlas Educational Film company has sold a Simplex projection machine and a second Atlas projector to Stanford University. It has also sold a Universal camera and a full studio equipment, including a Haines printer, to the California Packing corporation of this city.

Goldwyn Offices Ready.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Goldwyn offices in the Easton building on Market street are now in a completed shape, Manager C. M. Simmonds has gathered a sales organization about him, and all is in readiness for the reception of exhibitors and the display of the first releases. District Manager Harry Leonhardt is on the ground and the first shipment of films is expected any day.

San Francisco Film Briefs.

Manager Kurtzig has been made manager of the Empire theater on Market street.

The Alhambra theater has booked the Art Drama feature, the "House of Cards," for early presentation.

The Majestic theater in the Mission district is being conducted for the time being by the owner of the property, Casto Bros., who formerly operated it, having retired.

The Imperial theater has been featuring Christie comedies quite strongly of late, having been running these for more than a month.

The Breck Photoplay Supply company has installed two Simplex machines in the Odeon theater, on Market street, and has sent two to the C. and C. theater at Taft, Cal., and one machine to the Rodeo theater, at Rodeo, Cal.

For a National State Rights Association

President Rosenberg of De Luxe Feature Film Goes to New York to Aid Sol Lesser in Organizing a Nation-wide Film Concern.

By S. L. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—M. Rosenberg, president of the De Luxe Feature Film Company, left for New York July 26 to assist in forming the National State Rights Buyers' Association, which his friend and erstwhile employer, Sol. W. Lesser, of San Francisco, has been urging upon state rights buyers for some time. Since Mr. Rosenberg bought out Mr. Lesser's northwestern branch three years ago these two film merchants have worked hand in hand with each other, forming a sort of Pacific Coast State Rights Buyers' Association, one often selecting features for both, but keeping their business entirely separate nevertheless. When Mr. Lesser first suggested the National State Rights Buyers' Association, Mr. Rosenberg fell in with the idea immediately, and they have both been working for it for some months.

Mr. Rosenberg will also buy new features for the fall business while in New York. This is the third time this year that he has made a trip to the metropolis. He also announces that he has just bought the Billy West Comedies.

H. Sussman Starts Many Road Shows.

Seattle, Wash.—H. Sussman, of the Peerless Feature Film Company, has started out six road shows to cover the small towns of the territory which have no picture houses. Each man is equipped with a Victor Animatograph, which is a very convenient and efficient yet light machine, electrically operated.

Notes from the Artcraft-Paramount Office.

Seattle, Wash.—H. G. Rosebaum, Seattle manager for Artcraft-Paramount, spent several days in Portland this week.

Guy Navarre, salesman, is making a tour of the Oregon territory.

A number of new members have been added to the staff, thus necessitating the enlargement of the offices. Frank C. Opie is to have charge of the records of the special star contracts, and F. Heim has been employed as record clerk. F. L. Markle is the new booker, and the newly created post of stenographer for the publicity department has been given to Miss Virginia Mull.

High Praise for "The Flame of the Youkon."

Seattle, Wash.—Manager H. H. Hurn, of the local Triangle office, is very proud of a letter received from Ralph Ruffner, of the Liberty theater, Spokane, in which he says "The Flame of the Youkon" is the finest picture ever released on any program. (This testimony is being echoed on all hands. At least we hear it spoken of as one of the best pictures.—Ed.).

Seattle, Wash.—Among the visitors on Seattle's film row this week were: H. T. Moore, Colonial theater, Tacoma; A. C. Anderson, Apollo, Tacoma; Ray Stannard, Gem, Wenatchee; J. C. Ehrlich, Stewart, Puyallup; W. A. Graeper, Union Avenue, Portland; George Werner, Antlers, Roseburg, Oregon; E. K. Dunham, Rex, Mt Vernon; E. K. Southern, Grand, Bellingham.

Spokane News Letter.

By S. Clark Patchin, E. 1811 11th Ave., Spokane, Wash.

Myrtle Steadman Pleases Spokane.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Myrtle Steadman, well-known moving picture actress, spent July 26 to 28 in Spokane and appeared in person on the Clemmer theater stage, where her pictures are shown. She attracted capacity houses, as her coming had been well advertised through the newspapers in their news columns. In an interview Miss Steadman, who is an American girl, born in Chicago and with a sweet and low musical voice, said:

"I have not made many speeches on my trip so far. They tire my voice, but I sing the popular, high-class ballads in my program and practice at the theaters in the mornings.

"Since starting on the trip I have covered the entire Pacific Coast, and I find that my singing has been a great aid, as it is a change from what the other moving picture actresses have been doing in the way of delivering addresses. I shall work in Montana and Idaho, then in Utah, Colorado, Nebraska and Chicago, and go to New York."

Matt Kusell is booking agent for Miss Steadman and her bookings are, at this time, announced as follows: July 30, Coeur d'Alene, Idaho; July 31 and August 1, Empress theater, Great Falls, Mont.; August 2 and 3, Antlers theater, Helena, Mont.; August 4 and 5, Palace and Imperial theaters, Great Falls, Mont.; August 6, Judith theater, Livingston, Mont.; August 7 to 9, American theater, Butte, Mont.; August 10 and 11, Idaho Falls, Ida.; August 13 and 14, Pocatello, Ida., and from there she will go to Salt Lake and Denver.

Adolph Mayer Here to Get Scenic Films.

Spokane, Wash.—Captain Adolph Mayer of San Francisco, cinematographer, is in the city with Mrs. Mayer and is going from here to Montana points of interest, where he will photograph for the Superb Film Company. He expects to get 2,000 feet of films in Montana and may spend some time in the Coeur d'Alenes and points about Spokane.

Chautauqua Crop Plentiful in Oregon

Every Little Town Has Its Lyceum This Season and the Picture Theaters Suffer —Chautauquas Pay No License, but the Theater Has to Pay.

Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theater Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—This is open season for Chautauqua. During the past few weeks every mail to the exchanges on Portland's film row has brought letters from exhibitors asking that service be discontinued until the Chautauqua is over. It is impossible, the exhibitors say, to compete with the open air lyceums. Fortunately, they do not hold session for much more than two weeks in any one place in Oregon.

An example of Chautauqua competition was in Oregon City, where the business in the two theaters was conducted on a losing basis much of the time the Chautauqua held session, and thereafter the Oregon City exhibitors were to a considerable expense to coax their patrons back to the picture show habit. Billy Sunday appeared at the Oregon City Chautauqua one day and addressed [illegible] people and the picture shows were deserted.

The unfair part of Chautauqua competition that causes the exhibitors to complain is the very little or no local tax or license fee demanded, and that most of the money taken in goes out of the community, while the exhibitors, being a permanent fixture, is compelled to pay a high local license to operate. The matter has been placed before the exhibitors' league to see if some plan cannot be worked out with reference to this license question that will give everybody in the show business an even break.

Complaints concerning Chautauqua competition have been heard from nearly all of the Williamette valley towns, also from far-away places, for instance Myrtle Point, in the southern part of the state, and Fossil, in the eastern part.

Operator Loses Life in Fire.

Portland, Ore.—Word was received from Caldwell, Idaho, in this territory, that Horace Crookham, operator at the Huree theater, lost his life in a film fire that damaged the theater July 26. He became panic stricken, escaped through a trap door into an attic, where he was suffocated by the fumes of the burning film. He was immediately rescued, but attempts to revive him were futile.

Chas. Beals, assistant operator, was severely burned. Beals was formerly owner of the Bell theater at Oregon City, and was well known in Portland.

Weiser Theater Opens.

Weiser, Idaho.—A. C. Gordon opened his new theater here July 28 with Baby Marie Osborne in "Told at Twilight." An opening stunt arranged by the Portland Pathe office for the occasion was a direct wire from Baby Marie to the patrons of the opening show, sending her best wishes to them all. Mr. Gordon plans to close his old house, the Star.

Vernon Schubach on the Road.

Portland, Ore.—Vernon Schubach, bookkeeper for Universal in Portland and Seattle offices, has been promoted to traveling representative for the Film Supply Company of Oregon, which handles the Universal product. Mr. Schubach has been with Universal about a year and a half, and is very popular in the territory.

Cooper Now in Portland.

Portland, Ore.—E. L. Cooper, until recently the owner of the Palace theater, Rosenburg, has been engaged by H. C. Stevens as manager of the American theater at First and Main streets. The American is one of the three theaters owned by the Portland Amusemnt Company. Mr. Cooper has been a showman in this territory for some time, and before going to Roseburg was manager of the Alta theater at Pendleton.

Liberty Business Continues Good.

Portland, Ore.—Despite the predictions of a few "wise ones" that the record-making business at the new Liberty could not possibly continue, and that a big slump was due, patronage at the big theater has been excellent ever since its opening, notwithstanding the hot weather.

G. F. Fullerton, advertising chief for Jensen and Von Herberg, spent several weeks in Portland conducting a publicity campaign of stupendous magnitude that has evidently yielded results.

A peculiar feature of the opening of the new house is that none of the competing thaters are complaining of the loss of business. The People's kept Mary Pickford in "The Little American" over for eleven days, and have played continuously to S. R. O. houses; the Sunset returned Douglas Fairbanks in "The Habit of Happiness" for fourth time downtown and the third time at the Sunset, and Frank Lacy, manager, said the picture did better than ever; the Majestic showed two regular program pictures, and Manager J. J. Parker smilingly admitted he was highly gratified with the business. The new Liberty is evidently bringing many new people downtown.

Salem Theater Changes Hands.

Salem, Ore.—George Bligh has transferred Ye Liberty theater to his son, Frank Bligh, and will hereafter devote most of his attention to his other theater, the Bligh. Frank Bligh has been his father's assistant for some time.

Rosenberg to New York.

Portland, Ore.—Mike Rosenberg, DeLuxe Feature Film Company, called on his old friends in Portland recently en route to New York City, where he is to attend the state right buyers national convention. Mr. Rosenberg recently secured Billy West Comedies for Oregon, Washington and Idaho, and is greatly pleased with the business prospects for the coming season.

Visitors on Film Row.

Portland, Ore.—F. C. Quimby, district manager for Pathe at Seattle, was a recent Portland visitor, also Albert Eden, manager for Fox. Mr. Eden was returning from New York City. H. F. Hollenbeck, of the Eugene theater, Eugene, Ore., was in Portland booking road shows and pictures, and M. G. Cooley, Gem theater, Silverton, Oregon, was another Portland visitor. H. H. Hurn, new Triangle manager at Seattle, passed through Portland en route to Salt Lake. Other out-of-town film men in Portland were Guy Navarre, Progressive, and Geo. J. Ekre, Selznick.

Butte, Mont.—"On Trial," the first of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit pictures, opened at the Rialto theater July 29.

G. W. Whitney Now Mutual Manager at Butte.

Butte, Mont.—Following the resignation of Manager Coughlin from the Mutual company's Butte office, G. W. Whitney has been installed in charge of the branch exchange. Mr. Whitney has been in the film business for the past ten years as both exhibitor and exchangeman. He has managed the Grand theater at Kewanee, Ill., and later had charge of the weekly department for Pathe in Denver. He then took a part interest in the Annex theater of Denver and also traveled out of that city for the Mutual exchange. As an addition to his other qualifications he is a licensed operator. Manager Whitney takes the good wishes of many friends with him to the new position.

Simplex

July for Instance

We never did want a sky-rocket business.

(A sky-rocket is all right while it lasts, but pretty soon there's nothing left but the stick.)

What we wanted was a business that would grow and grow and keep on growing.

So we started right—with a Machine so designed and built that it would project motion pictures better, and continue to do that longer than any other.

Some said: "That Machine is too good. It isn't possible to build so good a Machine and sell it at a price that competes with ordinary Projectors."

But we did both.

And the results were remarkable.

July for instance.

We filled no unusually big orders during the month.

Yet it was the biggest July we ever had.

More than that. It was the biggest month in the history of our business.

Of course that tickles us. Tangible results from earnest effort are always gratifying.

But it is of interest to you, too. The Machine that wins out in a quality fight, in the face of all kinds of competition, will be a mighty big asset to you.

If you don't know the Simplex Distributor in your territory, we'll give you his name and address. And if you haven't a copy of Catalog "A" we'll mail you one.

People don't take to pictures that shake; but Simplex projection, they think, "simply perfection"

WE SELL MORE HIGH GRADE PROJECTORS THAN ANY OTHER MANUFACTURER IN THE WORLD.

SELIG.

SELIG WORLD LIBRARY NO. 12.

The Tortoise Market—The tortoise is a habitat of the tropical seas. They are sought for their flesh, which is excellent food, and for an oil they yield. Tortoise shell is extensively used in the manufacture of combs and in inlaying and other ornamental work.

Picturesque Water Battle of India. The Maharaja of the State of Jodhpur, India. The Maharaja's water battle is a gala sporting event given annually on the Hindu Holy day. Filling vats with water colored with dyes.

Francisco Villa's Mausoleum — Magnificent mausoleum erected by Francisco Villa, the Mexican rebel chief, in the city of Chihuahua, Mexico.

Our Great Cotton Industry—Cotton will not thrive where the annual temperature is under 60. Cottonseed and pods. The gin house. Suction method of unloading. Conveyors, warehouses, etc.

THE SMOLDERING SPARK (Two Parts).—The cast: Bob Hartley (Thomas Santschi); Cal Cooper (Herbert Rawlinson); Bessie Basset (Bessie Eyton); Her Mother (Anna Dodge); Captain Conrad (Frank Richardson); Davis (Geo. Hernandez). Written by Emmett Campbell Hall. Directed by Colin Campbell.

Bob Hartley, young, attractive, but dissipated, a wealthy yachtsman, falls in love with Bessie Basset. Another suitor is Cal Cooper, a robust young sailor. Bessie loves Bob, but dismisses him when she finds him drunk. Bessie's grief undermines her health, and her godfather, Captain Conrad, an old-time salt, takes her on a voyage.

Bob, while drunk, is shanghaied and shipped on Conrad's vessel. When he becomes conscious the ship is at sea. He endeavors to assert his identity, but is laughed at. He appeals to Bessie to identify him, but she denies knowing him. The mates and the crew, particularly Cal, abuse Bob until he whips Cal and appeals to the captain to know if he preserves the old custom—whip a mate and take his place. The old captain declares the custom holds; the mates are furiously eager for the battle. Bob whips both mates, is made first mate and takes command when the captain breaks his leg. The ship catches fire. Cal proves himself a coward. Bob overawes the panic-stricken crew, and at length puts out the fire. He brings the ship triumphantly into port.

Bob's experiences really have made a man of him and there is every prospect for happiness for Bessie and himself.

RAY COMEDY.

CHEATING HIS WIFE (One Reel).—Casey, a hotel porter, is obliged to hand over his wages each week to his wife, who allows him a small amount each week for tobacco, but nothing for car fare, so poor Casey has to walk, except in extremely stormy weather. Finally he discovers where his wife keeps the roll. One day the elevator at the hotel is out of order and Casey has to carry a trunk up to the thirteenth floor for a guest, and finding no tip coming he threatens to carry it down again. The guest threatens to shoot and Casey rushes down stairs.

On reaching the basement he sees a youth annoying a girl and puts him to flight. The girl's father, wishing to do something for Casey, gives him a tip on the market. Casey goes home and takes the hidden bank roll, leaving a roll of paper in its place. He follows the tip and cleans up $30,000. The newspapers get wind of it and get out extras.

Meantime Mrs. Casey discovers that the money has gone and faints. Neighbors tell her of the newspaper stories and she awaits Casey's return with a whip. Casey meanwhile buys a new suit, meets a beautiful girl in a high-class restaurant, opens many bottles of wine with the result that he cannot locate the keyhole when he gets home. He finally enters, goes to his room and falls asleep, only to be rudely awakened by Mrs. Casey, who chases him all over the house with the whip.

JAXON COMEDY.

COUNTING 'EM UP (One Reel—Featuring Pokes and Jabs).—Pokes believes himself an artist on the cornet, but the Jabs family across the hall, like the rest of the neighbors, do not share this opinion. They are all annoyed at the noise he makes and finally Jabs tells his wife that he will stop it by getting Pokes out of the house. He finds some difficulty in doing so, however, as Mrs. Pokes keeps a watchful eye on her spouse. He finally succeeds by arresting Pokes, and once out of the house they start out for a good time, which they surely have, getting into all sorts of scrapes as their imagination gets the better of them. They finally arrive home and tell a well connected story, only to be thrown out of the window by their enraged wives. They are not hurt, but the sudden stop at the bottom lands them among the stars, and while Jabs bemoans his fate, Pokes is leasurely "counting 'em up."

SPARKLE COMEDY.

AN ATTORNEY'S AFFAIR (One Reel).—Lawyer Bard gets a photograph of Grace Knowles, heiress to half a million, with instructions to find her. His wife sees him looking at the picture and, as he leaves without kissing her, becomes suspicious and employs Detective Carter. The detective's wife is Grace Knowles and worked in Smith's cafe before her marriage. The detective follows Bard to the cafe, gets hold of the photograph and finds it is his wife. He overhears Bard telephone to Mrs. Carter and goes home and finds his wife out. He then goes to Bard's house and talks with Mrs. Bard through the window. The lawyer returns and fires a shot at the supposed burglar, but is suspicious.

Finally the detective and Mrs. Bard decide to have it out at Bard's office, but, finding he has gone to Smith's cafe, they follow. In the meantime Bard has sent for Mrs. Carter and she, while waiting for Bard to return from lunch, decides to pay a visit to her old employer, Smith. There she is introduced to Bard, and they have lunch together while he explains her case. In comes Mrs. Bard and the detective. Mrs. Bard accuses her husband of infidelity and he accuses her of intriguing with the burglar. Explanations follow and the party sit down to dinner at the expense of the newly-made heiress.

FRESH AIR (One Reel).—The cast: Jones (Tom McEvoy); Mrs. Jones (Paula Shay); the Bishop (Wm. Mandeville); Talbot Tubbs (Warren Cook); Mrs. Tubbs (Anna Athey); Jim Little (Herbert Roderick); Maggie Frye (Isabelle Daintry). Scenario by John C. Brownell.

Jones, being advised by his doctor to "sleep in the open," and having no sleeping porch, utilizes the front veranda, and when night comes Mrs. Jones tucks him in and leaves him. Next morning Mrs. Jones goes out early to feed the chickens and falls into a lengthy conversation with her neighbor. Jones wakes to find a crowd enjoying the unusual spectacle. He rushes to the front door, and finds it locked. The crowd grows. A small boy appears and "sics" his dog on Jones. Jones leaps off the veranda and flees, chased by the crowd.

Coming to the minister's house he seeks refuge there, finding the door open. The minister and his wife have just left the house Jones runs upstairs to the minister's bedroom, gets a suit of the minister's clothes and is about to make a getaway when a policeman and his intended bride appear. Jones, afraid to refuse, hunts up a prayer book and does the best he can to perform the ceremony. Jones kisses the bride, the cop hands him a fee, and Jones makes a second attempt to escape when an auto stops in front of the house and a bishop appears. Jones pretends to be a guest, tells him to make himself at home and beats it, only to run into the policeman who, with Mrs. Jones, is looking for the lost husband. The cop is frantic when he learns of the fake ceremony, but finding the bishop is a real minster, he jumps into an automobile, gets Maggie, and they are married by the bishop with Jones and his wife as witnesses.

JOKER.

OUT AGAIN, IN AGAIN (Rel. Week of Aug 15).—The cast: Prisoner No. 13 (Wm. Franey); Professor Quince (Harry Mann); Camille De Auverne (Eileen Roberts); Warden (Milburn Moranti). Scenario by Tom Gibson. Produced by Wm. Beaudine.

Prof. Quince tells the Warden of Happy Days Prison that he can restore life to the dead if he has a current of electricity strong enough. The Warden invites the professor to take his mummy from the museum and put it on the electric chair. It was Friday, the thirteenth, and Prisoner No. 13 was elected to be the guest of honor at his own execution. But he was superstitious, and determined to escape. This he did, and to avoid detection forced the porter of Prof. Quince's museum to change clothes with him. He is forced to take the porter's job because a policeman near precludes his chance of getting away.

The professor's daughter, Mamie, attracts the prisoner hugely, but he has little time for her on account of his efforts to keep the disrobed porter concealed.

While the Warden and the professor are discussing the matter, the prisoner, having disposed of the porter, comes back into the museum and discovers the Warden's presence. He tries to make his escape, but escape is cut off, and in desperaiton he hides in the mummy case, which, forthwith, is carried away by the Warden and the professor to the prison.

When No. 13 feels himself set down he makes immediate plans to beat it, but is dumbfounded to discover himself back in the chamber from which he had so recently escaped. Realizing that fate is agin' him, he decides to do the job himself, and sitting in the electric chair starts to adjust the harness preliminary to his demise. The near-sighted professor believes he is witnessing a miracle. Bill escapes, is pursued and finally caught when the Warden hands him a pardon. No. 13 is overjoyed, but it is short-lived for Camille arrives and has him again arrested for picking her purse, and back to jail he goes.

BACK TO THE KITCHEN (Rel. Week of Aug. 13). –The cast: Mrs. Halley (Gale Henry), Mr. Hally (Milton Sims); Husky Hector (Charles Haefli). Scenario by Tom Gibson. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Of the Halley family, Mrs. Halley comprises about nine-tenths. Her henpecked husband comprises the other tenth. In Husky Hector, pampered son of the Justice of the Peace, Mrs. Halley sees her ideal man. She slips off to keep a clandestine appointment with him. Hubby discovers it, and, in pleading with his wifie not to leave him, is thrown into the lake. His wife thinks he has been drowned, but Hubby, crawling out of the lake, meets a friend who takes him to go on a hunting trip.

Mrs. Halley, believing herself a widow, has no scruples about accepting the attentions of several suitors. One, a rival of Hector's, is the Mayor of the town. Bad blood develops between the rivals, with the Justice taking the part of his son, Hector. Hubby's insurance money is paid to the lonesome widow, and Hector at once offers his hand and heart, which Mrs. Halley accepts.

In the mountains, whither they have gone, Hubby and his friend find themselves deserted by their burro. They start to walk back to town. Much changed in both mind and body, Hubby arrives at home.

Like Enoch Arden of old, he looks in the window. There is his wife—his widow, as she thinks—dressed in bridal finery, and there at her feet kneels Hector. Shall he leave them alone? Ah, no! Revenge! Revenge! The footsteps of the parson approaching interrupt Mr. Halley's vengeful thought and quicken his resolve. Slipping in the back way he enters the sitting-room, and slips in back of the life-sized portrait of himself, which is the principal adornment of the fond widow's parlor. Taking out his jacknife, he deftly cuts out the face of the portrait and inserts his own as the bridal party lines up in front of the portrait. The widow's eyes turn to the portrait of her late husband. Instead of meeting the usual meek and submissive look of Halley, her eyes find the same features, but twisted into an expression of fiendish hatred. The wedding busts up in a hurry, and Mrs. Halley makes the best of her husband's return. But hubby is strangely changed in temperament. Instead of being one-tenth of the family combination he is nine-tenths, and orders Mrs. Halley back into the kitchen, and Mrs. Halley weakly obeys.

NESTOR.

THE RUSHIN' DANCERS (Rel. Week of Aug. 13).—The cast: Bud Billings (Eddie Lyons); Bill Sellers (Lee Moran); Daisy Davis, Bud's Sweetheart (Edith Roberts); Hiram Roomrent (Fred Gamble); Prof. Wiggle N. Squirm (Harry Nolan). Story by C. G. Bryden. Scenario by F. A. Palmer. Produced by L. W. Chaudet.

Prof. Wiggle N. Squirm has opened a dancing school for "women only" in Cactus Flat, and the men begin to realize that it is not only taking all their money to pay for the lessons, but that their wives are neglecting their husbands and homes. The men get together and decide to go down to the town hall and break up the class, but when they get there they lose their nerve and retire to the town pump to discuss the situation. They hit upon the idea of making up one of their number to imitate a lady dancing teacher and start a fake dancing school of their own to make the women of the village jealous.

They go to the hotel and the proprietor, Hiram Roomrent, remembers that he has a trunk that a theatrical troupe has left for a board bill. The trunk is opened, and a lot of costumes are found. Bill Sellers is picked out to put on the wig, corsets and dress and imitate the female dancing teacher. The others don various costumes for their dancing lessons, and all repair to a secluded spot, later taking pains to let the women know of the new "class." The women get together and plan to break up the "class" and run the "female teacher" out of town. Two of them ring the fire bell, calling the men to the fire hall, and the others capture Bill, who is now made up as Mlle. De Phoney. Just as he is in danger of being horsewhipped and tarred and feathered the men return and rescue him, and Prof. Wiggle N. Squirm is run out of town, leaving the inhabitants once more at peace with one another.

L-KO.

ROUGH STUFF (Two Parts—Rel. Week of Aug 13).—The cast: Mr. Doehound (Dan Russell); Mrs. Doehound (Eunice Murdock); Mr. Potash (Al Edmundson); His Wife (Gladys Varden); The Bell-Hop (Walter Stephens). Directed by Noel Smith. Director-General J. B Blystone.

Mrs. Doehound runs her hotel in her own peculiar way, with Mr. Doehound as a flirtatious helper. He is henpecked. On the 65th floor a scientist is working, and when an explosion occurs he telephones the proprietress. Mistaking his call for ice water, she sends a [illegible] bell-hop up to room 5,000, with orders "to walk."

Meanwhile, hubby is flirting with a fair female. She is put out by Mrs. Doehound only to return with the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Potash. Potash sells costly gowns to fair women, and Mrs. Potash is his model. She begins a flirtation with Doehound, while the scientist is almost cremated alive in room 5,000, the weary bell-hop climbing up the stairs with the now empty pitcher. Potash explains to Doehound that he wishes to stage a Fashion Show in his hotel, and asks Doehound to summon for it, as models, the handsomest females in town.

Doehound takes up the burden of his tasks. The day of the show dawns. A buyer and his watchful wife are present in the audience gathered in the hotel for the show, also the fierce fire-eating brother of the young woman who was put out of the place by Mrs. Doehound, and who has reported the occurrence to her brother, who has previously killed five or six men for just such omissions. Doehound grows jealous of the buyer who has the best peek at the models, and attempts to impersonate him. The bell-hop and the hotel proprietress see through the disguise and things begin to happen when the buyer's wife is tipped off. The scientist and the bell-hop, battling with flames in room 5,000, are mixed up in the ensuing melee, and the ambulances of two or three hospitals are called in to cart off the participants.

POWERS.

ALGERIA OLD AND NEW (Rel. Week of Aug. 13).—On the streets of Tlemcen, in the country where great wastes have been allowed to run wild, the Negrier Falls and nature's wonders in Algeria, the garb of the desert and its trimmings, the caravan, the walls of Mansoura, erected by Abou Yakoub, and still showing marvelous preservation; the Mansoura Ruins, Mansoura Tower, the cemetery, ancient olive groves and the high roads, together with the habitation of troglodytes, are among the most interesting of the effective views of this educational release. Close-ups of Negrier Falls and of the ancient olive groves, showing the trees carefully trimmed, all the outer ones trained to form a cup, thus admitting light and air to the fruit and facilitating the gathering of the crop, are included in the offering.

DOING HIS BIT (On the Same Reel as Foregoing).—"Boo-hoo, they won't let me join the army," Henry repined.

"It'll be the farmers' life for me," he decided. But the life of the farmer did not altogether agree with a hero who was disappointed when he did not get real eats or a real drink of cider, as he had been told was served on a farm. He chased a cow some fifty miles or so, forgot what he didn't ever know about milking, met a widow and a child, but, when it came to "raising" things, the only thing that he did raise was—what Sherman called war.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE GRAY GHOST (Episode 8, "The Double Floor" Two Parts Release Week of August 13).—When the smoke cleared away, Marco and the two detectives who had invaded Morn Light's apartment were covered with ten guns. The detectives were relieved of their shooting irons, and sat down to await developments. The crooks took Marco and put him on the back seat of a car, and with a crook on either side, put on all steam for the House of Mystery. Williams, in the apartment, forces one of the detectives to talk to Jerry Tryon over the phone, telling Jerry to come at once, as they have landed the Gray Ghost.

At the House of Mystery a man fights with the keeper, and the latter is thrown down a trap. Then the man breaks in the door of the room where Morn Light is held. Morn Light and the two men are struggling when Hildreth, hearing the girl's screams, appears and starts fighting with the man. Olmstead, being bound, succeeds in freeing himself, and adds his force with that of Hildreth against the man. But thinking he sees the ghost of the Gray Ghost, Olmstead collapses. Just after overcoming the man, Hildreth answers the phone, receiving the message that "everything is fixed for Hildreth." As Hildreth and Morn Light start to leave the Mysterious House, two bloodhounds dash toward them.

A new maid has come to Arabin's house, who is in league with the Gray Ghost. The butler is also a tool of the crooks, and Arabin is suspicious of both of them.

Jerry Tryon and his men arrive at the House of Mystery. In the room, Williams and the others, hearing the noise, switch out the lights, and when Jerry enters the room he finds only the three detectives, whom he begins to upbraid. They ransack the apartment, but find nothing. A detective is left to watch the place, and Jerry and the others leave.

While Hildreth's secretary, Marco, is being taken over a bridge by the crooks in the touring car, he overhears a bit of conversation which is important.

"The boss should be at Arabin's in about half an hour," said one of the crooks.

"Sure, twenty minutes I give him, and he'll be on time, too."

Watching his opportunity, Marco called the crooks' attention to something at the side of the road, and while they were thus busy, he jumped out of the car into the water thirty feet below. He manages to escape to the city and warns Jerry that the Gray Ghost is at Arabin's.

In the meantime the boss makes his call upon the jeweler, sending his card in by the butler. Arabin declines to see him, but the Gray Ghost walks in. "Mr. Arabin, I am the Gray Ghost. In looting your store the other day there were one or two little things tnat we missed. One of them was the pearl necklace. I believe it is worth about two million dollars, is it not? I refer to the one you made for Mr. Carlow of London. If it is all the same to you, I will trouble you for that now."

Arabin, although his suspicions had been vague, had prepared against eventualities. Backing over to a secretary, he opened the drawer and, pulling out a revolver, fired point-blank at the Gray Ghost.

THE BRASS GIRL (Two Parts—Release Week of Aug. 13).—The cast: Jane Brown (Jane Gail); Martin Stone (Matt Moore); Landlord (Frank Lyon). Written by Burk Symon. Produced by Matt Moore.

Jane and Martin are new tenants in the same apartment house. She occupies the first floor, and he lives on the floor above. Jane is a sculptress, and Martin is a musician. One day they meet for the first time in the hallway. He is impressed with her appearance, while she seems pleased with her new acquaintance.

Martin shows annoyance at the hammering that emanates from the apartment below, where Jane is instructing a class of six girls in the gentle art of punching brass, and Jane is by no means overjoyed in being compelled to listen to the vigorous piano playing that emanates from the apartment directly over hers.

Their habits differ radically. She retires early—he plays the piano into the small hours of the night, often accompanied by fellow artists who play the violin and other instruments. One night, despite Jane's repeated rapping, Martin and his musical crowd combine to make the night hideous to her. She, therefore, grasps her chisel and hammers furiously to which the noise-makers upstairs respond with the nerve-racking strains of the "Anvil Chorus."

The next day Jane sends for the landlord and gives notice that she is moving. Martin also notifies the landlord that he will seek new quarters at the end of the month. In the meantime, they approach a nervous state demanding medical attention. Their respective doctors advise them to sleep in the open air, and hence, unknown to each other, they rig up beds on their verandas.

One night a rain and wind storm comes up and blows their bed clothing to the lawn below. They hurry downstairs after their blankets Jane beats Martin to the street, grabs up all the bed-clothing in sight, and rushes back to the house. As Martin stands shivering in his wet pajamas by the radiator in his apartment, he hears screams from the apartment below. A burglar has entered Jane's rooms. Martin rushes down and struggles with the burglar Jane telephones to the police. The burglar is overcome.

The police arrive to find the intruder tied to a chair, Jane in her night dress and Martin in his pajamas. When the police captain asks Jane her name she is too embarrased to reply. Martin saves the day by informing the officers that the burglar has entered the apartment of Mr. and Mrs. Stone. Satisfied with the answer the police depart with their captive. They decide to stay—together in only one apartment - married.

GOLD SEAL.

A WIFE'S SUSPICIONS (Three Parts—Release Week of August 13).—The cast: Jack Bradford (Vaul Paul); Mary Carpenter (Betty Schade); Lila (Hazel Page); Tom Clancy (Lee Hill); Hugh Leghorn (Ed. Clark); Mrs. Von Berhoff (Florence Roberts). Scenario by Bess Meredyth. Produced by George Sargent.

In the social world, Jack Bradford was known as a broker. He had very little to do, and was able to devote the greater portion of his time to his wife and his little country place. In the underworld he was known as a leader of crooks, and one who went after big game only. As he was standing at the back door of his bungalow showing his young bride of three months the progress that the garden was making, two tough-looking characters came up and spoke to him. Without introducing them, Jack ushered his wife into the house, and said that he would be in in a moment. One of the men told Bradford that Tom and Lila Clancy are back from England. They were under such a close watch by the police, the man continued, that they could not turn a finger, and are now dead broke. Bradford was further informed that they wanted to make a big haul as soon as possible. Bradford gave the crooks the key to his house, and told them to come there tomorrow night at eight.

Around the front corner Hugh Leghorn, a detective, had watched the two crooks in their meeting with Bradford. He went to headquarters and reported to Von Berhoff that there was a big game afoot, and that Jack Bradford was the leader of the gang. He didn't notice the expression of amusement in Von Berhoff's face as he replied: "All right. Keep an eye on him."

A week later he tracked them to Von Berhoff's own house. He had seen, too, that Jack Bradford had had a misunderstanding with his wife owing to the fact that she had surprised a meeting in her house. Her husband being unable to give an explanation, she left him and returned to the Von Berhoff's, for whom she had formerly worked as governess.

On the night in question the Von Berhoffs were having a reception, and Von Berhoff was not at all surprised to find Bradford, Tom and Lila Clancy present. Right away Lila got sick, and when Mrs. Von Berhoff took her up to her room, the clever crook asked her if she would keep a necklace which she was afraid of losing, in the wall safe. In this way Lila got the combination of the safe. But before Bradford could climb through the window, his wife interrupted him, and Mrs. Von Berhoff held him up with a revolver.

After the fight was over, and Bradford himself had held up Clancy and the other thugs, flat-footed Hugh, the slow but honest detective, came into the room, and with his revolver turned on Bradford, shouted:

"At last I have you in my power. Throw up your hands."

Von Berhoff burst out laughing.

"Why, Hugh, what do you mean? This is one of our cleverest Secret Service operators. He has trapped this whole gang. Why hold him up?

Hugh was the most crestfallen of men, and Mrs. Bradford, in her relief in finding that her husband was a detective instead of the crook she supposed him to be, sank into his arms.

REEL LIFE NO. 68 (Aug. 16).—The whole country has been following with great interest the work of the men at the various training camps for officers. Recognizing that the new camps for the soldiers of the National Army will offer the same training, the Gaumont company has taken pictures of the work of the men training to be soldiers. These will be released through Mutual in "Reel Life" No. 68, August 15. Such work as getting ready for a bayonet charge, going through a barb-wire barricade, and charging with the bayonet are some of the preparations shown as the army is being whipped into shape for the "big push" next year. Hurdle jumping is a necessary course for soldiers. Being good ball players, our embryo soldiers take readily to bomb throwing, and just how they do it is shown in these pictures.

The Young Men's Christian Association has over 800,000 members in North America. Just what goes on within the walls of some of the larger institutions in our great cities is pictured in this issue of "Reel Life." For the pictures the Gaumont company chose the largest Y. M. C. A. building in the world, that at 55 Hansen Place, Brooklyn, N. Y., with a membership of over 7,000. The mental, moral, physical and spiritual needs of men and boys are systematically taken care of in a manner which lend themselves to pictures in an entertaining way. Perhaps the greatest interest centers about the athletic activities and the places of social relaxation.

There is also an animated drawing of a humorous nature called "The Absent-Minded Dentist," taken from "Life."

BEACH NUTS (Aug. 16).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Father (Harry DeRoy); Daughter (Claire Alexander); Count (George George). Written and produced by Milton H. Fahrney.

Jerry follows a beautiful girl into the park, but is interrupted in his avowals of love by a park policeman. Father and the Count arrive in time to see Jerry chased away, and they decide to take daughter to the beach. Jerry is "tipped off" as to the plans and is on the sands when father, daughter and the Count arrive. Jerry gets busy from the start, much to the annoyance of beach policemen and the utter disgust of father and his titled friend. Jerry has a fine time with a bevy of lovely girls and enjoys himself immensely when he secludes himself in their dressing room. When they discover him daughter shields Jerry from their pummeling, but everwatchful police make things warm for him. Jerry's best tact is applied to getting father and the Count into a fight with the police. Jerry then signals daughter to "beat it." They escape in an automobile stolen from a parking station, but they are pursued by father, the Count and a force of policemen. The chase comes to an end when Jerry drives his "flivver" into an automobile service station. A gasoline explosion, caused by the entrance of Jerry, blows him into jail.

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION.

BAB THE FIXER (Horkheimer—Five Parts—Aug. 13).—The cast: John Porter (Leslie T. Peacocke); Adelaide Porter (Mollie McConnell); Bab, their daughter (Jackie Saunders); Mrs. Drexel (Ruth Lackaye); Leroy Scott (R. Henry Grey).

John Porter, a wealthy broker of Wall street, has failed in business. With his wife and daughter, Bab, he buys a small ranch in the West, hoping to recoup his fortune in the cattle business.

Ten years go by and Bab has grown to young womanhood. Porter, however, finds himself still struggling for success. Bab is an expert with the rifle as well as a daring rider. Richard Sterling, formerly a New York broker's clerk, has become rich through shrewd dealing. He is in love with Bab and she with him. Adelaide Porter, Bab's mother, frowns on the affair. She wishes Bab to marry into society.

The water on Porter's place plays out. He drills for a flowing well. He strikes the flow, but it is oil—not water. The Porter's become enormously wealthy by the lucky strike.

Bab is sent to a finishing school. Mrs. Porter quarrels with her husband. They separate. When Bab returns from school she finds her mother in society, but her father is absent. Bab seeks her father out, and learns the truth. Bab lays her plans to bring about a reconciliation between her parents and succeeds. Then she and Sterling are married.

LA SALLE.

THE WIDOW'S MIGHT (Aug 14).—The widow tightfist lives in an apartment house, and is enviously watched by her neighbors, Dr. Vee Gates and wife, who hatch a scheme to marry her to Otto and go fifty-fifty with him on the money. Assisted by the widow's cook and the janitor all works out smoothly, but after the wedding the widow refuses to loosen up on the purse strings.

The doctor decides to have the janitor drop a brick on Otto, which will cause a dangerous malady, curable only by granting his every desire. Otto submits, but already sore at the bunch, takes advantage of the situation, not only to extract money from his unsuspecting wife, but to make love to the doctor's wife, and before the doctor can figure out if Otto's condition is real or feigned the plotters are all given a run for their money.

THE SQUAW MAN'S SON (Lasky—Five Parts—July 26).—The cast: Lord Effington, Hal Calthrop (Wallace Reid); Edith, Lady Effington (Dorothy Davenport); Wah-na-gi (Anita King); John McCloud (Donald Bowles); David Ladd (C. H. Geldert); Appah (Frank Lanning); Lord Kerhill (Ernest Joy); Lord Yester (Lucien Littlefield); Lady Stuckley (Mabel Van Buren); Storekeeper (Raymond Hatton).

Lord Effington, the little Hal of "The Squaw Man," has grown to be a young man and has left his estates and his wife in England and is chief of the Indian police on a western reservation. He has deserted his wife because she is addicted to the use of morphine. She has fallen in love with young Lord Yester. Hal is interested in the education of his people as is Wah-na-gi, a Carlisle graduate, who is teaching the agency school.

David Ladd, the Indian agent and also secret representative for the asphalt trust, has discovered asphalt on the reservation. Hal made the survey and knows the asphalt belongs to the Indians. Ladd and the Indian medicine man, as well as Hal, are in love with Wah-na-gi. Ladd gives Hal fifteen thousand dollars' worth of asphalt stock, but Hal exposes the plan to the Indians and for a time the trust is halted.

Hal is called back to England and leaves the stock with John McCloud, the agency missionary, to be turned over to the department of justice. McCloud is taken ill and is at the point of death when Appah comes in to steal Wah-na-gi. McCloud raises himself and kills the Indian. Hal is about to return when he discovers his wife is a morphine fiend and he decides to remain and care for her, although he has agreed to divorce her so that she can marry Lord Yester.

The department of justice persuades him to return and assist in the prosecution of the asphalt trust. He reaches the ranch on Xmas eve just in time to stop Ladd from stealing the stock from the dead missionary's effects. He tells Wah-na-gi of his love for her, but that he must go back to England. She goes out into the snow to kill herself by the grave of Nat-u-rich, Hal's Indian mother, who killed herself for his father. Hal receives a message that his wife has taken [illegible] of [illegible] and he is free to marry the Indian girl. He rushes through the snow and finds Wah-na-gi just in time to prevent her plunging a knife into her breast—and they are at last made happy.

THE CRYSTAL GAZER (Lasky—Five parts—July [illegible]).—The cast: Rose Jorgensen, Rose Keith and Norma Dugan (Fannie Ward); Ca[illegible] Calistro's wife (Winifred Greenwood); Dick Alden (Harrison [illegible]); Phil Mannering (Raymond Hatton); Mrs. Mannering (Edythe Chapman); Mrs. Dugan (Jane Wolff).

Rose Jorgensen, living in a squalid tenement house, hears that her husband is to be electrocuted for murder, and commits suicide, leaving two young daughters. One of the daughters, Rose, is adopted by Judge and Mrs. Keith and brought up in luxury. The other, Norma, is adopted by a neighbor and raised in the squalor of the tenements until she is engaged by Calistro, a charlatan hypnotist, to act as an hypnotic [illegible].

Phil Mannering, a young society man, is an associate of Calistro, and through his influence Calistro is made a society fad. Norma is known as the "White Orchid." Rose, Norma's sister, has been raised in luxury and is in love with Dick Alden, a young millionaire. Calistro, at a parlor exhibition, is astonished at the resemblance between Rose and Norma. He goes to their former home in the tenement and there finds the letter which shows that the two girls are the daughters of a murderer. He confronts Rose with this letter and demands money. Rose, realizing that she cannot marry Dick with this stain on her name renounces him and sails for Bermuda.

Dick is taken with Norma's resemblance to Rose and finally, out of pity, offers to marry her. Calistro has also fallen in love with Norma and one day makes advances to her which arouse the jealousy of his wife and she kills him. Norma is taken to the home of Mrs. Mannering, Phil Mannering's aunt, and there Rose finds them when she returns from her voyage. Dick explains to Rose that he has always loved her and this is overheard by Norma.

PARAMOUNT-BRAY PICTOGRAPHS (Issue No. 78—July 30).—This release contains material of the greatest appeal and interest. The main feature shows how the members of the New York police force are trained to their duties before they are entrusted with the duty of guarding the safety of the citizens of the greatest city. The course of training includes a thorough knowledge of the art of jiu jitsu that enables a comparatively weak person to overcome a much stronger one, methods of fire rescue, traffic regulation, the stopping of runaways, and a number of other interesting and often thrilling details that are everyday matters in the life of one of New York's "finest."

The same number of the Pictographs also contains another of the inimitable Sam Lloyd puzzles, and a series of interesting views of the scientific stock-breeding farm at the Purdue University, a subject of considerable interest at this time, when the conservation of food is one of the principal topics of the day.

WON IN A CABARET (July 30).—The cast: The Girl (Betty Compson); The Boy (Neal Burns); His Father (Harry Rattenberry); His Rival (Eddie Barry).

After another wild night, Neal is found in bed late the next morning by his father, who reads in the paper of a riot at the waiters' ball, caused by Neal. In anger the father cuts off his allowance, turns him out and advises him to hunt a job. Neal's sanctimonious rival, Eddie, also reads the item in the paper and rushes off to show it to Betty. Neal arrives on the scene in time to prevent the exposure of his shortcomings, and eventually secures a position as a waiter in the High Life Cafe.

In the afternoon Betty asks Neal to take her to the High Life, and he pleads a business engagement. That evening, however, Betty visits the cafe with Eddie and another couple, and the party are given seats at the luckless Neal's table. He disguises himself with a false moustache and takes their order, but later removes the moustache and joins the party, entirely crowding out Eddie. After enjoying an elaborate dinner and the cabaret entertainment, Neal withdraws, puts on his disguise and presents the staggering bill to Eddie.

Betty discovers that she has lost her purse, and the new waiter is suspected. He is brought face to face with Betty, and in an unlucky moment sneezes so hard that his moustache falls off. Eddie's joy at Neal's unmasking, however, is turned to sorrow when he perceives that Betty still prefers Neal.

FOX FILM CORP.

WRATH OF LOVE (Five Parts—Aug. 4).—The cast: Roma Winet (Virginia Pearson); Ethel Clarke (Louise Bate); Bob Lawson (Irving Cummings); Mrs. Lawson (Nellie Slattery); Dave Blake (Frank Glendon); Caddy (Johnny McCann).

Roma Winet is author of a famous novel, "Jealousy." Although suffering from that passion herself, she lives happily with Bob Lawson, whom she has just married. When war comes, she grows jealous of Ethel Clarke, once her dearest friend. Ethel has been left in Bob's care by Dave Blake, his chum, who leaves to enter his country's service.

Dave returns on a furlough from the front and goes at once to the home of Bob's mother, where Ethel is staying. While Dave is there Bob joins them, and warns Dave that spies are following him. Dave rushes from the house by a back passageway. The new arrival proves to be Roma, and her finding Bob and Ethel together drives her frantic with anger.

Jealousy at subsequent events makes life almost unbearable for her. She sees Bob go on mysterious missions to the rear of his estate, where Dave is hiding; then she sees Ethel go there, and later discovers her in conference with Bob in his office. Ethel has merely brought papers to him from Dave. Again Roma misunderstands, and upbraids Bob.

Her husband pleads with her to wait a short time for an explanation, but Roma is too indignant in her wrath to be reasonable. That evening a note is thrown through the open window to Bob, telling him to bring the papers to the houseboat immediately. Roma watches him go, and notices that Ethel accompanies him. Dave denies sending the note, and says that it was the work of spies. He determines to try escape. There is a hard battle with the pursuers, but Dave is successful in his flight.

Misunderstandings between Bob and Roma are brushed away, and the woman is at last freed from her one besetting fault.

A SOFT TENDERFOOT (Foxfilm Comedy—Two Parts—Aug 4).—The cast: The Tenderfoot (Tom Mix); His Uncle (Pat Chrisman); The Ward (Victoria Forde); The Villain (Sid Jordan); Negro Valet (Billy Mason). Directed by Tom Mix.

Tom Mix has the role of an eastern college youth who knows nothing of the wild life of a ranch, and very little of anything else. After he is graduated—the university eventually tires of the sight of him—he gets word from his uncle that the thing he, Tom, has long feared has come to pass: His uncle has found work for him.

This solicitous relative informs his nephew that if he manages his ranch for a stated time, and the ranch is still there at the end of the period set, the uncle will make him a present of the land. Tom determines to go West in real style, so he engages a valet and starts out.

Meantime, the superintendent on the ranch is attempting to gain possession of the property and also of the owner's ward. When Tom arrives in town and sees the ranch he decides that it is too good to lose. One look at the ward makes him reach the same conclusion in regard to her.

The superintendent believes that a speedy revelation of Tom's tenderfoot tendencies will soon cause him to take a dislike to the village. At his instigation the cowboys put Tom through a series of wild experiences, accompanied by a vast amount of gun-play, but the youth never hesitates—in his flight to get away from "those rough men." The uncle is disgusted with his nephew and drives him from him, but the pretty ward's pleas eventually make him relent.

The girl rides to tell Tom that all has been smoothed over. On her return journey with him the two are held up by Mexican bandits. Tom uses his fists to such good advantage that he routs the attacking band and redeems himself in the eyes of the girl and the uncle.

war is declared. When Robert reads the announcement that single men will be called first, he insists on being married at once. Margaret does not know the reason for his change of heart, and consents.

Margaret comes from a line of patriots, and when she and Robert return from their honeymoon she at once plunges into the work of recruiting. Much to her husband's disgust, she insists that he accompany her on these excursions. While she addresses the crowds, he sits back in the limousine, bored with all these demonstrations. Margaret recalls to her hearers the brave deeds done by their ancestors, and calls on them to be worthy of such nobility. She wins many recruits.

A musicale is given. George Wallace, who has enlisted in the navy, attends in his uniform, and is reprimanded by his brother for doing so. John Harding, in an officer's uniform, resents the remark, saying there is no difference in the patriotism of an officer and a private. He calls attention to the fact that Robert is not in uniform, and Robert admits that he married to escape service. Margaret overhears his admission.

She sends for Harding to consult him as to how her husband's patriotism can be aroused. Her husband, seeing them together, accuses her of having met him by appointment. Then Margaret pours forth the vials of her wrath and indignation, telling him how despicable she considers him.

All night long he ponders over her words. In the morning she sees some children playing. A tiny girl is waving an American flag. A big boy takes it away from her, and George Wallace comes out and makes him give it back. Then a drunken German, incensed at the sight of the flag, knocks George down. Robert has been watching the scene, and his sense of justice is at last awakened. He vanquishes the German and makes him salute the flag before he returns it to the little girl. Then, bidding good-bye to his wife, he goes to enlist in the service of the flag for which he has just won his first fight.

Letters from camp give further testimony of Robert's sincerity. He comes home on brief leave of absence, prior to sailing for France. The whole town comes out to greet the "Wallace boys," soldier and sailor. Smiling through her tears, the young wife bids him farewell, guarding a precious secret. He will need all his courage at the front.

MISS ROBINSON CRUSOE (Rolfe Photoplays Inc.—Five Parts—July 30).—The cast: Pamela Sayre (Emmy Wehlen); Bertie Holden (Walter C. Miller); Charles Van Gordon (Harold Entwhistle); Aunt Agatha (Sue Balfour); Aunt Eloise (Margaret Seddon); Bertini (Augustus Phillips); Van Hoffman (Daniel Jarrett). Directed by William Christy Cabanne.

Pamela Sayre, the pampered darling of New York's most exclusive society, longs for a romance with the cave-man type of person. The most ardent admirer of this young lady is Bertie Holden, worthless son of wealthy parents. Pamela's parents are dead, and she lives with two maiden aunts, Aunt Agatha and Aunt Eloise. The former is a lover of show and society, the latter is very quiet.

Charles Van Gordon, head of the Wall street firm of Van Gordon and Van Gordon, is a gay old flirt, and is attracted by the youth and beauty of Pamela. Van Gordon visits the two aunts. Pamela receives him warmly, hoping thus to arouse the jealousy of Bertie Holden and make him do something worth while.

Bertini and Van Hoffman, two intriguers in the employ of a foreign government, present themselves at the home of the two aunts with letters of introduction from Europe. Aunt Agatha is overjoyed, but Aunt Eloise looks upon the foreigners with some misgivings. The two foreigners are overjoyed when they learn that Van Gordon, recently made a member of the Government's war board, is there, for it is from them that they hope to steal certain plans valuable to their cause.

At a musical given at the home of the maiden aunts, Bertie makes a proposal of marriage to Pamela, who refuses him. She loves him, however, but her ideal man is a strong man physically. Van Gordon believes that Pamela cares for him. He is an adept in the art of love making, and manages to get Pamela to accept him.

Bertie is heartbroken. He confides in Aunt Eloise, telling her of his love for Pamela. He decides to go to the Thousand Islands to forget it all. He gives Aunt Eloise his address. Pamela pays much attention to young men in the party, and Van Gordon becomes nervous. He suggests a trip, and calls upon Aunt Eloise, who craftily looks at Bertie's address in the Thousand Islands, and then suggests that they all go there for a rest.

Much to the surprise of Pamela, Bertie meets them at the dock. She still loves Bertie, and attempts in every way to awaken in him the knowledge of his strength. She admires the baggage smashers and longshoremen for their strength, but Bertie seems unable to take the tip. That evening there is a costume ball at the country club. Bertie purchases a longshoreman's clothes, hires a motorboat, and kidnaps Pamela. He rushes her to the boat. She remonstrates with him, but he forces her to do as he wishes. He stalls the motor within a stone's throw of a little island. Bertie carries Pamela ashore. They locate a cabin, and he makes her go inside. He sleeps outside. The next morning he forces her to cook breakfast. Inwardly she realizes that he has awakened and loves him for it. Outwardly she berates him.

A searching party sent out to find Pamela. Bertie steals back to Aunt Eloise and tells her that Pamela is well and safe, and wants some other clothes. While he is away the owners of the cabin return. Pamela is attacked, and Bertie arrives in time to rescue her, only to be in turn attacked by a superior force. By a ruse arranged between Pamela and Bertie, the former escapes. She goes for aid, and has the entire party arrested. She swears that Bertie is the leader of the band of ruffians, who prove to be foreign agents seeking to steal from Van Gordon the plans he has of the Government. Bertie is taken to jail with the others, but Pamela's heart gets the better of her, and she tells the truth. Van Gordon realizes that age and youth will not be happy together, that Bertie saved his life, and he gives up Pamela, who finds happiness and love in the arms of the man who has demonstrated his right to be the monarch of all he surveys.

BUTTERFLY.

MIDNIGHT MAN (Five Parts—Aug. 13).—The cast: Bob Moore (Jack Mulhall); Irene Hardin (Ann Kroman); The "Eel" (Al. McQuarrie); Molly (Ward Lamont); Mr. Moore (Hal Wilson); John Hardin, Irene's Father (Wilbur Higby). Story by Bess Meredyth. Scenario by Tom Gibson. Produced by Elmer Clifton.

Bob Moore worked night after night in the laboratory of his father's factory trying to invent a safe which could not be opened. For this reason he objects to having his father consolidate with John Hardin, who also makes safes. Bob says anyone can open Hardin's safe. Hardin tells Bob if he can open the safe in his library, he can have anything he has. Hardin urges his daughter, Irene, not to have anything further to do with young Moore. Irene, however, continues to call for Bob at the factory and Bob continues to call at the Hardin home, where he stays until he is put out.

One night when Bob returns home he finds "The Eel," or John Rehan, who has the most sensitive fingers that ever twirled a safe knob, ramsacking the safe which Bob has been telling himself cannot be opened. "The Eel," however, makes his getaway. Bob is determined to find the man again, for he realizes that he knows more about safes than he or his father, and with the help of a detective and his stool-pigeon, he finds "The Eel" at Molly Murta's apartment. "The Eel" has promised Molly to go straight. She loves him and is only too glad when Bob offers "The Eel" a job in the factory.

Hardin buys an expensive necklace for Irene's birthday gift. The purchase is witnessed by a henchman of "The Eel." Irene wears the necklace to the factory, where both Bob and his helper see it. "The Eel" is tempted, but refrains. However, later, when the henchman tells him of the jewelry, "The Eel" determines to get the necklace. He is just beginning to open the safe, when Bob climbs through the window. He told Irene's father he can open his safe. The "Eel" watches Bob tamper with the safe. Finally it is opened and, hanging the necklace on the knob, the safe closed, Bob disappears through the window and telephones Irene to look on the knob of the safe for proof that he opened it. "The Eel" meanwhile has taken the jewel away, and Bob receives word that the necklace has disappeared. Bob, knowing that there is only one other man who could have opened the same, starts for the cafe where "The Eel" and his bunch hang out. "The Eel" hurries to Molly to have her hide the necklace.

Bob has just arrived at the cafe, where he finds "The Eel," and has demanded the necklace, when the police raid the place, and, after a fight, Bob pulls "The Eel" out with him and they escape to Molly s flat. When the police knock at the door, Bob has already obtained the necklace, and tells the officers that he came to see Mr. Rehan about some work. The police leave after apologizing, and "The Eel consents to go back to work.

Bob enters the Hardin home through the window and hands the necklace to Irene. Hardin is astonished and stammeringly tells the detectives that it was all just a little joke. They leave in disgust and Bob tells Hardin that, having opened tne safe, he will now take the best he, Hardin, has. He puts his arms about Irene, Hardin is speechless; Moore, who is present, laughs uproariously.

"Now go ahead with your consolidation," says Bob to the two fathers.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

THE SECOND MRS. TANQUERAY (Five Parts—Aug. 6).—The cast: Aubrey Tanqueray (Sir George Alexander); Paula (Miss Hilda Moore)..

The story tells of the first Mrs. Tanqueray, an austere woman, who brings unhappiness to her husband by insisting that their only child be sent to a convent. His loneliness is increased by her death, shortly after which "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" comes into his life. Tanqueray is fully aware that she has a past, but gives their mutual infatuation full swing, and when her husband divorces her, defies convention by announcing their engagement.

On the Tanqueray country estate begins the bride's battle against her past. The quiet life is irksome, her husband's friends uncongenial, and her husband constantly strives to wean her away from her former associates. There are stormy scenes, and breaks narrowly averted. And in the midst of this comes the daughter, grown to young womanhood, and drawn from the convent by what she feels is her duty to her lonely father, as she believes him.

The girl's attitude toward her stepmother is cold, yet the woman always tries to win her love. Over her protest, the girl goes to Paris on a visit, and the wife, against the wishes of her husband, invites a married pair to visit them, two of her "old set.' Their indolence and indifference to everything excepting their own petty existences disgust "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," and while she now realizes she loathes her old friends and the old life, she also realizes she can never fit into the new.

In a fit of pique she withholds letters to Tanqueray from his daughter, telling him of her engagement to an army officer. She admits this to him and, pleading another chance, he forgives her. The daughter and her soldier fiance, former lover of "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," arrive at the Tanqueray estate. Not until the two meet does either know the identity of the other. The daughter in a flash divines it all and she turns on the older woman a torrent of resentment and recrimination, dragging up her past and impugning her motive in marrying her father. "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," throwing the girl to the floor and declaring she will apologize for her statements, goes to her husband and tells him all.

Tanqueray, tortured beyond power to reason, is seeking the advice of his closest men friends, while above in her room the daughter is seeking relief and guidance in prayer. In a spirit of charity and forgiveness she descends to the room of "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray." But to the woman with the past there could be no refuge in prayer, only in death, and the girl finds her dead by her own hand.

THE CLEAN UP (Five Parts—Aug. 6).—The cast: Stuart Adams (Franklyn Farnum); Hazel Richards (Brownie Vernon); Mrs. Richards (Mary Talbot); Miss Richards (Martha Mattox); James Richards (Mark Fenton); Vera Vincent (Claire McDowell); Wilbur McBean (William Human); Joe Byers (Clyde Benson); Ed. Linder (Albert McQuarrie). Scenario written by Waldemar Young. Directed by William Worthington.

The city of Weston was divided into factions on the question of social reform when announcement was made that "The Girl and the Garter" would appear at the opera house James Richards, head of the Purity League, declared that the show should not be allowed to give any performances, for the reason that he had witnessed the entertainment in New York attending for the purpose of seeing 'just how shocking it was." Having decided it was indeed shocking, Richards decreed that the people of Weston should not see the show.

Stuart Adams, advance agent for 'The Girl and the Garter," claimed Weston as his home town. To complicate matters Adams and Hazel Richards, daughter of the leader of the Purity League, had been sweethearts since childhood. Richards objected to their marriage, when they reached maturity, because Adams was in the show business. When Adams arrived in Weston in advance of "The Girl and the Garter," he found awaiting him a wire from the manager in effect that business was so bad that the show would be compelled to disband unless Adams managed to "start something" to boom business in Weston.

The agent of "The Girl and the Garter" busied himself so earnestly in "starting something" that he was in town several hours before he found time to even call Hazel Richards on the phone. When he did, the girl's aunt intercepted the message and, in fostering the Richards' family objection to Adams, failed deliberately to tell Hazel of the incident. Later, when Hazel was driving through the business center of the town, Adams spied her car. He jumped aboard and gave the girl a kiss that startled the Purity League into spasms of indignation.

Hurriedly explaining matters to Hazel, Adams was able to persuade her to carry in her car a transparency advertising "The Girl and the Garter," and follow the Reform League parade that was passing through the streets that afternoon. Incidentally Adams "started something" when he interviewed Richards for the local paper—a sheet that was leading the opposition movement for Personal Liberty.

"The Girl and the Garter" was getting some great advertising. The line of ticket purchasers at the opera house box office was long and increasing every moment. That night there was to be a public rally, led by the Reform League, and Adams challenged Richards to a public debate. The immense crowd that assembled was electrified by the spirited argument Adams advanced, and was then stunned when Adams declared that his ideas of fairness demanded that one side or the other must make a tremendous sacrifice.

On his own behalf he voluntarily cancelled the engagement of his company and declared that "The Girl and the Garter" would abandon its proposed performance in Weston. Richards, moved to heights of public sacrifice, declared that he would withdraw his objection—that "The Girl and the Garter" would be permitted to fulfill its engagement. Adams, foxy fellow, carried in his pocket a telegram from his manager, received only an hour before the public meeting, stating that the show had closed and its players had returned to New York.

As a result of the debate, Richards insisted that Adams should go home with him to dine. The showman was nonplussed—for he was expecting Hazel Richards to be at the railroad station, awaiting his arrival, that they might elope and be married. But Hazel's aunt had

THE LITTLE CHEVALIER (Program No. 5—Aug. 11).— The cast: Henri Valdeterre (Ray McKee), Delaup (Richard Tucker), the Little Chevalier (Shirley Mason); Diane de la Roche (Shirley Mason).

A duel between Chevalier de la Roche and Vicomte de Valdeterre, resulting in the death of the latter, is the cause of eighteen years of animosity between these two families, the climax of which is reached when Valdeterre's son, now a full grown man, plans to avenge his father's death and arranges a duel with the only living descendant of the Roche family—Valcour de la Roche, known as "The Little Chevalier." Vicomte de Valdeterre is startled when a golden-haired youth greets him—all ready for the duel. During the duel, "The Little Chevalier" proves himself a much better swordsman than his opponent anticipated, and under the strain the Vicomte faints. When he regains consciousness he leaves the estate.

A ball is given at the Governor's castle and the ceremony of the King Cake, an ancient French tradition, takes place. A bean is hidden in the cake and the lucky lady who gets the bean is allowed to choose her companion king for the evening. Valdeterre, Diane, beautiful daughter of the late Chevalier, and Philippe Delaupe, an ardent suitor of Diane's, secretary to the Governor and known as a trouble-maker, are among the guests.

Diane's cake contains the lucky bean. She accidentally drops it and the Vicomte picks it up. As he offers it to her she tells him he may retain the bean, thus consecrating him her king. During the evening Valdeterre and Diane become acquainted. All goes well until Valdeterre learns that the charming young lady is of the Roche family. This causes Valdeterre to affect a cold attitude, whereupon Diane leaves with Delaup in haughty fashion.

Valdeterre realizes that he is in love with Diane and when he is presented with an order from the King, giving him power to seize the Roche property, which their father obtained unlawfully, he refuses to exert his prerogative.

At a public game Valdeterre, Delaup and Diane are once more brought together. A game requiring marksmanship is played. Valdeterre, because of his over-anxiety to win, fails to display his usual skill and as a result Delaup carries off all the honors. As Valdeterre goes away, Diane follows and stops him, saying: "If your father died by the hand of mine, my father died because of yours in exile. I, at least, have never harmed you. Why do you hate me?" As the Vicomte is about to answer Diane, Delaup calls Diane back to the game. Delaup takes this opportunity to warn Diane against Vicomte de Valdeterre, saying he knows something which he does not care to disclose.

While at home Valdeterre accidentally finds a marriage contract between himself and Diane written by their respective parents in their days of friendship. The contract mentions that "if any difference should arise between the two houses of Valdeterre and La Roche, it will in no way affect the contract. That night Valdeterre rushes joyously to Diane with the news and in answer to his proposal she says: "People say things in the moonlight which they regret after. . . . I shall answer you in the morning . . . if you are still of the same mind," and adds, "If Monsieur Delaup had not warned me, I might answer, but. . . ."

Valdeterre repairs to Delaup's room and finds him engaged in opening letters not belonging to him. He makes Delaup resign his position as secretary to the Governor. Delaup endeavors to force Diane into marrying him, saying that soon she may find herself without a home and shows her the letter to Valdeterre from the King, renewing Valdeterre's claim on the Roche estate. Diane sends a message for Valdeterre.

Valdeterre arrives and, on entering the Roche estate, hesitatingly picks up his sword, expecting to meet Valcour, "The Little Chevalier," but then deliberately puts the sword down again and says no matter what the Chevalier thinks of him he will not fight.

"The Little Chevalier" approaches and greets Valdeterre with the words: "Are you afraid to fight?" Valdeterre replies, looking down: "Monsieur le Chevalier, I refuse to cross swords with you—think of me what you will." A sobbing note is evident in "The Little Chevalier's" voice when he replies and Valdeterre quickly looks up to be confronted by the presence of Diane, who has quickly removed her long boy's cloak and reveals her true self. "The Little Chevalier" is a myth, a disguise adopted by Diane to defend the honor of her family.

Valdeterre clasps Diane in his arms and the two are happily united.

GUN SMOKE EVERYWHERE

But Not a Whiff of Tobacco Smoke to Cheer a Soldier Up

Our soldiers in France and our sailors in the war zone need tobacco and cigarettes. Besides facing the foe, they must face homesickness, loneliness, dreary hours in the trenches, or uncomfortable days in torpedo-boat destroyers.

Tobacco cheers them; home and friends loom up in the fragrant smoke; they can fight the devil after a smoke.

Twenty-five cents sends a 45-cent package of tobacco—enough to fill the needs of a soldier or sailor for a week. A dollar a month will supply a soldier for the duration of the war.

If possible, a post card receipt will be sent by the soldier or sailor receiving the tobacco to its donor—a splendid war souvenir. Here is your chance to do something for the men who are defending your home and loved ones. This movement is endorsed by the Army and Navy Departments.

SOLDIERS OF THE SEA (On Program No. 5—Aug. 11).—This picture depicts life in the U. S. Marine Corps. The scenes carry us through the various branches and phases of the daily jobs of a U. S. Marine. We see them in their barracks, at sea, and on the field of battle. We see them hard at play engaged in games of football, baseball and "Chinese boxing." Then comes the call to "business," and they embark on a man o' war bound for "somewhere." Close views are shown of gun practice and drills intended to keep them in perfect condition. Finally they land, and the various tasks which they perform on the water and on land, as cavalrymen, artillerymen and infantrymen are clearly pictured.

BIRDS OF A FAR-OFF SEA (On Program No. 5—Aug. 11).—On a desolate rock, only three hundreds yards square, off the southern tip of South Africa, there live almost half a million strange unusual birds, of different species with a code of unusual laws and strict observance of caste. The black cormorants, little known outside of Malagas Island. Between them and the white solan geese, a strict "color line" is drawn. In the silence of the African night and the splendor of the moon, each cormorant and each solai hies to the clan crevice in the rocks and pays a wordless graceful courtship to his mate. The strangest birds on the island, however, are the penguins. They cannot fly, but their wings help them in diving. The eggs of the penguin are a great delicacy and thousands are sent to the London market every year.

A VANISHING RACE (On Program 5—Aug. 11).—In the early years of the nineteenth century the Blackfoot Indians were possessors of a great empire. Now the survivors of the race live on a reservation. Chief Three Bears, who still owns many scalps which he took from the white men, is shown preparing to lead his tribe away to pitch camp in another part of the reservation. Mrs. Dog Ears, the chiefess, starts to break camp. She pulls up stakes, packs the tepee, lifts the family stove and the grand piano while the good chief, still adhering to the traditions of his race, smokes his pipe in meditation. Finally the tribe starts out and the camera watches them as they cross the hills of Northwestern Montana, ford whirling streams and rivers, and finally set up a new camp.

GOLD AND DIAMOND MINES OF SOUTH AFRICA (On Program No. 5—Aug. 11)—This picture shows scenes of the processes used in extracting gold and diamonds from what appears to be ordinary mud. In the Joch Mine, one of the richest in the world, the miners have to descend to a level of three thousand feet below the surface of the earth. Kimberley is the center of the world's largest diamond mines and the offices of the company controlling the diamond mines in the Transvaal look like a Saratoga hotel. Many close views are shown of the famous Premier Mine where the great Cullinan diamond, weighing one and three-quarter pounds, was found. Extracting diamonds from the "blue earth" in which they are imbedded, is pictured. This "blue earth" is brought to the surface and allowed to "weather" for a year. It is then dissolved into diamond mud, which is placed in a "pulsator" and the diamonds separated. A single day's output of diamonds is worth $55,000. The mine property is surrounded by an impenetrable barbed wire fence and the natives are confined in a compound during their period of service.

THE DINOSAUR AND BABOON (On Program No. 5—Aug. 11). This "tragedy" of prehistoric days is a clever manikin play by Willis H. O'Brien. The figures are perfectly built, have a corresponding joint for every joint in the human body, and in appearance are life-like.

The Duke discovers that his hated rival, Stonejaw Steve, has also come to call upon his beloved Miss Rockface. In the midst of a thrilling argument between the rivals, our unassuming hero, Theophilus Ivoryhead, arrives at the lady's cave. Meanwhile, Wild Willie, the missing link and the terror of the countryside, is hovering near. Miss Rockface sends her admirers off to hunt for delicacies for the family board, and all set out bent on bringing home the prize.

In a series of arrow sharpshooting feats the hated rivals miss everything they aim for, but succeed in ruffling the spirits of a prehistoric wild bird. With infallible aim he succeeds in planting his 17 centimeter foot in the midrifts of the gentlemen and quickly puts them to route. Wild Willie, in the meanwhile, has gone to his favorite drinking hole to quench his thirst. A Dinosaur comes along. The Dinosaur is some "battler," and Wild Willie meets his Waterloo and is sent on his way to baboon heaven. Our hero comes upon the body of Wild Willie as the party, accompanied by Miss Rock-to every exhibitor in the country, a service that satisfies, a service that really helps the exhibitor to make a proper selection of pictures for his show, tells him how to advertise his house and how to properly supervise projection, is the big aim of the Moving Picture World.

The selling of advertising space is not paramount. We believe only those that are pictures morally clean should be exhibited. We do not intend to open our advertising columns at any time for the exploitation of pictures depicting immorality or crime primarily. We have consistently refused advertising of this class, advertising which would have netted us thousands of dollars. Noticing its absence in our pages, exhibitors of the better class throughout the country have complimented us for our stand in trying to purge the screen. The Moving Picture World is the only exhibitor's paper in the industry which has absolutely closed its advertising pages to pictures of this sort, because it considers first the permanent welfare of the industry.

We are now and have been for years giving the exhibitors of the country the best trade paper service to be had.

That the exhibitors of the country are taking our weekly service, is evidenced by the fact that the circulation of the Moving Picture World is thousands greater than that of any other paper in the industry.

The unequaled circulation of the "World" has brought to us the unsolicited support of advertisers who patronize a publication for its policy, principles and merits. We repeatedly hear from advertisers advising that money spent for advertising in the Moving Picture World is their most profitable investment.

face, appears in the distance. With dignity our hero places his foot upon Willie, in the attitude of conqueror. How can a fair prehistoric maid resist such feats of undaunted heroism? Thus our hero and she live happily ever after.

K-E-S-E.

A DOG IN THE MANGER (Selig—Two Parts—Aug. 6).—The cast: A. Jackson Bright (William Forbes); Colin Early, his partner (James Harris); Gay Somers (Amy Dennis); Boniface Somers (Edgar Murray Sr.); Mr. Grump (Fred Eckart); A Tough Customer (James West). Written by Charles Hoy. Directed by J. A. Richmond.

A. Jackson Bright, an inventor, and Colin Early, his partner, come to grief when their bogus sausage machine goes to pieces and they only escape from pursuing policemen by a very close margin. The two arrive at a hotel where all the employees have gone on a strike, and they are put to work by Boniface Somers, the landlord. Both of the workers fall in love with Gay Somers, the landlord's daughter.

Because of the scarcity of labor, Bright and Early act as elevator boys, chefs, waiters, clerks, etc. One even undertakes to shave a guest at the hotel with dire results when the barber's attention is attracted elsewhere.

Mr. Grump, the star boarder, has the gout and his ailment is not at all relieved when the hotel workers wait upon him. He demands to be taken again to his room, but he becomes involved in a row and, seated in his invalid chair, he rides out of the hotel and down the walk.

Boniface Somers, seeing his star boarder leave, instructs Bright and Early to give chase, and they do so, accompanied by the hotel proprietor's daughter. Grump's chair never stops until it plunges into the lake. Bright and Early dive in after the star boarder and none of the three ever appear again on the surface.

THE LITTLE WHITE GIRL (One of the "Do Children Count?"—Two Parts—Aug. 8).—The cast: Gyp (Mary McAlister); Captain Shay (John Cossar); Anna (Mabel Bardine).

Gyp, an orphaned child, wins the heart of Captain Shay, crusty old recluse. She recalls to him his daughter, Anna, whom he turned out of house years before. Ever since he has regretted his deed. To make the child happy he spends money liberally. Through a trick of fate, Gyp's dress-maker turns out to be the missing Anna, and is recognized by the Captain when he accompanies the child to the shop. Tracing Gyp's origin through the orphan asylum, they discover that she is Anna's daughter whom the woman abandoned when she faced starvation. Thus the three are reunited in happiness.

THE BRIDGE OF FANCY (A number of "Do Children Count?"—Two Parts—Aug. 15).—The cast: Esther (Mary McAlister); Captain Jingle (Jack Paul); Count Espanol (Ellis Paul).

Her mother's talk of a brilliant social event brings a dream to her little daughter, Esther. She, too, is a beautiful lady, courted by Captain Jingle of the American boy scouts, and Count Espanol, who claims a Spanish title. She loves the captain, but the lure of a title predominates. The two suitors fight a duel in which the captain is triumphant, but this does not alter Esther's decision. There is a brilliant banquet at which the engagement is to be announced. All the society of the nation is present. Just as Esther's father is arising to announce her betrothal to the count, Captain Jingle rushes in and causes the count's arrest as an imposter. The attendant hubbub causes Esther to awake, screaming for her mother.

WORLD PICTURES.

SOULS ADRIFT (Five Parts—Aug. 13).—The cast: Elma Raybourne (Ethel Clayton); Micah Steele (Milton Sills); Mabberly Todd (John Davidson); Ambrose Raybourne (Frank de Vernon); Swede sailor (Walter James).

The yacht "Palma," owned by Ambrose Raybourne, a millionaire shipbuilder, steams from Honolulu. The guests have wined, dined and sung. Among them is Elma Raybourne, daughter of the shipbuilder. Mabberly Todd toasts Elma as his future wife. Annoyed by his toast, Elma seeks the cool air of the deck. From the engine room comes Micah Steele, second engineer of the "Palma." Todd reels drunkenly toward her, but Micah sends him off. A few moments later there is an explosion. Micah manages to get Elma and two natives into a lifeboat, together with a jug of water. The yacht sinks.

The next morning finds the two natives rowing, Micah covering them with a revolver. A fishing boat picks up the dead bodies of several guests of the "Palma," together with the unconscious Raybourne. Regaining consciousness, he looks at the dead, but his daughter is not among them. He believes she went down with the yacht. During the afternoon one of the natives in the lifeboat becomes threatening and Micah shoots. The body falls overboard. The following dawn the second native goes insane and leaps out of the boat. Micah rowing, Elma has gotten possession of the revolver and the water. When he asks for a drink, she threatens to shoot if he touches it. She does not know that for thirty-six hours Micah had only pretended to drink his share of the water. He falls unconscious. With the morning come sea gulls, indicating land. Elma wakes Micah, telling him to drink as deeply as he likes. The land proves to be an uninhabited island. They find a leafy hut. Elma rests while Micah goes in search of food.

At dusk, on the other side of the island, two pearl thieves come to hide their loot on the hill and depart. In a hotel room, Ambrose Raybourne breathes his last, moaning for Elma. One morning Elma becomes hysterical. Fearing his strength, she asks whether her defenselessness makes no difference to his sense of honor, and he tells her that honor in a white man does not depend on lack of opportunity. He prophesies that some day she is going to apologize to him for the slur on his honor. He asks whether she has forgotten that she once loved him, but she says that the past is dead. He assures her it is alive and always has been, and tells the reason why.

When a young engineer, he interested her father in his invention. Raybourne was then a small shipbuilder, but in Micah's invention he saw a fortune. He planned to get the invention, and to further his schemes, he threw Micah and Elma together a great deal. He won Micah's confidence, stole the secret of his invention, and then compelled Elma to discard Micah in favor of Mabberly Todd. It made Raybourne a master shipbuilder and gave Elma a place in society, while Micah sank down and down, until, in a saloon, he overheard the engineer of the "Palma" speak of a trip around the world to be made by Ambrose Raybourne in his yacht. He accepted a position as second engineer, intending that it should bring him closer to his revenge on Ambrose Raybourne. Then Micah adds that as her father had cheated him of his brain child and his fortune, this was his chance to cheat Raybourne of his daughter. Elma levels the revolver, but, with a challenge to do the only thing her father had been afraid to do—kill him—he bares his breast. She flings the weapon into the sea.

A week passes, and the only knowledge Elma has that Micah is close to her, are the provisions he heaps before her hut. One day he brings her three pearls in a large leaf. He says he found them hidden and believes those who hid them did not come by them honestly. He adds that he will be on his guard against their return, for such men are dangerous. Finding their booty gone, the pearl thieves see Elma on the beach and make for her. Micah comes to her aid. A struggle ensues and one man is hurled down a precipice, while the other is stabbed to death. Elma, seeing this from a distance, comes up to Micah. She denounces him, saying he valued pearls more than human life, she believing that the fight was for the possession of the pearls. He tells her that he valued one pearl more than the lives of two men—for they had seen her. She realizes the truth.

In the early dawn the pearl thief who had fallen down the precipice regains consciousness and, with a brand, sets fire to the leafy hut. Micah and Elma escape. The lighted hut proves a beacon to a fishing schooner that is far out, and it steams inland. Micah says she must return alone—the world must never know that they were on the island together. But, putting her arm around Micah, Elma tells him she loves him and will face the world and its story in just that position—her arm about him.

They were doomed to disappointment, however, as Mrs. Magie was taken seriously ill and sent to the hospital, leaving nothing for Janet except prospects for the poorhouse. The little girl determined to escape this fate. With Peter she ran away to join the circus in a nearby town. The proprietor of the outfit takes a peculiar interest in the young runaway, and through this interest a surprising climax of happiness is achieved.

SUDDEN JIM (Five Parts—July 2).—The cast: James Ashe, Jr. (Charles Ray); Judge Zanaan Frame (Joseph J. Dowling); Marie Ducharme (Sylvia Bremer); Widow Stickney (Lydia Knott); Steve Gilders (William Bellingford); Michael Moran (Frank Whitson); The Kid (George Stone).

Jim Ashe, the son of a wealthy clothes pin manufacturer, is told by his father that he can have his choice of fifty thousand dollars or the clothes pin business. He takes the business and starts for the factory in a small lumbering town in Michigan. The first thing he does is to fire the grafting foreman, and from the speed with which he does it he earns the nick-name of "Sudden Jim." The modern methods of Jim threaten the failure of the clothes pin trust in which Moran is heavily interested; and Moran does everything he can to interfere with the young man's success.

Finally Moran uses his influence on the company that supplies the raw material to Jim's factory, and refuses to give him trains to carry the timber. Things look bad for Jim until he discovers a clause in the contract which gives him authority to put his own crew at work at the hardwood plant and operate the trains. The action which follows, involving a school teacher, with whom Jim is in love, a tremendous fight, a blown-up railroad trestle, and some more things, affords an opportunity for Jim to come triumphantly through his difficulties.

BORROWED PLUMAGE (Five Parts—July 29).—The cast: Nonie (Bessie Barriscale), Darby O'Donovan (Arthur Maude); Lady Angelica (Dorcas Matthews); Earl of Selkirk (Barney Sherry); Sir Charles Broome (Wallace Worsley); Giles (Tod Burns).

Moira ap Nonie is a kitchen wench in a castle on the seacoost of Scotland. She has always longed to investigate the apartments of the lovely lords and ladies upstairs, and one day her opportunity arrives when John Paul Jones arrives with his pirate band, and everyone but Nonie flees the castle.

In the boudoir of the lady of the castle she arrays herself in the silks and brocades of the absent beauty, and is received with acclaim by the English officers when they arrive to combat the landing of Jones and his men. Meantime an emissary of Jones has arrived and recognizes in Nonie a former sweetheart whom he had left in Ireland some years before. How he risks his neck in order to be near her, and how she saves him, constitute an action full of thrills and surprises.

IN SLUMBERLAND (Five Parts—July 29).—The cast: Eileen McCree (Thelma Salter); Nora McCree (Laura Sears); Patrick McCree (Jack Livingston); Peter Kennedy (J. P. Lockney); Flynn, the Bog Man (Walter Perry).

Eileen McCree is a little girl who lives in a fairyland in her own imagination, stimulated by the stories that are told her by Flynn, an old Irishman, and Biddy Malone, the village fortune teller. A wicked rascal is trying to alienate the affections of her mother, when her father is away at the war. This rascal, Kennedy, has intercepted the father's letters from the front, and made it appear that the husband is dead, but with the aid of the fairies the little girl, Eileen, frustrates his plans, and after a thrilling course of events lives happily ever after.

AN EVEN BREAK (Five Parts—Aug. 5.—The cast: Claire Curtis (Olive Thomas); Jimmie Strang (Charles Gunn); Mary (Margaret Thompson); Ralph Harding (Darrel Foss); David Harding (Charles K. French); Luther Collins (J. Frank Burke); Canning (Louis Durham).

Claire Curtis leaves her home in the little town of Randsburg and goes to New York, where she soon becomes a popular dancing favorite at the Minot's cafe. Later Jimmie Strang, the lover of her school days, comes to the city to visit her. He has made some successful inventions but is having trouble with labor agitators in Randsburg who fear that the new machines will throw them out of work. He also finds an enemy in Dave Harding, a member of a rival firm. While Jimmie is in the city, Harding connives with the strikers to blow up the machines. Claire hears of the plot and immediately prepares to frustrate it in a way that provides an exciting race to Randsburg.

The Candid Opinion

OF AN

Experienced Operator

TEMPLE THEATRE
GALT, ONTARIO, CANADA

[illegible], 1917

Some time ago I had some correspondence about your Hold-Ark Carbons. You will remember, no doubt, sending me carbons for a test and requesting my opinion, which I gave you. Now, a few remarks added may not be out of place at this late day.

I have used Hold-Ark Carbons, ⅝" top and ½" negative bottom, for the past several months and can candidly say their equal is not or never has been produced for a picture machine arc lamp, and I have used every known European and American-made carbon in twenty-one years' experience handling picture machines.

If the operators who use these carbons will take the trouble to place them on top of their lamp house for a day or two ahead of using them they will find that they work even better, as they may be a little green with moisture in the core, and, as you know, the drier they are the steadier the flow. However, we never have a flicker, flutter, splutter or waver to the light—night after night the same steady, snow white light on the screen, and that is every operator's big ambition. I fail to see why any other carbons are used at all, as none are in the same class as Speer Hold-Arks.

Use any part or all of this letter if it will help to enlighten operators or managers who are still in the wilderness.

Very sincerely,

JOHN C. GREEN,
Mgr., Temple Theatre, Galt, Ontario, Can.

Many hundreds of similar letters, already on file, testify to the high merits of Speer Projector Carbons and substantiate every claim made for them.

"MARTIN" ROTARY CONVERTER

FOR REAL SUN-LIT PICTURES

PERFECT REEL DISSOLVING

The voltage of the "MARTIN" polyphase converter is maintained constant, so that the starting of the second arc does not disturb the light given by the first making the dissolving of the reels as simple as if the arcs were operated in a Direct Current district. Our emergency panel does away with expensive compensares and cuts the wiring and installation cost in half.

You have pictures to sell

but are you delivering them in good order to your customers?

The patron expects clear, steady pictures and has paid for them. If you don't deliver them right he will go elsewhere. Don't drive your patrons away. Give them the best projection.

The Wagner [illegible] Converter

It costs no more than the poorer quality.

Direct current gives many times more light than alternating current at the same current cost if you use a Wagner White Light Converter. Are you willing to risk your business when it costs no more to insure it?

Ask Your Dealer

The lens of your projector may not seem very large, but in effect it is just as large as your screen, because every detail of every picture shown on the screen has to be transmitted through the lens.

Even though it is not large or does not cost a large sum, there is no more important article in your theatre than that lens.

Make sure the lens of your projector is a

which combines the most advantageous optical and mechanical features.

Your Dealer will tell you about its merits, or write direct to

NOTES TO BANKNOTES

Playing to capacity?

—or is the fellow down the street standing them up? Both showing the same class of picture service—what's wrong—ever think your music may be weak—do your pictures lack that final punch? Science says we see with our ears—that the sense of hearing is a wonderful aid to our sense of sight.

Not only good music but appropriate music is invaluable to an artistic and box-office success. Every shade and expression of the silent drama must be harmonized correctly

The FOTOPLAYER is an instrument which not only "fits the picture" with appropriate music but does it in a real human way

Continuous music — instant change— complete variety Played manually or by roll, requiring no experienced operator, which means low upkeep—the FOTOPLAYER solves your music problem and—if it's good enough to be TWICE on Broadway it's just twice as worth while for you.

We construct orchestral pipe organs to meet your specifications. Write for successful installations.

No other feature film has played to record audiences at the Strand Theatre, on Broadway, New York, and when forced to terminate its engagement there (because of other features previously booked at that theatre) then played 235 performances right below on Broadway, at the Globe Theatre. That is the unique achievement of the remarkable ¶ N. S. Kaplan surmounted all obstacles to obtain the services of the renowned players of the Moscow Art Theatre, headed by the famous MOZUKIN, and including LESIENKO, COLODNA, CARALLI, ZOVSKA, NELSKA and KARABANOVA, all stars of the first magnitude.

¶ They are players with personalities, selected by their government because of their ability and trained at the public expense. As personalities they are sure to become favorites with American audiences, as they have become established in the hearts of their countrymen.

¶ Their portraits are shown on the succeeding pages. They will be seen in a repertory of the finest gems of Russian literature, based on the masterpieces of Tolstoy, Pushkin and many other authors equally famous.

¶ The first production will be presented to the trade at an early date by the

RUSSIAN ART FILM CORPORATION

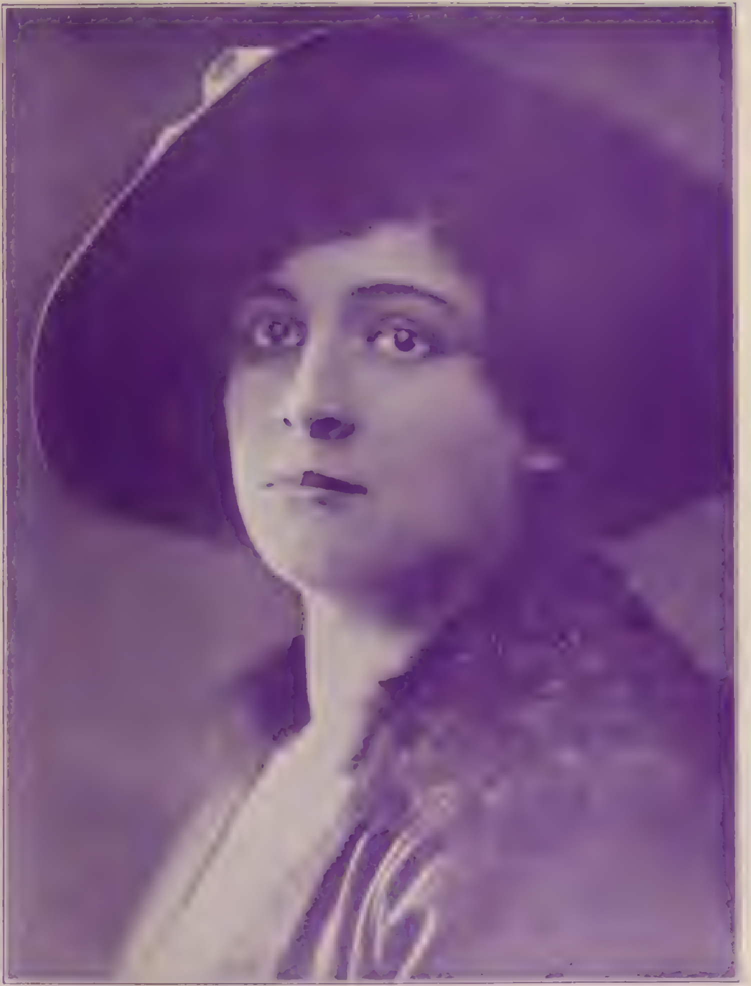
Ivan Mozukin

THE most prominent player in the Moscow Art Theatre appears often at the Imperial Dramatic Theatre and is regarded as the foremost actor in all Russia. He portrays the hero or the villain with equal facility and has been seen to advantage in characters ranging in age from eighteen to eighty. One of the last official acts of the deposed Tsar Nicholas granted permission for him to appear in Mr. Kaplan's motion picture productions.

RUSSIAN ART FILM CORPORATION



Natalia Lesienko

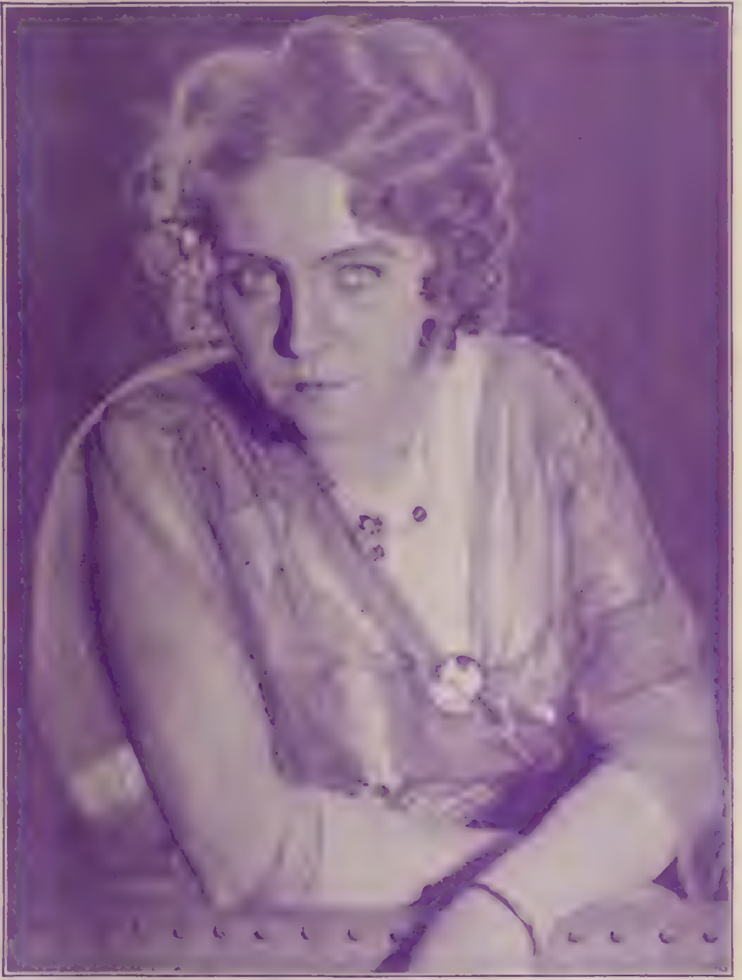
AS the vampire woman of the Russian stage and screen she stands alone. Mme. Lesienko appears often in support of Mozukin at the Imperial and Art Theatres in roles which show a scheming woman who halts at no measures necessary to attain her purpose, and is persistent in revenge when she fails. She is resourceful in her artistry and is loved for it by a public which has no sympathy with the characters she portrays.

RUSSIAN ART FILM CORPORATION

Vera Colodna

SHE is one of the most popular ingenues of the Russian stage, bringing from the Moscow Art Theatre to motion pictures all the youthful charm and graces, all the inherent ability and great personal magnetism which have stamped her as the coming favorite of the spoken drama in parts requiring the portrayal of the lighter forms of expression.

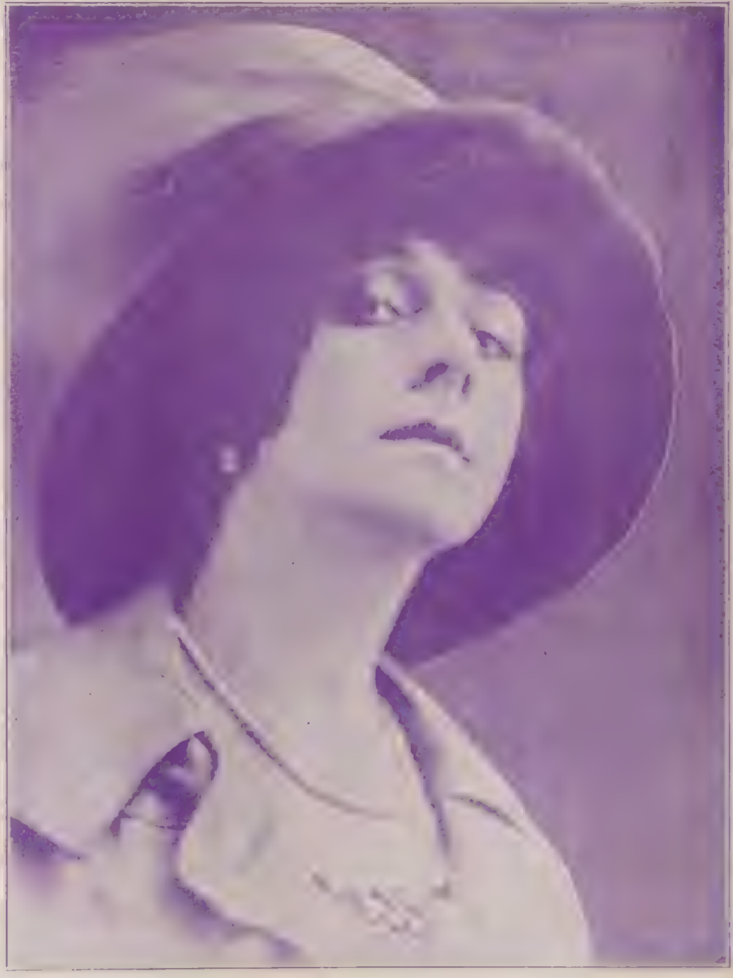
RUSSIAN ART FILM CORPORATION



Olga Zovska

THE favorite of the public among the younger leading women of the Moscow Art Theatre appears in powerful dramatic roles. Mlle. Zovska appears once a year for four weeks at the Theatre Michaels in Petrograd. Seats for all her performances are sold for months in advance. In her motion picture dramas she selected her own scenarios and the members of her supporting companies.

RUSSIAN ART FILM CORPORATION



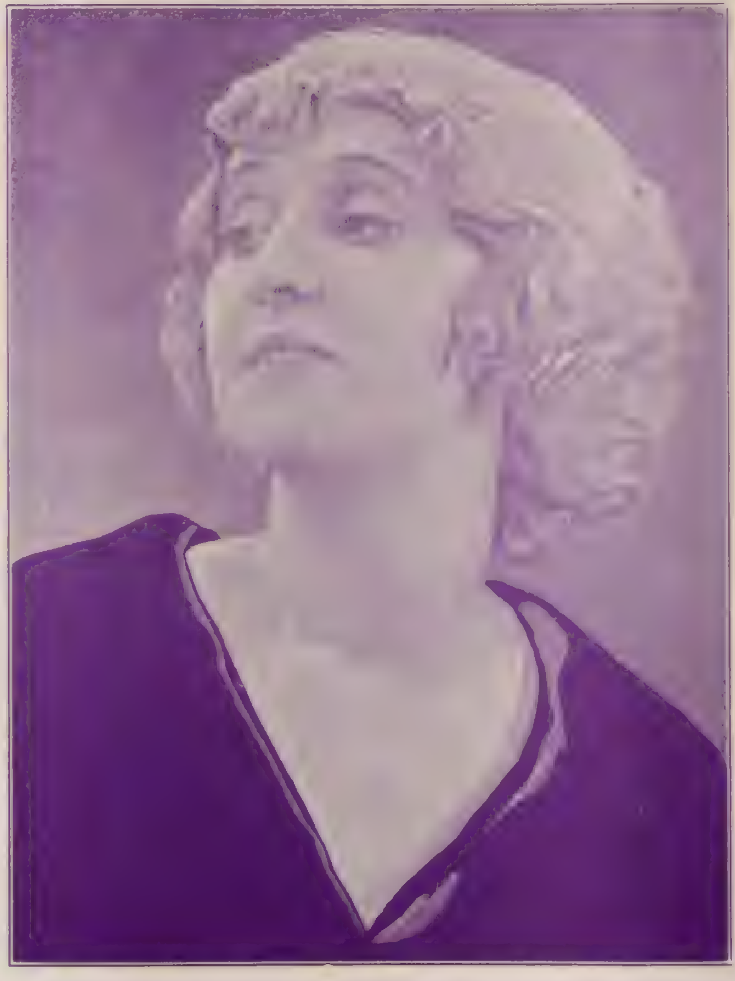
Mlle. Caralli

THE prima ballerina of the Imperial Ballet is an actress of unusual power by reason of her training for the dance. For fifteen years, from six to twenty-one, she studied mimicry, literature, pantomime and dramatic art. Mlle. Caralli generally is seen as the woman who suffers. She has the temperament of the Italian and the grace of the Russian.

RUSSIAN ART FILM CORPORATION

Zoya Karabanova

SHE shares with Mlle. Colodna the public favor as the highest type of Russian ingenue in the Moscow Art Theatre productions. The two actresses frequently exchange roles and the friendly rivalry between them is great. Her beauty is international, her natural ability and training entirely Russian, a combination that is rare and productive of the best results.



Anna Nelska

AS the woman of the world Mlle. Nelska is at her best. She is usually seen in parts that excite little sympathy from her audiences, but by virtue of her great ability her standing among the artists of Russia is high. While frequently the mischief-maker, she does not portray the pronounced vampire roles in which her distinguished associate, Mme. Lesienko, is the most popular of the Art Theatre players.

Goldwyn Pictures

The Philadelphia Inquirer
Indorses Goldwyn.

NO LONGER is it necessary for Goldwyn to tell the exhibitors of the nation what we think about our own productions. The great daily newspapers in the big cities henceforth will inform you, through their distinguished critics, of our big achievements. For example:

THE INQUIRER, Says:

"Private views of the new Goldwyn Pictures reveal an unusual series of new ideas in picture-making.

"'Baby Mine' shown at a private exhibition here, discloses the new achievements of the Goldwyn forces. The effect is comparable to that of a high-priced theatrical production, speech only being lacking. This film has an extraordinarily finished technique—a perfect mastery of the many details of film-making.

"Photographically the films are superb, of gem-like clearness. Masterly cutting and pruning left not a wasted moment in the telling of the story. Goldwyn films are scenically beautiful and intelligent. They are finished and polished down to the last degree and all the resources of the difficult art of film-making are in them."

And Harry L. Knapp, The Inquirer's Veteran Critic, in a Separate Article, Says:

"From the expressions I have heard from exhibitors since they were completely enthused over 'Baby Mine,' I predict that Goldwyn Pictures are going to be the real surprise of the season at the theatres throughout America at which they are shown."

THE PHILADELPHIA LEDGERS' Tremendous Approval.

CYRUS H. K. CURTIS' two great Philadelphia newspapers, the morning "Public Ledger" and the "Evening Ledger," say about Goldwyn's perfection of production things that we, even though we know them to be true, would hesitate to say in an industry filled with doubt and suspicion. For example:

THE "PUBLIC LEDGER" Says:

"Each new motion picture company announces that its films are to be the best ever made. But there was something so sincere and business-like about the Goldwyn announcments that I have always believed this company would show something different.

"'Baby Mine' is a revelation of the high art of the screen. The cast, headed by Madge Kennedy and John Cumberland, is virtually flawless. But it is in the latest methods of photography and lighting and the simple taste of the interiors that I took the most interest. The skill of great artists has produced these results."

THE "EVENING LEDGER," Says:

"If 'Baby Mine' is an index of future Goldwyn productions, showmen may be assured of some capital stuff from these studios. The picture has many distinctions in addition to star and story—individuality in settings and no one to date has built such imposing rooms and halls and 'shot' the results from such effective points."

What these great newspapers say will be said by other papers throughout America. Every exhibitor should take advantage of this splendid indorsement by signing contracts at once through Goldwyn's branch offices.

Marie Dressler Comedies Released by Goldwyn

GOLDWYN announces to exhibitors eight two-reel comedies a year made by and starring MARIE DRESSLER, who is one of the biggest box-office attractions in the entire field of screen comedy. The Marie Dressler Comedies are to be distributed exclusively by the Goldwyn organization.

The first Marie Dressler Comedy is "The Scrub-lady," ready for release early in September. In this picture this famous and popular star has the vision and foresight to surround herself with the most talented comedy actors and the most beautiful girls it is possible to engage.

The Marie Dressler Comedies are available to all exhibitors under the open booking plan and at equitable prices to all desiring to play them.

A splendid organization has been built to produce these comedies and a nation-wide campaign will be made to prepare audiences everywhere for their coming in your theatres.

A Powerful Group of Rex Beach Pictures

UNDER his alliance with Goldwyn, Rex Beach is converting his world-known stories into pictures to be distributed exclusively by the Goldwyn organization.

Rex Beach is today America's most popular author and the drawing power of his pictures is without a parallel in the industry. For Goldwyn he will excel "The Spoilers" "The Ne'er-Do-Well," and "The Barrier"—each of which was a screen sensation.

Already he has completed "The Auction Block" made from one of his greatest stories and Goldwyn soon will announce the release date of this immense production.

Mr. Beach himself says: "I chose Goldwyn to distribute all of my future productions because I feel that this new organization, with new standards and new ideals, brings to the motion picture industry elements it has long needed and which I heartily indorse."

WHAT mightier theme for any picture could have been chosen than this? And the amazing quality in this great film drama is that, despite the bigness of its scope and the magnitude of its spectacles, there still is told a modern story, as vital and thrilling and moving, as any which has come to the attention of the American public in all the years of film making.

There is the struggle for the man—the two deadly rivals—the woman—and GOLD. That is the story. And its working out brings in the whole gamut of human emotion and the kaleidoscopic vista of vivid action.

THE picture is vivid, and never sensational. It is classic in the splendid reserve with which every moment is acted. There are scenes where you want to shriek out, but the agony seems to be deep down under the skin, for "THE LUST OF THE AGES" is a picture that you will carry away with you in your mind, and remember. It is not one of those films to entertain and then be forgotten. That is why this master production of the Ogden Pictures Corporation will flame its way across America until every man and woman who frequents the theatres has seen it. IT IS ONE OF THE TEN GREATEST PICTURES MADE IN THE HISTORY OF THE BUSINESS.

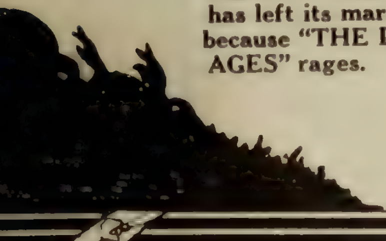
—GOLD!

ITS yellow luster has gilded over many a heart, until all that it can dream of is, GOLD, MORE GOLD. The wild passion of King Midas, who sought to make gold everything that he touched, is duplicated and paraphrased in modern days by men whose hearts themselves have turned to gold. From the merest peddler on the street to that wild, unscrupulous man who has sent millions to their destruction that he might conquer the world, there is the same elemental rush for the Almighty Dollar or Mark or Franc. The "Mark" has left its mark on the world, because "THE LUST OF THE AGES" rages.



Despite the fact that "THE LUST OF THE AGES" decries the "rush for gold," it cannot but help make money for those who show it.

You need good pictures at prices that will enable you to make money.

Triangle makes good pictures. The evidence is a two years' record of uniform excellence that is continued by such productions as "Madcap Madge" and "The Flame of the Yukon."

Triangle prices have made money for exhibitors where exhibitors never made it before. In consequence, the number of Triangle theatres is greater today than at any previous time in the history of the industry.

Standards of efficiency in Triangle productions have again been raised and will continue to be raised. Waste has virtually been eliminated. Triangle prices to exhibitors now represent the cost of production plus the cost of distribution with a fair working margin of profit.

"A MAN'S MAN"

By Peter B. Kyne

A Man's Man:
He breaks all conventions revered by the dull multitude.
He jests with death and laughs at calamity.
He lives up to the Good Book as far as "An Eye for an Eye..."
And skips where it says: "Love your enemies..."
But he sticks to his friend,
To the finish.

Germany Sending Many Secret Agents Here; Americans Resident in Europe in Her Service

COPENHAGEN, July 26.—Information obtained here shows that more effective measures than are now in force for supervision of Scandinavian liners plying to the United States must be put into effect if the passage of numerous German agents and couriers and the transmission of intelligence by German spies in America are to be checked. It is said authoritatively that German passport-forging bureaus are equipping German agents in Scandinavia with fraudulent Scandinavian passports. These are copied from genuine originals in the same fashion as American passports have been counterfeited photographically by the notorious Pass Bureau of the Admiralty.

Various attempts to recruit neutrals for courier and information missions to the United States have been reported more or less definitely. The Scandinavian police also could tell a tale of unmasked Americans who are employed in the German secret service. They are working against the interests of their own country and of neutral States, whose hospitality they enjoy, as well as against the European Entente.

Harold Edel, Manager of The Strand, New York's famous theatre, says

" TODAY
WITH

is one of the six greatest pictures I ever saw!"

Here is a smashing big play that thrilled New York for over a year, playing to full houses all the time. Written by the famous playwrights George Broadhurst and Abraham Schomer it is packed full of tense moments, of human interest, of knowledge of life. As a motion picture it is as great a picture as the play was a play. Miss Reed, assisted by a cast every member of which is a real artist, amply lives up to her reputation of being the greatest emotional actress of the screen.

The exhibitor who plays this picture and advertises it the way it deserves will positively clean up!

Shown at The Strand, New York, the week of July 29

To the public solid entertainment; to the exhibitor crowds of satisfied patrons.

That is true of all Pathé serials. It is emphatically true of

The SEVEN PEARLS

WITH

MOLLIE KING

AND CREIGHTON HALE

to be released September 2nd

Why is it that hundreds of exhibitors tell us that Pathé serial nights are their big nights? Why is it many of them say they would have to shut down in summer if they could'nt get a Pathé serial? Why is it they write us and say

"Pathé serials are better box office attractions than any features."

It is because Pathé serials have box office stars, the best casts, the best production and the best stories that money can buy; and because long experience has taught Pathé what the public wants and how to help the exhibitor fill his house.

"The Seven Pearls" is a great serial. See it - then book it.

"A Pathé serial will make more money for an exhibitor than nine-tenths of the extra priced features," says a Washington exhibitor.

" In connection with my booking of

I want to say that it is my opinion gained from over three year's experience in exhibiting that a good serial such as 'The Neglected Wife', 'The Iron Claw', 'Who Pays?', 'The Shielding Shadow', or 'Pearl of the Army' will make more money for an exhibitor than nine-tenths of the extra priced features being booked to-day."
—Joe Lucas, Grand Theatre, Centralia, Washington.

This exhibitor knows what he is talking about. For a long time Pathé has been preaching that Pathé serials have bigger value than most of the features on the market. Let us repeat, Pathé serials are in the feature class as to quality. They are better than features in box office value.

Facts and Comments

AS long as present war conditions exist we have decided to open a Department of Activities of War Committees of the Motion Picture Industry. This will enable our readers to locate all news of these activities readily and will permit our various War Committees to place before our readers and the industry in general their plans and methods of co-operation, etc. We would call the attention of our readers to the communication in the new department this week of the Chairman of the Food Committee. It will be our aim, as we believe it will be that of the whole industry, to keep out all political bias, which so hampers and distorts much of the news in our daily papers. Pictures through the eye of the camera don't lie and cannot show any political leaning. We will endeavor to follow their example. To help the Government and the country all we can is our privilege and nothing else counts.

AS one goes around among exhibitors he hears plenty of arguments against dollar seats for special films. "The Birth of a Nation" may have made good at that figure in many places and there may be special audiences who even prefer to pay higher admissions to see particularly good pictures. The average exhibitor, however, who has made a try of it is, we believe, a bit disillusioned. What managers have told the writer leads him to feel pretty sure that the most profitable combination is "any picture that interests" at ten cents, for, at least, the majority of seats in the theater.

IN these hot days it is good for the exhibitor to get away long enough to enjoy a little relaxation. He works hard and there's no man deserves it more than he. It will be good as a business proposition, too, if he can take it easy and think things over. Have you been putting brains into the business and do you feel sure of continuing to make money, Mr. Exhibitor? Maybe you are putting brains into it and maybe that competitor is putting more. Look the situation squarely in the face Are things going as well as they ought to? Perhaps the difference between you and the competitor is not so very big, but it is important. The secret of the amusement business is that the best thing to put into it is your heart. This business represents people, it's all human; it works on feelings, likes and dislikes; all that sort of thing. If you really like the business you are on the right track and are more useful than you suspect.

SOME of our English contemporaries have been for some time past resenting in a most unreasonable manner all suggestions that the export business on our American made films should rightly be handled from this side of the water. We have repeatedly referred to the anomalous and even ridiculous position of our American producers and owners of well known film brands who have been compelled to tell foreign buyers that they could not talk business and had to refer them to London. Some of these buyers that we know of within the past year or more had come thousands of miles to this country only to hear the actual owner and maker could not sell his own product. Admitting that London as a film producing center is almost at a standstill, a fact that we greatly deplore, our English contemporaries attempt to bolster up the claim that London has been and consequently should remain the export center of all American made films. In the name of all that's fair and just, on what grounds can such a claim be upheld?

STILL another paragraph on the above question is necessary to express our surprise and indignation at the attack in one of these London papers on a prominent London film buyer who established an office in New York some time ago and who has been compelled to give it his personal attention ever since. We believe that the big share of the American film business that London has enjoyed for many years was largely due to the very favorable impression which this buyer and several others from London made in this country by their straightforward business methods. From what we know and have seen of the gentlemen in question we believe this attack on him to be absolutely unjustified and base beyond belief.

Two Unlovely Black Eyes

By Louis Reeves Harrison

"SHOW me," says the average person in the audience, ready to believe what is offered in evidence to the eyes when it is convincing, even when there is a large amount of skepticism about what is heard. Critics who have studied audience psychology are fully aware that method of presentation, irrespective of the probability of what is shown, counts heavily in the general artistic effort to compel that absolute credence which makes the picture story of absorbing interest when the story itself amounts to anything. We are not trying to make people believe what we tell them in this new art, but what they see.

It is a very difficult matter for stage people, boxed in as they are, to get away from the conventional in movement, but many of them have compensated wonderfully for this loss of illusion by clever disguise and artistry of makeup, going to the extent of studying contrast, light and shade and all that is included in picture composition for the sake of accuracy and powerful effect in character impersonation. That such is not the case in most studios is regrettable, but it may be due to the fact that the effects of studio lighting are not yet fully understood. There is an abundance of room for improvement.

Many years ago, in a drama of childhood by Francis Hodgson Burnett, a little girl playing the role of a child princess wore her hair brushed away from the forehead into long curls which hung forward on her shoulders and becomingly framed her face. Some moving picture actress copied that style, and since then it has been the regular thing for the ingenue to wear her hair like that, no matter what the role or its mood. The original effect was charming and consistent, the copies inane.

The inanity of the imitations has been demonstrated to the verge of nausea. No matter what the part, nor what the circumstances of the character, the same side curls reappear over and over again, vanity, not artistry, dictating their use. It could not get by any intelligent stage manager of standing today, but the studio director permits a wretched, poverty-stricken girl without a cent to her name to appear in curls obviously fresh from the hands of the hairdresser, a possible result of the star system, which requires a screen drama to be reconstructed to suit the egotism of a high-priced interpreter.

Then we have the Kentucky mountain maid going barefoot in a frock to her knees shown with chalk-white face, arms and legs, and the Irish maid who lives in a hut and climbs trees to show her ten-dollar-a-pair silk stockings, gypsies in satins and laces and a thousand illusion-destroying imbecilities which only enforce that sense of untruth which is so destructive to the pleasure of an audience, when it does not excite derision. Only a few weeks ago an audience roared when a gentleman appeared on the screen in a pair of trousers of decided pattern, exactly the same as he had worn years before—he had meanwhile been shipwrecked, captured by pirates and reduced to mere rags.

The poor little girl who has had nothing to eat for several days and has barely survived a starving environment for many weeks comes on with a round doll face, bright eyes and pink cheeks about as appealing to the imagination as a machine-made scenario from an adaptation factory designed to exhibit in small scope the leading ladies' pet dog. Such are the methods of producers who try to exact commendation from reviewers instead of deserving it by careful attention to details.

It is the business of the critic to call attention to the manifestly absurd in screen presentation, not only for the sake of the exhibitor and for the protection of the public, but for the good of the art itself, to the ultimate benefit of the producer who publishes his incompetence by permitting such stuff to get by. In an art delineating emotion and thought through the human medium, very close attention is paid by the spectator to the faces of performers, especially to their character-revealing mouths and to those supposed centers of expression, the eyes, though it is less the globe of the eye than its lids, together with lashes and eyebrows which convey a state of mind or heart of the interpreter.

Just as the stage performer is deeply concerned about the condition of his voice, the interpreter of screen stories should be most deeply concerned about the artistic make-up of his eyes. The subject is so well worth his study that he should consider effects more or less as a painter does in a portrait. He is a portrait, the screen actor, a soul portraiture. He is the word, the phrase, the sentence, the punctuation, the medium of expression while within range of the camera.

In order to meet the requirements of impersonation under the powerful glow of studio lights actors are compelled to produce certain shadow effects for the eyes. Aside from accenting the brows and lashes, and elongating the effect by horizontally curved lines, it is necessary to darken the upper lids, but this has been taken to mean that they should be daubed lamp black. In a darkening effect like this the various shades of gray should be used instead, softly merging with natural tints with results far more impressive in that they are not pronounced enough to destroy illusion.

It is sometimes easier to move mountains than to convey an impression of truth lucidly and convincingly, hence the great difficulty of finding authors who know how to prepare a story for plausible screen presentation. There are a thousand chances for the photoplaywright to make an error, and, as his work is open to criticism before it is produced, he has to take infinite pains at every step of creative construction. There are hundreds of conditions he must observe to obtain a favorable verdict. After he has been faithful to legitimate requirements of these exacting conditions, it is despairing for him to see the actor kill the whole effect of reality with two daubs of lamp black.

It may be formulated as a practical rule that the actor should lay stress on the possibilities and probabilities of his role, even in bringing out what is latent in his part for the sake of winning credulity, but he is doing just the reverse when he goes so contrary to the ordinary laws of life as to paint and plaster the human countenance out of human recognition, thereby exposing an entertaining interpretation to honest contempt in the audience and an earnest one to derision.

The actor is in a position of trust. The author is rarely present to criticise; the director is concerned with an infinity of detail besides the whole effect of the picture; it is up to the performer to make a study of himself as an entirely new individuality in each story, not to be occupied with a representation of his eternal self, but of the innate qualities of the character he is to visually portray. As far as the audience is concerned, it is vision, vision, forever vision—let him try a little of it on himself.

DAVID HORSLEY IN NEW YORK CITY.

David Horsley, the Los Angeles manufacturer, came to New York with the hot wave, but denied he brought it with him. Mr. Horsley reported everything as "O. K." He said he expected to return about August 18.

Good and Better Times

By Sam Spedon

WE get a little hot under the collar once in a while, but aside from that everybody seems very comfortable in business. Reports are very encouraging notwithstanding the hot weather. Business with the exhibitors has been much better this summer, taking everything into consideration it has been fifty per cent. better than it was this time last year. The producers and distributors are not complaining and everything goes to show an improved condition in the affairs of the industry, pointing to an excellent business this fall and winter.

The industry is gradually waking to a realization of its need and settling down to business principles. It is adjusting itself to conditions instead of adjusting conditions to it. It is convinced of one thing, that it must make good picures that will survive. Junk must be eliminated, theaters improved to meet human needs and give the public the best; it is educated up to it and demands it. It pays to keep up with the demands.

Fifteen Cents

Unquestionably the theaters that show the earlier runs of the high priced pictures will have to increase the price of admission to fifteen cents, which we believe will readily be paid if the quality of the productions is sustained. Certain neighborhood patrons are willing to pay if they can get what they want. Will many theaters be able to increase the price and retain as large a patronage? That is the question.

Force of Associations

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry as an organization of business men is having its effect on the industry as a whole. The admission of the exhibitors, individually and collectively, has brought them into intimate touch with the entire business personnel. Organization and co-operation will work wonders. The Chicago convention, the first time in its history, brought within its fold a larger element of exhibitors who are of the progressive class of business men. These affiliations have done much to show the smaller and the non-progressive exhibitor what he lacks. They brought him in contact with men who are anxious to extricate him from the confines of the dark ages of the past when any old thing would do and pictures were considered a catchpenny proposition; the time it didn't make any difference whether you were showman, business man or butcher.

To Prove It

Listen to what a small town exhibitor said last week: "I think most of the questions arising in small towns have to be settled as individual cases. My house seats five hundred. I can't possibly draw more than one thousand patrons a day and this would be an exceptional day. You can see I could not afford to pay one hundred dollars a day for a feature with my overhead. In almost every instance I have found the exchanges fair and willing to make any possible concession. They believe I am honest. I will let them put a feature in my house, take charge of the box office and prove what I say themselves. There are exhibitors who lie to get concessions and that makes the exchange suspicious of everybody else. The exchanges must meet conditions in small towns as they exist and deal with them individually. It requires personal investigation on the part of the exchanges and I believe they will meet them in time and make provision accordingly. Already I have arranged with an exchange to put a feature in my house, take charge of it themselves and let them test my claims at their own pleasure. If they can prove to me that I can afford to pay one hundred dollars a day for their features I will run them. We small fellows can't be judged by metropolitan or larger communities."

A Notable Screen Development

ANYONE who has watched the assembling of the audiences that twice daily gather to see the screen presentation of William Fox's "Jack and the Beanstalk" at the Globe theater, New York, will realize that something unusual has happened in picturedom. There have been made at other times picture versions of some of the time-honored stories for children, but not in our recollection has anything been offered that has quite the appeal of the production in question. To be sure, the story of "Jack and the Beanstalk" is one of the best known of its kind and one that is especially fitted to motion picture requirements; it is also dear to the hearts of the kiddies and they are flocking to the Globe in great numbers.

It would be a liberal education to the picture theater managers of this country if they could stand in the Globe lobby and watch the faces of the excited youngsters, not to mention the expectancy expressed on the faces of the oldsters; and then the expressions of delight over the exploits of Jack and the thrills that stir every infantile heart when the grim Giant appears, all presage a wonderful run of popularity for "Jack and the Beanstalk" and a new vogue in pictures, for this is but a beginning of a long series of similar subjects already completed by Mr. Fox and an inevitable flood of pictured fairy tales that will be rushed to completion by other producers.

It is a great and good idea and Mr. Fox is deserving of credit for its development on high class lines.

No Cause for Alarm

FROM a Southern correspondent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD comes word that fear is being expressed by exchange men and exhibitors that the Government's plan to provide amusements at military cantonments free of charge will result in a form of unfair competition to theaters privately operated in adjacent cities.

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD believes that there is no cause for alarm on the part of the exhibitors because of the free entertainment that may be given at the military camps. In the first place it will not be possible for those in charge of such forms of diversion as will be permitted in camps to provide for all the needs of all the men who will occupy those camps. Think it over: there will be approximately 40,000 men in each camp; it is safe to conclude that there will be no attempt made to accommodate that entire number in such picture theaters as will be erected in the camp limits.

It should also be understood that these camps will be under military rules and that the men in training will be confined to the boundaries of camp the greater part of the time. Liberty will be granted to a certain percentage daily for good conduct and these liberty parties will, undoubtedly, spend their time off duty in the cities adjacent to the camps, in which event they will distribute their spending money among the tradesmen and the amusement purveyors of those cities.

As the exigencies of discipline will keep many men continuously in camp some form of amusement will be necessary for them, but this condition will have no appreciable affect upon the possible patronage which the men in camp may give to the city tradesmen.

The exchange man's problem as explained by our correspondent is quite another matter and will have to be adjusted by the men higher up. The Government is paying top prices for most of its supplies and if other tradesmen are paid for what they do, why should the picture men work for nothing? A nominal fee should be paid for pictures shown at cantonment theaters.

"The Cue for Action"

By Edward Weitzel.

A POINT well worth considering is that when an intelligent man starts out to find fault with an art with which he is not in sympathy he is very apt to let fall some grain of critical truth that should be received by those most interested as seed fallen on good ground. One of the gentlemen who supply the Sunday editions of the New York dailies with articles on the drama recently devoted a portion of his space to the pertinent question, "Is the cinema retrenching?" After settling the matter to his own saisfaction by a number of one-sided arguments that failed to point out that the money spent on the production of moving pictures at the present time is being expended more intelligently than when screendrama was first invented, and that a better technique has resulted in a saving of scenes and incidents once thought necessary to the proper telling of the story, the writer adds half a dozen lines that should be taken to heart by every photo-playwright and director. "Action is the one element which appears indispensable to editors of magazine stories, to playwrights and to all kinds of ephemeral fiction except movinp picture plays. Alternate flashes of this couple or that, of the contrasting sets of characters continue in these productions until the spectator not only loses interest in the sight, but is unspeakably wearied."

Fortunately, such a condition is not the general rule, but it does exist to some degree and it is the chief element that keeps a numerous body of thinking persons from being more frequent spectators of the screen. Action is the vital spark of the drama, whether it is physical or mental, and an almost daily attendance at some moving picture theater, for the past three years, has shown the writer of this article how quickly a body of spectators will respond to the appeal of true drama. That there is no infallible rule by which the playwright or the producer can always achieve this consummation is, of course, well understood, and that many supposedly unimportant situations and characters have surprised their creators by exhibiting great dramatic power when shown in public is another reason why it is so difficult to forecast the success or failure of a play, but all this is only so much weighty argument in favor of the closest study of the subject.

If the sub-titles to some of the moving pictures that are labeled dramas reflected the real movement of the story they would recall the chapter headings of many a time-honored novel and would read something like this: "And now let us leave the characters who have appeared in the scene just described to a well-earned rest while we proceed with great deliberation and much circumlocution to hark back to some immaterial happening in the early life of the heroine's great aunt."

JUSTICE JOINS KELLERMANN COMPANY.

Ewan Justice, Fox publicity man, who has had charge of the presentation of "Jack and the Bean Stalk" at the Globe theater, New York, has gone to Bar Harbor, Me., to supervise the work of the Annette Kellermann company, which is at work on a new Fox production at that resort.

Kane With Selznick

Former Western Representative of Artcraft Becomes General Manager of New Organization—Picture Man of Wide Experience.

ARTHUR S. KANE has been made the general manager of Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises, Inc. Mr. Kane has entered at once upon the duties of his new position, and has been busy during the past week at the Selznick offices, 729 Seventh avenue, New York. Mr. Kane will undertake the organization and opening of several new branches for Selznick interests.

Arthur S. Kane.

The Selznick forces are getting ready for an energetic campaign in the fall, and the new general executive is rapidly shaping his organization for the rush of business which the Selznick salesmen confidently believe will greet the release of their new productions.

Arthur S. Kane, during the past year and a half, has been in charge as district manager of eleven western states, comprising the western territory of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, whose Denver, Seattle and San Francisco offices he established. The amount of business which he wrote for Artcraft Pictures while in this position established a record for the territory, and is one of the achievements to which Mr. Kane points with pride. For two years prior to this, Mr. Kane was assistant general manager of the World Film Corporation, conducting business under his own name in New York City. Mr. Kane was also the general manager of the Eclectic Film Company (Pathe Freres), and during the year that he was with the Pathe concern established its entire system of branch offices and exchanges.

These ventures in the East followed many years in the picture industry in the West. It was in 1907 that Arthur Kane opened the first motion picture theater, The Graphic, to be established in Atchison, Kansas. For the next three years he acted as personal representative of O. T. Crawford, in the large Crawford Film Exchange Company, which operated branches in St. Louis, Louisville, New Orleans, Houston and El Paso, with new motion picture theaters throughout the adjacent territory; and also acted as general manager of the O. T. Crawford Manufacturing Company, which was a producing motion picture concern. This was previous to the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company. Afterwards Mr. Kane became the first district manager or special representative ever appointed by the General Film Company. He was also assistant to the president of the General Film Company during the administration of Frank L. Dyer. This was prior to his coming east.

Mr. Kane may truly be said to be an expert on the matter of branch exchanges and district management in the motion picture industry. And his entire business career has been made so close to the field of entertainment in one form or another that guessing right in the matter of "What the Public Likes" has become second nature to him.

ENGLISH WAR FILMS COMING.

We learn that Mr. Felix Malitz, general manager of the Piedmont Pictures Corporation, is expecting a shipment of highly interesting military films from London. These are not news films, but staged pictures of about two to three thousand feet in length, of a highly dramatic character, depicting life in England during the war and also showing many thrilling battle scenes. Mr. Malitz secured the exclusive exhibition rights for this country.

Activities of War Committees

OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY

THE men and women connected with the motion picture industry in the United States will have an opportunity to play a real part in the prosecution of the war against Germany. Official recognition has been given the trade in the appointment by William A. Brady, at the invitation of President Wilson, of fifteen committees to co-operate with the Government, in order that all the facilities for reaching the public through the screen may be utilized.

The Moving Picture World will endeavor each week to set before its readers what is being accomplished by these committees and by the trade at large to help the Government in its prosecution of the war, in doing all that may be done toward the education of the people of the United States so that the full strength of the country may be exerted against its enemies.

Arthur S. Friend, of 485 Fifth avenue, New York, chairman of the food commission committee of the motion picture industry, has issued an appeal to manufacturers and distributors of pictures urging that no steps be taken in the way of making a film dealing with food conservation until such time as the committee has determined what is best for the country at large. Mr. Friend's communication undoubtedly will be read with interest by all whom it may concern and should receive that prompt compliance which will make for greater efficiency in the end.

The committee on public information, with headquarters in the capital city, has issued a circular containing information concerning the making and distribution of pictures that show the activities of the army and navy. We take pleasure in reprinting the document in full.

Mr. Friend's letter is as follows:

To All Manufacturers and Distributors of Moving Pictures:

The War Committee of the Moving Picture Industry appointed to act with Herbert Hoover on the food commission respectfully request the consideration by the trade of the following:

The chairman of this committee is now in Washington getting in touch with the whole question and in conference to determine along which lines the industry will be able to render the greatest aid to the country and the Government on the important question of food conservation.

We realize the extreme necessity for prompt action, but at the same time feel that grave errors may be made and much effort may be wasted, and in fact may have to be undone, if full consideration be not first given to each step.

For this reason this committee requests the trade in general and every manufacturer and distributor in particular not to undertake the making or showing of any film dealing with any phase of food conservation until the many sides of the matter be given the most careful consideration and a plan of propaganda is worked out that is fundamentally sound in every particular.

We believe every one will realize the necessity for this mode of procedure. There will be a very large amount of work for the industry in connection with the various activities of the Government for the next few months, and it therefore becomes imperative that no waste effort be expended anywhere.

This committee will be glad to consult and advise with anyone in the trade in regard to its future activities and will make its plans and suggestions public from time to time in the various trade papers at the earliest possible moment.

ARTHUR S. FRIEND.

Chairman Food Commission Committee of the Motion Picture Industry.
Washington, D. C., August 8, 1917.

Here is the circular issued by the Committee on Public Information:

August 10, 1917.

For the guidance of the newspapers and periodical press, illustrative news syndicates, motion picture producing companies, and independent photographers and artists generally the following information concerning the making and distribution of pictures that show the activities of the army and navy during the period of the war is issued in accordance with authority from the War and Navy departments.

Permits to Make Unofficial Photographs and Drawings.

Applications for permits to make pictures showing the activities of the army, the navy, and other departments and bureaus of the Government, if addressed to the committee on public information, will be referred directly to the proper authorities, and unnecessary delays in securing proper consideration of such requests will be thereby avoided. It is the function of this committee to secure access for the photographers whenever possible to the Government department, and to co-operate with them in making a pictorial record of the work that is being done. This task will be facilitated if all requests for permits are handled through one central governmental office.

Special permits will be issued on occasions on condition that all photographs and drawings be submitted for approval to the committee on public information before publication. Requests for permits should explain the character of the pictures desired and the uses for which they are intended, and should be accompanied by sufficient references to establish the character and responsibility of the person or organization from which the request comes.

Pictures That Are Not Admissible.

Pursuant to instructions emanating from the War Department and from the Navy Department, pictures of the following subjects should not be made or circulated without special permission in writing:

1. Army fortifications, magazines, wireless plants, navy yards, manufactories of munitions or any military equipment that has been installed or adopted since the outbreak of the war, as well as pictures that give information concerning ports of embarkation of troops or the fixed land defenses of the United States or the number, nature, or position of their guns.

2. Close views of the details of construction, as well as of all tests, or new weapons, equipment, or instruments used by the army or navy, such as aeroplane devices, gun-handling gear, electric communications, stabilizers, submarine fixtures, sighting mechanisms, range-finding instruments, fire controls, turret interior, new inventions and experiments of military or naval import.

3. Movements of troops, marching or in transport, in such a way as to identify localities, or pictures that reveal special duties of detachments, positions of guards or sentinels, or that show new military formations.

4. Locations of mine fields or the location, identity, or number of warships belonging to our navy or to the navy of any country at war with Germany.

5. Views, in either news or fiction films, that tend to misrepresent or to arouse prejudice against friendly nations.

6. Scenes abroad that have not been passed by censors of friendly nations.

Whether or not specifically prohibited by these rulings, when pictures are plainly of a character that require official consideration, representatives of motion picture companies and distributing agencies, exhibitors, illustrative news bureaus, editors, and others are themselves expected to withhold publication. When there is doubt as to the admissibility of pictures, communication should be had immediately with the committee on public information, which, with the least delay possible, will pass upon them.

Information not permissible in news matter should not be used in reading matter, titles, or captions in connection with photographs, motion pictures, or illustrations.

Exclusive Privileges to Make Pictures.

No exclusive privileges to make pictures for private commercial purposes will be granted to any photographer or artist.

Releases on Unofficial Pictures.

Three prints from all photographic plates and films exposed with permission by other than the official photographers within territory controlled by the army and navy should be submitted for approval to the committee on public information before publication. One print will be retained as a record by the department from which the permit is issued; one print will be retained by the committee on public information; and the third print (if the picture is declared suitable for public distribution) will be returned to the owner bearing the imprint, "Passed by the Committee on Public Information, Washington." The publication, sale, or other distribution of such pictures as are officially disapproved is forbidden.

Photographs made on permits issued by other departments and bureaus should be submitted for approval before publication. Still photographs should be submitted in duplicate; one print, if approved, will be stamped, "Passed by the Committee on Public Information, Washington," and will be returned to the owner; the duplicate print will be kept for the files.

One positive print of all motion picture films taken by special permits should be delivered, free of charge, to the files of the department from which the permit is issued.

Release on Drawings.

All drawings made within territory directly or indirectly under the control of the army and navy should be submitted as promptly as possible and before publication to the committee on public information. Such drawings, when released, will be stamped, "Passed by the Committee on Public Information, Washington," and will be returned to the owner. Drawings that are not considered suitable for public distribution will be retained by the committee on public information for the duration of the war.

Releases on Official Still Photographs.

All photographs made by official photographers are developed and printed by the military and naval authorities in accordance with the regulations that are provided. All official plates and films remain in the possession of the military and naval authorities, and are not permitted to pass into other hands. Prints of every official plate or film that is released will be kept on file by the committee on public information for record; additional prints may be furnished by the committee as may be required.

Official photographs of the army and navy will be released through the committee on public information. All official photographs bear the imprint of the committee on public information, Washington.

Prices of Official Still Photographs.

A uniform price of two dollars each is charged for the rights to publish official photographs. This price includes one unmounted print for reproduction. Additional prints may be secured at a price that shall be determined, but which will approximate cost price plus a net charge of two (2) cents each.

No photographic or other copies for reproduction purposes may be made from official prints, and only those prints may be published that bear the official stamp of the committee on public information. The purchaser of official photographs secures the pictures for his own use only or for the use of the organization which he represents, and he may not sell, loan, or otherwise dispose of the prints without the written permission of the committee on public information.

Exclusive Rights to Official Still Photographs.

No exclusive rights shall be given to any person or organization to the use of any official still photographs.

Releases on Official Motion-Picture Films.

Official army and navy motion picture films will be released through the committee on public information, and will be distributed as the demands of the occasion may warrant.

Official motion picture films produced by other departments and bureaus may be secured at terms or under conditions that will be furnished upon application.

Photographers With the Army and Navy on Active Service.

No photographers shall be permitted to accompany the army abroad on active service in the war zones, except the official photographers in the government service. Applications for permits for photographers and artists to picture the activities of the navy should be addressed to the committee on public information.

"Official Photographs" and "Official Photographers."

Only those photographs that are made by official photographers in the employ of or under contract to the Government may be termed "official photographs." Only photographers who are in the employ of the Government may be designated as "official photographers," and this designation will apply only during the period of their service.

Photographs Submitted for Approval.

Motion picture producers, illustrative news bureaus, and photographers generally are invited to avail themselves of the advice of the committee on public information in regard to the admissibility of pictures that are taken without permits. In such cases photographic prints should be submitted in duplicate to the committee on public information. If admissible one print will be marked, "Passed by the Committee on Public Information, Washington," and returned to the owner without further comment. If the picture is not admissible the print will be marked, "Not authorized by the Committee on Public Information, Washington." The use of photographs thus disapproved is prohibited. The duplicate print will be retained as a record by the committee on public information.

Motion picture films will receive immediate consideration, and will be returned with the written approval of the committee or with suggestions concerning changes that may be desirable.

No photographs or drawings shall be considered as approved until prints have been submitted for review and have been officially stamped or released in writing.

How Motion Pictures Are Influencing Human Life

Editor of the Bulletin of the Affiliated Committees for Better Films Gives Interesting Views on the Subject.

By Hanford C. Judson.

HERBERT F. SHERWOOD, editor of the monthly bulletin issued by the National Committee for Better Films, a department of The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, has had a newspaper training and is editorially-minded; in other words, his mind instinctively groups bits of information that come to his observation. We human beings are on a road and it leads to the future. The newspaper man reports what is daily happening along the way and does it solely because human beings have the news sense. The two big questions that every newspaper answers are: How far have we got today? and what will tomorrow be like? We have a vivid news sense for what is happening today because we have in us a great desire to know what is to happen. Now the reason we went to Mr. Sherwood with the question of the influence of motion pictures today is that he is free from financial entanglement with the film business and can look and recount what he sees without a suggestion of bias where some might be in a measure suspected.

He said to us when we asked him what effect pictures were having on modern society, "I have been a year now at this post and already I have noticed distinct marks of progress. I can't call your attention to this and that change in modern life and assure you that just this or that per cent. of it came from motion pictures; but I do believe that two things are greatly affecting the lives of people today. They are the automobile and the motion picture.

"The greater the number of points of contact with life, the more a human being gets out of it. The automobile and the motion picture enlarge life because of the number of new points of contact they establish, particularly the latter. The motion picture introduces vicariously many experiences most human beings would never live long enough to participate in themselves. Poor people had no art 20 years ago. Sculpture and painting, the drama and books were for the fairly fortunate, financially speaking. But the motion picture is at all doors. It costs little to get to it and it costs little to be admitted to it. Through it people who are hemmed in by all the pettinesses of their street, workshop, and home environment are freed and permitted to browse in all parts of the world and see glimpses of what passes for, and often is, life in the most attractive corners of society. Vicariously they have been given an opportunity to have life 'more abundantly.' The films are light-bringers and world-old morbidities are being swept away under their influence. We have had hardly a decade of pictures, hardly half that time has passed since they established their grip, yet we can see the effect for good already. They must be blind who talk about the evil motion pictures do.

"The motion picture has had a beneficial influence on family life. Both the automobile and the motion picture have tended to knit the family more closely together in the presence of disintegrating forces. Our industrial civilization with its concentration of population has had a marked effect upon home life. The family group of parents and brothers and sisters in sympathy with each other in a simpler form of life was giving place to groups of individuals with hardly enough in common to make them interesting to each other. In many families the saloon has been the man's only social center. Then came the motion picture. Now the family goes as one to see the film stories. This simple fact has been of marked assistance in opposing this disintegrating centrifugal force of gregarious living. Not only has the motion picture furnished a means of forming new contracts with life in its multitudinous experiences, but has provided topics of conversation for the family gathered around the table, a very valuable thing indeed. Mary Gray Peck has argued that the motion picture has saved the country from a revolution. Accepting her point of view, it has drawn off the violence of blind destructive social forces by tempering it. Looking into the future, it as easy to see that when prohibition becomes an established fact, the motion picture, which is already an influence drawing men away from the saloon, will have a more important service of a social nature to perform than it has today. These are a few rambling thoughts that have occurred to me in the course of my contact with motion pictures which are helping me to evaluate this 'universal language.'"

WRITE US EARLY AND OFTEN

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD carries the most complete record of Exhibitors' News. This department aims at being the fullest and fairest chronicle of all the important doings in the ranks of organized exhibitors. To keep the department as complete and as useful as it is now we request the secretaries of all organizations to favor us with reports of all the news. Coming events in the ranks of the organized exhibitors are best advertised in this department of the Moving Picture World.

Detroit Solid for American

Old League Branch Disbands in Favor of New Association—Jeup on Board of Directors.

By Jacob Smith.

A BRANCH of the new Exhibitors Association has been formed in Detroit, Mich., to be known as the American Exhibitors' Association of Detroit. It already has a membership of nearly 50 exhibitors, with prospects that approximately 100 per cent. of the Detroit exhibitors will belong inside of six months. The new association in Detroit was formed on August 2 at a meeting held at the Hotel Statler there being about 35 present. The object and aims of the new local were gone over most thoroughly and comprehensively, and the final result was that the old local known as the Detroit Photoplay Exhibitors' Society goes out of existence completely, being replaced by the American Exhibitors' Association of Detroit. The officers are: F. A. Schneider, Stratford theater, president; F. E. Scheltenheim, vice-president; King Perry, Luna theater, secretary, and J. J. Brennan, Cozy theater, treasurer. Peter J. Jeup, of the Luna theater, represents Detroit on the board of directors of the new national association.

The local will meet every Thursday at 2 p. m. at the Detroit Board of Commerce, and exhibitors from the city and state whether or not members are cordially invited to attend the meetings, and become better acquainted with each other. For the present outside membership will be accepted into the Detroit association. Later in the year, probably September or October, there is to be a general get-together meeting in Detroit of all Michigan exhibitors, and as a side line attraction, some special entertainment is to be provided the outside exhibitors.

As we stated last week, Michigan exhibitors almost to the man are opposed to Lee Ochs and his methods in conducting the affairs of the old national league, and it is their belief that the industry will develop along the right lines only with such an organization as the American Exhibitors' Association. Secretary Perry's address is 204 Breitmeyer building in case you care to reach him for further information.

PHILADELPHIA LEAGUE OFFICERS.

At the last meeting held Friday, August 3, 1917, the following officers were elected to serve the coming year by the Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia: President, J. O'Donnell; Vice President, S. B. Blatt; 2d Vice President, J. C. Conway; Secretary, C. H. Goodwin; Assistant Secretary, B. Shindler, and Treasurer, H. Green.

Convention Dated for St. John, N. B.

Maritime Provinces' Exhibitors Will Meet in That City in September.

THE chief topic of interest in St. John, N. B., is the proposed convention to be held September 9 and 10 by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Maritime Provinces of Canada. Several causes have combined to make the League of deep importance to the exhibitors in Eastern Canada. The conditions of war have been felt by all theater managers and it has been necessary for them to look carefully in every detail of the trade. Then, too, the legislatures of both Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, following the example of other provinces in the Dominion, proposed to impose a tax on the motion picture patrons.

In Nova Scotia by co-operation the exhibitors effected a compromise with the government so that the tax actually imposed has in some cases not been felt to be such a burden. In New Brunswick the league worked with such energy that such arguments were placed before the Provincial Legislature that the bill was postponed till the next session in February. The league members were successful in having even the proposed tax made of a minimum character. These concessions having been effected by the influence of the league has given it a standing in the eyes of the exhibitors and has materially increased the membership.

It is expected that at the coming convention many matters of vital interest will be discussed and from the interchange of ideas and suggestions much good will result. There are many reforms needed in the trade in Eastern Canada and no doubt some objects will be dealt with forcefully.

Merrick R. Nutting, editor of the Canadian Motion Picture Digest, is to be present.

Walter Irwin of the Vitagraph promised that if Miss Rose Tapley is not engaged upon the series of pictures which are proposed, she will come to St. John for this occasion.

It is hoped that others of prominence will make it a point to attend this convention, among them general managers of the film companies who are invited, though they have no vote in the business meetings.

A committee of local managers and exchange men are making plans for the entertainment of delegates which plans may include a trip on the beautiful St. John river of which New Brunswick is so justly proud, some automobile trips about the city and views of the harbor improvements and shipping facilities of the winter port of Canada. There will be several social functions arranged if time permits. It is hoped to hold a reception at which Miss Tapley will speak and when her many admirers will have an opportunity of meeting her personally.

The business sessions of the League are to be in the Board of Trade rooms, the lectures in the handsome Imperial theater owned by the Keith interests.

With these attractions it is pretty safe to predict a very successful convention for the New Brunswick and Nova Scotia exhibitors with those from the Province of Prince Edward Island who will attend. Meetings like this cannot be estimated by the visible results but from experience we know that their value is incalcuable. The members of the League will be joined in a firmer bond and the League itself will more firmly establish its high position.

Coming League and Other Exhibitors' Conventions

Photographs made on permits issued by other departments and bureaus should be submitted for approval before publication. Still photographs should be submitted in duplicate; one print, if approved, will be stamped, "Passed by the Committee on Public Information, Washington," and will be returned to the owner; the duplicate print will be kept for the files.

One positive print of all motion picture films taken by special permits should be delivered, free of charge, to the files of the department from which the permit is issued.

Release on Drawings.

All drawings made within territory directly or indirectly under the control of the army and navy should be submitted as promptly as possible and before publication to the committee on public information. Such drawings, when released, will be stamped, "Passed by the Committee on Public Information, Washington," and will be returned to the owner. Drawings that are not considered suitable for public distribution will be retained by the committee on public information for the duration of the war.

Releases on Official Still Photographs.

All photographs made by official photographers are developed and printed by the military and naval authorities in accordance with the regulations that are provided. All official plates and films remain in the possession of the military and naval authorities, and are not permitted to pass into other hands. Prints of every official plate or film that is released will be kept on file by the committee on public information for record; additional prints may be furnished by the committee as may be required.

Official photographs of the army and navy will be released through the committee on public information. All official photographs bear the imprint of the committee on public information, Washington.

Prices of Official Still Photographs.

A uniform price of two dollars each is charged for the rights to publish official photographs. This price includes one unmounted print for reproduction. Additional prints may be secured at a price that shall be determined, but which will approximate cost price plus a net charge of two (2) cents each.

No photographic or other copies for reproduction purposes may be made from official prints, and only those prints may be published that bear the official stamp of the committee on public information. The purchaser of official photographs secures the pictures for his own use only or for the use of the organization which he represents, and he may not sell, loan, or otherwise dispose of the prints without the written permission of the committee on public information.

Exclusive Rights to Official Still Photographs.

No exclusive rights shall be given to any person or organization to the use of any official still photographs.

Releases on Official Motion-Picture Films.

Official army and navy motion picture films will be released through the committee on public information, and will be distributed as the demands of the occasion may warrant.

Official motion picture films produced by other departments and bureaus may be secured at terms or under conditions that will be furnished upon application.

Photographers With the Army and Navy on Active Service.

No photographers shall be permitted to accompany the army abroad on active service in the war zones, except the official photographers in the government service. Applications for permits for photographers and artists to picture the activities of the navy should be addressed to the committee on public information.

"Official Photographs" and "Official Photographers."

Only those photographs that are made by official photographers in the employ of or under contract to the Government may be termed "official photographs." Only photographers who are in the employ of the Government may be designated as "official photographers," and this designation will apply only during the period of their service.

Photographs Submitted for Approval.

Motion picture producers, illustrative news bureaus, and photographers generally are invited to avail themselves of the advice of the committee on public information in regard to the admissibility of pictures that are taken without permits. In such cases photographic prints should be submitted in duplicate to the committee on public information. If admissible one print will be marked, "Passed by the Committee on Public Information, Washington," and returned to the owner without further comment. If the picture is not admissible the print will be marked, "Not authorized by the Committee on Public Information, Washington." The use of photographs thus disapproved is prohibited. The duplicate print will be retained as a record by the committee on public information.

Motion picture films will receive immediate consideration, and will be returned with the written approval of the committee or with suggestions concerning changes that may be desirable.

No photographs or drawings shall be considered as approved until prints have been submitted for review and have been officially stamped or released in writing.

These are a few rambling thoughts that have occurred to me in the course of my contact with motion pictures which are helping me to evaluate this 'universal language.'"

WRITE US EARLY AND OFTEN

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD carries the most complete record of Exhibitors' News. This department aims at being the fullest and fairest chronicle of all the important doings in the ranks of organized exhibitors. To keep the department as complete and as useful as it is now we request the secretaries of all organizations to favor us with reports of all the news. Coming events in the ranks of the organized exhibitors are best advertised in this department of the Moving Picture World.

Detroit Solid for American

Old League Branch Disbands in Favor of New Association—Jeup on Board of Directors.

By Jacob Smith.

A BRANCH of the new Exhibitors Association has been formed in Detroit, Mich., to be known as the American Exhibitors' Association of Detroit. It already has a membership of nearly 50 exhibitors, with prospects that approximately 100 per cent. of the Detroit exhibitors will belong inside of six months. The new association in Detroit was formed on August 2 at a meeting held at the Hotel Statler, there being about 35 present. The object and aims of the new local were gone over most thoroughly and comprehensively, and the final result was that the old local known as the Detroit Photoplay Exhibitors' Society goes out of existence completely, being replaced by the American Exhibitors' Association of Detroit. The officers are: F. A. Schneider, Stratford theater, president; F. E. Scheltenheim, vice-president; King Perry, Luna theater, secretary, and J. J. Brennan, Cozy theater, treasurer. Peter J. Jeup, of the Luna theater, represents Detroit on the board of directors of the new national association.

The local will meet every Thursday at 2 p. m. at the Detroit Board of Commerce, and exhibitors from the city and state whether or not members are cordially invited to attend the meetings, and become better acquainted with each other. For the present outside membership will be accepted into the Detroit association. Later in the year, probably September or October, there is to be a general get-together meeting in Detroit of all Michigan exhibitors, and as a side line attraction, some special entertainment is to be provided the outside exhibitors.

As we stated last week, Michigan exhibitors almost to the man are opposed to Lee Ochs and his methods in conducting the affairs of the old national league, and it is their belief that the industry will develop along the right lines only with such an organization as the American Exhibitors' Association. Secretary Perry's address is 204 Breitmeyer building in case you care to reach him for further information.

PHILADELPHIA LEAGUE OFFICERS.

At the last meeting held Friday, August 3, 1917, the following officers were elected to serve the coming year by the Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia: President, J. O'Donnell; Vice President, S. B. Blatt; 2d Vice President, J. C. Conway; Secretary, C. H. Goodwin; Assistant Secretary, B. Shindler, and Treasurer, H. Green.

Convention Dated for St. John, N. B.

Maritime Provinces' Exhibitors Will Meet in That City in September.

THE chief topic of interest in St. John, N. B., is the proposed convention to be held September 9 and 10 by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Maritime Provinces of Canada. Several causes have combined to make the League of deep importance to the exhibitors in Eastern Canada. The conditions of war have been felt by all theater managers and it has been necessary for them to look carefully in every detail of the trade. Then, too, the legislatures of both Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, following the example of other provinces in the Dominion, proposed to impose a tax on the motion picture patrons.

In Nova Scotia by co-operation the exhibitors effected a compromise with the government so that the tax actually imposed has in some cases not been felt to be such a burden. In New Brunswick the league worked with such energy that such arguments were placed before the Provincial Legislature that the bill was postponed till the next session in February. The league members were successful in having even the proposed tax made of a minimum character. These concessions having been effected by the influence of the league has given it a standing in the eyes of the exhibitors and has materially increased the membership.

It is expected that at the coming convention many matters of vital interest will be discussed and from the interchange of ideas and suggestions much good will result. There are many reforms needed in the trade in Eastern Canada and no doubt some objects will be dealt with forcefully.

Merrick R. Nutting, editor of the Canadian Motion Picture Digest, is to be present.

Walter Irwin of the Vitagraph promised that if Miss Rose Tapley is not engaged upon the series of pictures which are proposed, she will come to St. John for this occasion.

It is hoped that others of prominence will make it a point to attend this convention, among them general managers of the film companies who are invited, though they have no vote in the business meetings.

A committee of local managers and exchange men are making plans for the entertainment of delegates which plans may include a trip on the beautiful St. John river of which New Brunswick is so justly proud, some automobile trips about the city and views of the harbor improvements and shipping facilities of the winter port of Canada. There will be several social functions arranged if time permits. It is hoped to hold a reception at which Miss Tapley will speak and when her many admirers will have an opportunity of meeting her personally.

The business sessions of the League are to be in the Board of Trade rooms, the lectures in the handsome Imperial theater owned by the Keith interests.

With these attractions it is pretty safe to predict a very successful convention for the New Brunswick and Nova Scotia exhibitors with those from the Province of Prince Edward Island who will attend. Meetings like this cannot be estimated by the visible results but from experience we know that their value is incalcuable. The members of the League will be joined in a firmer bond and the League itself will more firmly establish its high position.

Trigger Will Resign

Failed to Attend Meeting of New York Local, but Promises to Be There Next Time.

ON Tuesday, August 7, the New York Exhibitors' League, Local No. 1, held a special meeting at its rooms, 218 W. 42d street, New York. The meeting was called to hear the reports of the president and delegates of the local who attended the Chicago Convention. There were thirty-seven members present, R. C. Martineau, first vice president, in the chair. All the other officers were in their respective places.

Mr. Trigger, the president of Local No. 1, was expected to tender his resignation on account of withdrawing from the national convention and being active in the American Exhibitors' Association, but had not made his appearance at the meeting or sent his resignation to the secretary. The acting president got in telephonic communication with Mr. Trigger, who said he was unavoidably prevented from being present and intended to resign from the league, but preferred to do so in person and explain his reasons. He agreed to attend a special meeting to be held next Tuesday, August 14, at 1 P. M., and hoped a large attendance would greet him.

A motion was passed to put in form of a resolution an expression of confidence in the present officers of the National Exhibitors' League of America and a commendation of the delegates of Local No. 1 for their action and services at the Chicago Convention.

The resolutions adopted are as follows:

We, the officers and members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Manhattan Local No. 1, in convention assembled this 7th day of August, 1917, having received the report from the delegates to the Chicago Convention, do hereby RESOLVE, that said delegates receive a vote of thanks for the diligent and conscientious manner in which they discharged their duties, and be it further

RESOLVED, that we express our loyalty to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and our confidence in its officers; and condemn with great indignation those delegates and individuals who have been and are active in a campaign to disrupt the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and be it further

RESOLVED, that we call on all of the exhibitors of the country to stand by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, which is the result of seven years of painstaking effort and great sacrifice on the part of the loyal workers of the league, and which today is recognized by the President of the United States as the representive body of the motion picture exhibitors, and be it further

RESOLVED, that all members of the league shall put forth their best efforts to maintain the unity of exhibitors in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and be it further

RESOLVED, that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and to all periodicals devoted to the motion picture industry.

S. M. Berg made a report of his presentation of the music license which the Society of Music Publishers and Authors was trying to impose on the theater managers. He mentioned that the National Convention had resolved, as a body, to request every exhibitor in the United States to contribute three dollars each to oppose, in court of law, the imposition. He further stated that up to the present very few contributions had been received.

It was moved and carried that all trade papers be requested to publish an announcement in the form of an advertisement calling for immediate response to this fund as a matter of vital importance to the exhibitors.

Royster Writes of Conditions in South

Members of Senate Body Adhere to Original Decision Exempting Houses Up to 25 Cents Admission.

Editor Moving Picture World:

REGARDING the recent fight at Chicago, I beg to say through the columns of the Moving Picture World, that perhaps many of the delegates at the recent convention have never stopped to think that their little Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America has not in its folds one half of the exhibitors of the land. In fact, I cover eight Southern states, and I don't think, outside of North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia, there are a hundred good, live members of the League in the South, and I do think as a man who started in the business twelve years or more ago that every one of us would have thought more of Lee Ochs and his Trade Review had he withdrawn his name for president of the league at this time and thereby retained good order among the same exhibitors who were there. Personally, I think that it was to a certain extent, a case of personal interest which was the main cause, and knowing many of the members of the newly formed American Exhibitors Association I do not hesitate in saying that if they have a good foundation, which I believe them capable of laying, they will no doubt succeed

Just a few words also regarding the recent letter from that prince of good fellows, John R. Freuler of the Mutual. Mr. Freuler strongly advocates a straight fifteen-cent fee of admission in all theaters, which in some towns might work to good advantage, and I will admit that we are giving the public too much for their money. Still, let's see who's fault it really it.

To begin with, the three reels that I used to run some years ago, which I paid Mutual $100 a week for, were fine enough for ten cents admission, which I secured. My public was satisfied, but pretty soon the majority of the manufacturers began to make features in three reels, four reels, five reels and even six and seven reels or parts. If the manufacturers had formed a league of some kind, and had agreed on four reels as the maximum length of a program feature, we would have been in better condition today, but instead of four reel features with perhaps a comedy to fill out, they made only five-reelers, and if you will take the time to see each one personally you will find that two-thirds of the five-reel features we see today can easily be made into four-reelers and the public will be better satisfied and there would not be so much padding.

There are many houses in larger towns which can get a fifteen-cent admission price, but the great majority of the houses, on which hinges most of the income to manufacturers and exchanges, are the houses in the small towns, which can not raise their admission prices, except on big features, and I think it is unwise business judgment to charge as much for an inferior grade of goods of any kind as would be charged for a real feature. One certainly would not want to pay as much for a common grade of flour as he would pay for a fine grade of self-raising flour. Even Mr. Freuler wouldn't.

In conclusion, I would say that if manufacturers would stop wasting money in producing we would not have such a time in booking many features. There is one firm in New York which I am told made one feature in 39,000 feet, which must be cut down to a six reel feature, or six thousand feet. Is it right for the exhibitor and exchangemen to pay for the ruthless waste of footage and other expense of this kind?

Wishing the entire industry much success, and assuring them also of my hearty cooperation in any way possible at any time, I am with best wishes,

Respectfully,
N. L. ROYSTER,

Finance Committee Reports on War Tax

Members of Senate Body Adhere to Original Decision Exempting Houses up to 25 Cents Admission.

AFTER many setbacks and delays, the war emergency revenue bill, over which the Senate Finance Committee has worked for many weeks, carrying with it taxes upon the people and the businesses of the country approximating two billions of dollars, has at last been reported to the Senate and is now to be pushed forward to enactment.

As the bill comes from the Finance Committee to the Senate it is in the shape for which the representatives of the motion picture business worked, so far as "Title VII War Tax on Admissions and Dues," is concerned. Speaking of this the Committee says:

"Your committee recommends that moving picture shows the maximum charge for admission to which is 25 cents, be exempted from the admission charge proposed in section 700 of the House bill. The motion picture show has become a national institution. It possesses many valuable educational features. These pictures are exhibited not only in places of amusement, but they are used in schools and colleges for the purpose of illustration and education. In addition, they are largely patronized, especially those of the kind proposed for exemption from this tax, by people of small means. These reasons as well as others that might be given justify the exemption from the admission taxes of this class of amusement."

In presenting the bill and report of the Senate the committee states that it spent more than six weeks to earnest and painstaking consideration.

"The House bill imposes a tax upon certain theaters and other places of amusement," says the Committee. "It is well known that tickets to these places are sold at hotels, news stands, and elsewhere at higher prices than at the box office of the place of amusement. Your committee recommends taxes based on the excess charges made at these agencies If any place of amusement sells or disposes of tickets at prices in excess of the regular established price, a tax of 50 per centum of such additional price is to be imposed. These additional taxes are to be paid by the person selling such tickets."

Exhibitors will be pleased to note that the committee has struck out the provision of the House bill imposing a tax of 5 per cent. upon the amount paid for electric power for domestic uses and upon the amount paid for light and heat service. A similar tax on telephone service has also been rejected.

Under the Senate bill the government will raise $2,006,970,000. Of this cameras will return $500,000. The tax on admissions will return $23,000,000.

Calls for Funds to Fight Music Tax

President Ochs of Exhibitors' League Appeals to Unorganized as Well as Organized Theater Men.

FOLLOWING the meeting of the Manhattan Exhibitors' League on Tuesday, August 7, at which time it was reported the theater men had been slow in responding to the request for a donation of $3 from each house for the purposes of creating a fund to fight the tax levied by the Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, President Lee A. Ochs, of the National League, issued the following anouncement to the exhibitors of New York:

"An association has been formed, known as the Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, consisting of the owners of the copyrights to approximately 90 per cent. of the popular music used incidentally in motion picture theaters throughout the country. This society is endeavoring to obtain an annual payment from each motion picture theater, an amount of between $30 and $300 per year, for which it licenses the theater to use this music.

"It has been variously estimated that this exaction would take from the motion picture theaters of the United States an amount beween $1,000,000 and $2,000,000 per year. There have been intimations that other societies are about to be formed for a similar purpose. In order to enforce collection of the foregoing amounts, various civil actions have been commenced, and also threats have been made of the institution of criminal proceedings under the copyright law, for violation of Section 28 thereof. We have been advised that the formation of this association is contrary to law, and at the recent convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, held at Chicago, it was resolved:

"First—That pending the action contemplated, the exhibitors refrain from violating the law and using the music without the consent of the owners of the copyright.

"Second—That application be made to Congress to amend the copyright law, so as to permit the use of the music upon payment for the orchestral copies, and

"Third—That proceedings be instituted to enjoin the enforcement of the proposed 'tax' upon various grounds, among others that the formation of the aforesaid society is a combination in restraint of trade.

"It was unanimously agreed at the Ceicago convention that the exhibitors of the United States contribute $3 for each theater toward the expense of obtaining the relief sought, and that this amount should be sought for not alone from the organized exhibitors but also from motion picture theaters not allied with any organization. We therefore call upon you to send your check for $3 either to the president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America or direct to the office of the president, addressing your communication to Lee A. Ochs, President, 1587 Broadway, New York City, or the Secretary of Manhattan Local, 218 West Forty-second street. Kindly make checks payable to M. P. E. L. of A., music tax fund. An immediate response is requested, as action is about to be commenced by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, and funds will be required to protect the interests of all concerned.

"LEE A. OCHS, President.

"M. J. GERSON, Secretary of Manhattan Local, 218 West Forty-second street."

Great Doings for Ocean View

Virginia Exhibitors Have Made Elaborate Plans for the Convention, August 30.

A MINIATURE edition of the Chicago Exposition is indicated for the Ocean View gathering of exhibitors of the four states of Maryland, District of Columbia, North and South Carolina and Virginia to be held August 30, 31 and September 1, and plans are maturing rapidly for the greatest film meeting ever held in the South, arrangements being under the direction of President Jake Wells, of the Virginia Exhibitors' Association, and Harry Bernstein, of the Wells corporation in Richmond.

The mammoth pavilion at Ocean View is being remodeled and fitted up for exposition purposes, booths being constructed along lines similar to those at the Chicago exposition. Already every film exchange in Washington has reserved space for exhibits, and several of the Atlanta and Charlotte exchanges will have displays. Manager Carl F. Senning, of the Washington Fox exchange, has made arrangements for a magnificent exhibit; R. B. Smeltzler, of World Film Corporation; George F. Linehan, Vitagraph; R. Berger, K-E-S-E; J. D. Eiseman, Famous Players exchange; also Pathe, General Film, Mutual and Selznick exchanges of Washington are among those who have contracted for space.

An elaborate movie ball and a seafood banquet is planned for the evening of September 1 and about a dozen film stars have already signified their intention of attending this as well as the exposition during the preceding two days of the convention. Among them are Alice Brady, World; Anita Stewart, Lillian Walker and Rose Tapley, Vitagraph; Baby Marie Osborne and Pearl White, Pathe; Shirley Mason and Bryant Washburn, Essanay, also Fox stars, have been promised.

Among the leaders in the exhibitors' industry of the nation who will be present are the following: Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager, American Exhibitors' Association; Sam H. Trigger, of New York City; I. M. Mosher, Buffalo, N. Y.; Harry M. Crandall, Washington, D. C.; Guy Wonders, of Baltimore; Percy W. Wells and H. B. Varner, of North Carolina; Guy C Warner, of Columbia, S. C. Governor Stuart, of Virginia, will attend the ball on the third day of the exposition.

President Wells states that this convention is to be held independent of any existing national organization, for the purpose of cementing the five states together in a co-operative organization to deal with matters that are of a more local nature, and not of enough importance to be handled by the American Exhibitors' Association head office. Among other important matters to be discussed will be the best methods to pursue in co-operating with the Government in handling the publicity sought by the Government through the screens of the nation.

Sam Spedon will represent the Moving Picture World.

Percy W. Wells, president of the North Carolina Association, is mailing invitations to all North Carolina exhibitors and expects a representation of seventy-five to a hundred from that state to be present. The entire board of directors of the North Carolina League, consisting of Mr. Wells, H. B. Varner, R. D. Craver, B. H. Stephens and S. T. White, will attend. President George C. Varner, of the South Carolina League, promises a large delegation from the Palmetto State. The South Carolina League was organized last spring under very favorable auspices, but did not become a member of the National League. This will be one of the fresh, young state units to enter the American Exhibitors' Association will a full membership and a sound working basis already established.

BESSIE LOVE GIVEN OVATION.

One of the largest audiences that ever packed a Los Angeles theater greeted Bessie Love, Triangle star, when she appeared in person recently at Clune's Auditorium on the opening night of "The Sawdust Ring," her latest play. The production, a comedy drama, dealt with the adventures of a girl and boy who were lured from their homes by the spangles and glamour of circus life and finally found happiness for themselves beneath the big tops.

The theater, which is said to be one of the largest and finest motion picture auditoriums in the world, was appropriately decorated in honor of Miss Love's visit. The girl ushers were garbed in clown costumes, red lemonade was distributed free to the patrons, and a street parade was arranged by the management, previous to the performance, in which a jazz band and circus wagons, containing wild animals, were conspicuous features. The lobby of the theater was adorned with life-size portraits of the little star and an assortment of "stills" taken during the course of production.

SUSIE LIGHT MOON, SCREEN ACTRESS.

Susie Light Moon, one of the few remaining Indians encamped at Hartville, the Santa Monica plant of the Triangle Film Corporation, proves herself a capable actress in "Master of His Home," the latest starring vehicle of William Desmond. The aged Sioux Squaw plays the role of Desmond's housekeeper in the little mountain cabin where he and his partner, J. J. Dowling, dwell in order to be close to their mines. In the scenes where some artistocratic visitors from the East are being shown through the mines, Desmond invites them to see his homely little cabin, and an elderly woman in the party, spying the Squaw, lifts her lorgnette to her eyes and exclaims, "A savage!" This called for an expression from Susie and a close-up shows her expressing her indignation at the unkind remark of the aristocratic visitor. Susie acquitted herself with such honor in this play that she is now a regular member of the Triangle stock company.

NEW GAIL KANE RELEASE BY MUTUAL.

"Souls in Pawn," a startling story of Parisian life and the intriguing of enemy spies in a peaceful country, is the latest Gail Kane release by the Mutual Film Corporation. The new drama is patriotic in its purpose. Miss Kane, in the role of Liane Dore, becomes involved with the head of the enemy spy system in Paris, through her desire to secure evidence against her husband's murderer.

Cantonment Amusements Feared

Exhibitors Believe Free Pictures in Training Camps Will Hurt Their Business—Exchange Men Have a Kick, Too.

By D. M. Bain, Wilmington, N. C.

THE announcement by the War Department that theaters are to be built on the sites of all national army cantonments throughout the country, these theaters to be for the sole amusement of the soldiers, has brought certain film exchanges face to face with a proposition that looks difficult to handle and maintain good feeling all around.

It is understood from the trend of correspondence received from the executive chiefs of several producing companies that these head officers are being approached by the National Government, collaborating with various Young Men's Christian Association branches throughout the country, with solicitations that the various film companies make arrangements through their exchanges situated in and adjacent to the various cantonment centers to furnish films gratis to these army theaters, which, it is understood, will be run under the auspices of local Y. M. C. A. organizations, although built by the Government. It is also stated that these Federal theaters will require the very newest and best service available, stating that it is desired that nothing be done in a half-way style when it comes to treating the soldier boys "white."

The manufacturers, of course, are anxious and willing to co-operate in every possible way with the Government in carrying on the war, and they have, therefore, addressed inquiries to their exchange managers as to the number of cantonments and number of soldiers expected in their territory. This has developed the fact that a certain local exchange, which has almost one hundred per cent. record for working days on every film on its shelf, would be almost ruined if called upon to furnish service to the cantonments free of charge, as there are five cantonments within its territory, which comprises three states, and the furnishing of first run service to these five camps would take at least two week's rental revenue off each of their productions.

"I do not think it would be fair to my regular customers to furnish such unfair competition in their various cities, stated one of the exchange managers. "For instance, I am furnishing service regularly to a certain theater here in Charlotte, and that theater, of course, is paying me regular scale of prices for all releases. I do not think that I should be asked to furnish this service to the army camp located in Charlotte, free of charge, which theater is operated for free amusement, paying no taxes, no film rental and operating at a cost of patronage to my regular account in Charlotte. We are perfectly willing to aid the Government in every possible way, but I consider this is asking us to aid in unfair competition and that we should not do it."

The announcement that the Government will itself furnish the necessary amusement for its soldiers while in camp comes somewhat as a surprise to the local amusement moguls, who had been largely instrumental in landing a camp for Charlotte. One theater, it is known, contributed one thousand dollars cash to the campaign for the camp, and others are known to have made liberal donations. Now that Uncle Sam is coming in and run free shows in competition to them there is much weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth among the movie magnates.

FAIRBANKS ENTERTAINED IN DENVER.

While in Denver, en route from Cheyenne, Wyo., to the studio in Los Angeles, Douglas Fairbanks was guest of honor at a luncheon given by the Denver Ad Club, at which many prominent business men of the city were present. The Artcraft star, called on for a speech, responded with an address on "The Motion Picture of Tomorrow," which was entirely serious in tone, and was listened to with great interest. Frank Carruthers, of the Denver Post, was toastmaster, and he told a number of amusing stories of Fairbank's boyhood days, Denver being the athletic actor's home town.

At Salt Lake City Fairbanks made a rear-platform speech to a delegation of exhibitors who had come down to the station to extend their greetings.

BURTON RICE RETURNS.

Burton Rice, the artistic young man who created those beautiful inserts that were used, at first, to fix Bluebirds in the mind of exhibitors through the advertising pages of the Moving Picture World, is back from the European fighting front, where he went to serve with the American ambulance corps. He is on six months' leave, with consent to an extension, and has once more shoved his knees under Bluebird's art desk.

Many Applications For Membership in All Classes Being Received.

THE busy days of the past few weeks at the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which have been intermingled with annual meetings of the members, Board of Directors meetings and many important conferences pertaining to the activities of the War Co-operation Committee, have not prevented the membership work from progressing favorably.

Recent applications for membership in the Producers Class includes the following: Selig-Polyscope Company of Chicago, Illinois, to be represented by William N. Selig; Pathe Exchange, Inc., to be represented by J. A. Berst; Norma Talmage Film Corporation, to be represented by Joseph M. Schenck and the Bray Studios, Inc., to be represented by John R. Bray.

The Inter-Ocean Film Corporation has filed application for membership as exporters of motion pictures, creating a new classification which will be acted upon at the forthcoming meeting of the Board of Directors.

New additions to the Distributors Class are expected within a fortnight and if the applications are received as anticipated, this important division of the association will be practically 100 per cent. from a membership standpoint.

Inquiries recently received at the offices of the association, in the Times Building, from supply and equipment companies, would indicate that several concerns are giving consideration to joining Class 3, which now includes nearly a score of some of the most important companies engaged in this branch of the motion picture business. New recruits are being added to the ranks of the General Division through applications for individual memberships.

Julia Sanderson

JULIA SANDERSON, who is to be seen in "The Runaway" for the Empire All Star Corporation, was born in Springfield, Mass. Her father was Albert Sackett, a well-known actor and stage manager. Miss Sanderson, when a little child, began her stage career in a stock company in Philadelphia, of which her father was the manager. She was a favorite and learned much from the diversity of roles in which she appeared.

Julian Sanderson

A New York manager was so impressed by her versatility and talent that he brought her to New York and she appeared at the Casino in "Winsome Winnie," of which Paula Edwards was the star. In this play Miss Sanderson made a hit and was especially mentioned for her grace-dancing.

Next season Miss Sanderson appeared in "The Chinese Honeymoon," and after that played a boy's part in "Wang." When on her father's advice she went to London and appeared at the Gaiety in a play called "The Little Duke," under George Edward's management. While there Charles Frohman happened to see her and she made such an impression on him that he brought her back to the United States and put her in a play called "The Dairy Maid." Then followed "The Arcadian," and after that Miss Sanderson appeared with Donald Brian in "The Siren."

Miss Sanderson's first starring venture was in "The Sunshine Girl," which was most successful. Then followed the "Girl from Utah" with its phenomenal run. Last year Miss Sanderson starred with Joseph Cawthorne and Donald Brian in "Sybil." Miss Sanderson is now busily at work rehearsing "The Rambler Rose," in which she is to appear with Joseph Cawthorne.

Colonel Frank Eager Is a Busy Man

Nebraska Exhibitor Who Proved a Leader at Chicago Convention Has Many Interests as Well as Those of His Theaters

THE Moving Picture World told in its story of the Chicago Convention how Frank De Witt Eager had by his rugged personality influenced the proceedings of that more or less stormy gathering; how the Nebraskan had entered the convention hall on Tuesday morning a stranger to nearly all the degelates and how on Wednesday midnight he was easily the foremost man among the two hundred exhibitors gathered from all over the country. His ascendancy among the delegates was not ascribable to anything of a meteoric nature—he had not won them by any single forceful speech; it was the cumulation of steady, cool headed and hard headed work. Over it all was the stamp of conviction, of sincerity—and there were present marked characteristics of native leadership.

Colonel Frank D. Eager.

As a recognition of these qualities the Nebraskan was named as one of the executive committee of the National League, which carried with it membership on the board of directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Since the convention President Brady has appointed him a member of the motion picture committee to confer and act with the commercial economy board of the National Council of Defense.

We are under obligation to Charles Q. De France for a sketch of the career of Mr. Eager. Mr. De France has been acquainted with the Nebraska exhibitor for over twenty years, and very kindly has responded to a request of this paper for the facts. One of the striking items contained in this letter is the news that it is Colonel Eager, a matter which was not divulged during the convention. The colonel returned from the Philippines after the Spanish-American War in command of the First Nebraska.

Colonel Eager was born less than forty-five years ago and spent his childhood on a farm near Davey, Lancaster County, Neb. His father, a pioneer in his state and a veteran of the Civil War, early began to accumulate Nebraska farm lands. When Frank expressed a desire to attend the University of Nebraska his father was willing, provided he made his own way. The son, without hesitation, agreed to the stipulation. He was graduated with honors in the class of 1893, but, as his father doubtless anticipated, there was no opportunity on the part of the young man for pursuing fraternity pleasures.

The Farmers' Alliance movement, later developed as the People's or Populist Party, had by fusion with the Democrats elected Governor Holcomb in 1894, although Nebraska was then normally a Republican state. In 1896 young Eager was nominated by the Fusionists for Representative from Lancaster County to the Legislature. He made a thorough canvass of the county and was defeated by a small margin in a Republican stronghold. Nevertheless, Bryan and the Demo-Populists swept the state for executive and legislative offices, and Eager was made chief clerk of the Nebraska House of Representatives in the session of 1897. Here was laid the foundation of his ability as a debater and parliamentary tactician, of which they were frequent evidences during the Chicago Convention.

In 1896 the state organ of the People's Party was on financial rocks, and a number of leaders in the organization promoted a plan whereby Eager became owner and manager of the Nebraska Independent. In the management of this journal Eager's ability as a business man was first demonstrated. Himself a writer of direct English—the kind with a "punch"—he never interfered with the editorial end of the paper, but applied his energies to gaining circulation and advertising. When in 1905 he sold the Independent it enjoyed a wide national circulation and was one of the most influential among the so-called radical or reform papers. Much that the Independent then stood for has since been enacted into law.

While at the University Eager became captain of the University cadets. He had courted the drill and he had forged ahead. For a year or two after graduation he was military instructor at the Worthington Military Academy, near Lincoln. When the Spanish-American War broke, in 1898, Eager was appointed adjutant of the First Nebraska and then captain of Company H. The regiment was ordered to the Philippines. Eager returned in command of the regiment.

Colonel Eager's experience in the Far East had qualified him for leadership in big enterprises, it had given him the vision and courage that make for success. It is said only one thing has stood in the way of his more rapid progress, one that in the end undoubtedly will work to his advantage, and that is his avoidance of publicity.

On returning from the Philippines Colonel Eager devoted his energies to building up the circulation of the Independent. He bought a plot of ground at 1328 O street, then on the fringe of the Lincoln business district, and in 1903 erected a three-story brick building, which was the home of his paper until its sale in 1905.

It was the ownership of this structure that indirectly was responsible for the colonel's entrance into the business of exhibiting motion pictures. During an absence from the city in 1908 his ground-floor tenant, unknown to the landlord, forsook cigars for a store "theater." In succession several tenants failed to make a "go" of the house. When in 1914 the tenant "faded out," owing the owner of the property considerable money, the colonel took over the show. He wanted to get his rent back. He knew the tenants had lost money charging ten cents admission. He made the price five cents and doubled the gross receipts. Additional ushers were necessary to handle the patrons. Colonel Eager found himself making money as a picture showman.

The Acme Amusement Company, organized in 1908, had three houses—the Orpheum (later the Rialto), Lyric and Wonderland. The concern was not entirely successful. In 1916 a combination of the principal stockholders signed a contract with Colonel Eager to take full control. A few years before he had taken charge of Capital Beach, Lincoln's principal outdoor amusement place, and pulled it out of bankruptcy. In less than a year and a half the colonel has not only put all of the Acme's old houses on the high road to success, but he has promoted and built a new Orpheum Theater building in a more favorable location.

The show business, however, is only an incident in Colonel Eager's business career. To use his own language he is essentially an investor in Lincoln business real estate. He owns and through managers operates the Central Hotel, the Globe Delivery Company building, the Oliver Theater and building and several other pieces of real estate; and he is now promoting the Crown Hotel at the corner of Eleventh and P streets—a twelve-story structure to be conducted as a moderate priced house. Only a month ago Colonel Eager closed the deal for a ninety-nine year lease on the Oliver Theater building—the only legitimate show house in Lincoln—which gives him a fourth house in his string of theaters.

"Eager in action seems to be a plunger, he is so precipitate," said a Lincoln business man one day; "but he is not a plunger. On the contrary he carefully analyzes every proposition, learns the truth about it, has ability to see ahead, decides promptly—and then acts without delay."

The accompanying photograph of Colonel Eager is an excellent likeness. Those who saw him in action at the convention will study it with interest. Perhaps they, like the writer, will be reminded of the general physiognomy of a man somewhat well known on the screen—Bill Hart.

Lasky Returns from Visit to Coast

Vice President of Famous Players-Lasky Tells of Some of the Big Things His Company Is Doing.

JESSE L. LASKY, vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has returned to New York after a lengthy visit to the properties of his company on the Pacific Coast. Mr. Lasky noted many changes in the plants contributing to the Paramount and Artcraft programs since his last visit. Then there were but two establishments, the Lasky and Morosco studios. Now added to these are the Ince studios, located at the former Biograph plant, and the Sennett studios at Edendale.

Mr. Lasky found the two older establishments both undergoing expansion to allow for the larger activities of his company. He announced that both Ince and Sennett would have full sway in the execution of their ideas.

"We have already stated Cecil B. De Mille is going to produce four photoplays a year under his own name," said Mr. Lasky. "These will be absolutely independent in every sense of the word as are the productions of the other directors to whom I have referred. They will be adaptations of great plays and novels of worldwide repute. Mr. De Mille's plans comprise some startling innovations.

"Furthermore, we have the independent organizations of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, complete in themselves. William S. Hart has surrounded himself with a strong organization and is also in the midst of preparation for his first Artcraft production.

"So you see we have five totally distinct and independent organizations on the Coast already hard at work, each one guided by its individual genius and developing its own individuality to the fullest extent. This is a highly important factor in the future success of the company because it guarantees that our productions will embrace a wide range and be as totally different and possess as much individuality as though they had been bought by us in the open market. This will furnish the exhibitor with varied and diversified entertainment.

"While I was visiting the studio Mr. De Mille was putting the finishing touches on the first of the Farrar productions for this season, 'The Woman That God Forgot.' Farrar has never looked better in her life than she does today. I do not hesitate to say that the gigantic settings which were constructed at the Lasky ranch for this picture will mark a new era in elaborateness.

"Jack Pickford is completing an adaptation of Mark Twain's 'Tom Sawyer,' which will be far the best of his photoplays. Following 'Tom Sawyer' Jack Pickford will star in another Mark Twain classic, 'Huckleberry Finn,' which will be followed by two of the best known of the recent plays, namely 'Mile a Minute Kendal' and Bunker Bean.'

"I was particularly interested in seeing Julian Eltinge's first picture 'The Countess Charming.' I am prepared to state he will be a double attraction, for he is a male star in his own right in half the production, and is sure to prove one of our most popular woman stars in the other half of the story. His acting is splendid, his character conceptions unique, and the illusion of his make-up is perfect.

"Sessue Hayakawa, another unique figure in screen history, being filmdom's only Jap star, was completing an adaptation of Wallace Irwin's 'Hashimura Togo,' when I arrived and I had the pleasure of seeing the finished product before I left. I am sure that Hayakawa is going to add more lustre to his name by his remarkable presentation of Irwin's famous Japanese school boy.

"Wallace Reid is, of course, busily engaged in supplying the local hospital with new and interesting cases. The rapid rise to popularity which this young star has enjoyed is one of the most pleasing incidents in Paramount history. Reid's manly characterizations and his appealing personality have won him a firm place in the affections of the public.

"I was particularly pleased that the arrival of Frank E. Woods occurred almost simultaneously with my own. Mr. Woods, who was D. W. Griffith's right hand man, has been engaged as a supervisor of productions in the Morosco and Lasky studios—a position similar to that which he held with Mr. Griffith—and I was delighted at the manner in which Mr. Woods took hold upon his arrival and with the intimate knowledge of production detail which he displayed by his capable administration of his new office."

"PEG O' THE SEA" NEARLY COMPLETED.

Jean Sothern's next vehicle, "Peg O' the Sea," which was written by Winifred Dunn, is rapidly nearing completion at Atlantic Highlands, N. J., where the sea scenes are being taken. The picture, when completed, will be released on Art Dramas Program.

FOX SHOWS "THE SPY" TO THE TRADE.

Buyers from a radius of several hundred miles attended the trade showing of "The Spy," the Fox special production, at the Globe Theater on the morning of Thursday, August 9. The house was filled with film men and exhibitors and their friends. There was the closest attention on the part of all throughout the running of the six reels. The music was a feature of the showing. There was a large and competent orchestra, and the changes were timed to a nicety.

Among those noted were William Fox, the producer; George Bronson Howard, the author of the melodrama; N. H. Gordon, of Boston; Stanley Mastbaum and Frank Buhler, of Philadelphia; Frank G. Hall, of Newark; Howard Edell and "Doc" Wilson of the Strand; Joe Daly, U. B. O.; George Cohan, Guy Graves, Proctor's; Mr. Mitchell of Loew's Circuit and Charles Goldreyer.

Exhibitors as a rule seemed enthusiastic about the picture.

CHAMPION RIDER JOINS FAIRBANKS.

Douglas Fairbanks is back in Los Angeles, after having had a big time at the Wild West exercises in Cheyenne, Wyo., and bringing with him as a new member of the Fairbanks company, J. H. Strickland, champion bareback and bucking horse rider of the world.

Fairbanks watched Strickland's amazing feats of horsemanship during the trick riding contests at Cheyenne, and at once decided Strickland must appear in his next picture. There was one trifling obstacle—Strickland didn't want to. For two hours the Artcraft star argued and pleaded with the cowboy before the latter was willing to sign a contract.

The next Fairbanks play is to be a rip-roaring, up-to-the-minute comedy drama of the real west, and prominent parts will be played by Strickland and five other cowboys who were engaged with him at Cheyenne. Strickland brought with him to the studio the horse which he has ridden in all his championship contests.

DE VINNA CONTINUES WITH BARRISCALE.

Clyde De Vinna will continue as cameraman to Bessie Barriscale despite directorial changes and is now at work with her on her second Paralta production, a screen version of Harold McGrath's "Madam Who."

While with Triangle Miss Barriscale acted under a number of different directors, but De Vinna never left her company. He made a pronounced hit the first time he ever photographed her. He "caught her," it is said, to better advantage than had any of his predecessors. De Vinna was engaged by Miss Barriscale when she formed her own company. He filmed "Rose O'Paradise," the Grace Miller White novel, in which she will make her first Paralta appearance.

TOM BRET OPENS SCRIPT AND TITLE OFFICE.

Tom Bret, formerly sub-title editor of the Vitagraph and scenario editor at the Rolfe-Metro studios, has just completed his first picturization of a story by Walt Mason, the celebrated prose poet. The Walt Mason comedies are being produced by Filmcraft. Mr. Bret has opened an office at 616 Candler Building, where he is busy writing titles for the Metro-Drew comedies, French government war pictures and a number of big state rights features.

"Italian Battlefront" a Remarkable Film

Official Pictures of Italy's War Activities Contain Unusual Scenes of Campaigning Under Difficulties.

SOMETHING new in war films came to New York on the evening of Wednesday, August 8. They were the first official Italian pictures of the war and were described as "The Italian Battlefront." The initial performance at the Forty-fourth Street theater was attended by the Italian Ambassador, Lieutenant General Guglielmotti of the Italian general staff, and a host of Italian military, naval, embassy and consular officials. Charles Evans Hughes also was present.

A World man attended the showing on the following afternoon. The house was crowded, every seat being filled five minutes before the stated beginning time. There were few in the house who were not sons of Italy, and the few who were not shared the enthusiasm of the majority. It is a remarkable series of pictures. There are present the pomp and the glory of war; there are exemplified the stress and the burden, the hardship and the exposure and the heroism of campaign and battle.

The pictures are divided into three parts. The first shows Italy's war in the Alps, in the winter, with the peaks and mountains covered with deep snow. The second shows the siege and fall of the Austrian fortress of Gorizia. The third treats of Italy's work in the air and on the sea.

William Moore Patch, managing director of the Pitt theater in Pittsburgh, who, on behalf of the Italian Government, is directing the American tour of the films, staged the subject. He had prepared an introductory setting showing a lone sentinel on a snow-covered peak. Back in the fading snowy distance were hosts of other mountain tops. It was impressive and it evoked a storm of applause. As the large orchestra sounded the first notes of the Italian national hymn every one in the big house was on his feet.

The opening scenes were of panoramic views of the mountain country, splendidly photographed pictures of the rugged snow country over which the Italians had to fight their way. By means of the telephoto lens, which had been liberally used in the taking of all the scenes, we were given close-up views of the efficient manner in which the Italian army surmounted transport difficulties. Between high peaks aerial railways electrically operated carried men and materials. Big guns were dismounted and in parts were carried from hill to hill. In other instances hundreds of men would drag cannon up steep hillsides. There were long lines of white garbed men going forward to battle, and later there were shown the wounded being brought back on sleds escorted by a half dozen soldiers who carefully piloted their charges down the declivities.

The second part devotes much attention to the artillery preparation for the capture of Gorizia. There are anti-aircraft weapons, some of them working in batteries on automobiles, with their accompanying force of mathmaticians who estimate ranges; rapid-fire guns, showing a shot every two seconds, and many pieces of heavy artillery. There are pictures of the troops entering the streets of the city, not a civilian in sight. One of the stirring scenes shown is of a great review, with the accompanying decoration of Sub-Lieutenant Baruzzi, a nineteen-year-old lad who had almost alone captured 200 Austrians with much booty. On him was bestowed a medal worn by only seven living Italians.

The third part has many fine views of aircraft and water craft, of a battle with a submarine, the latter submerged all but its periscope.

One of the finest bits of the whole series is a barrage fire. The camera is on a hill. The explosions are in a valley, with the sun directly behind. Into the rays of Old Sol rise the snakelike streamers of powdery smoke, volume upon volume. It would stand out in any pictures we have seen from the fronts.

Mr. Patch has arranged exhibitions in Boston at the Tremont theater, beginning Tuesday, August 15; and in Chicago at the Auditorium on August 23. Others will follow in Cleveland, St. Louis, Kansas City, New Orleans, Philadelphia and San Francisco. Mr. Patch personally will supervise the latter.

KAUFMAN SEEKING FEATURES.

Harry Kaufman, general manager of the Globe Films, of Canada, has been in New York for the past week seeking feature productions of merit for his market. He has closed several deals for big specials.

Sargent Takes to Water

EPES W. SARGENT, who is at present engaged in the agricultural pursuit of raising Maine grown potato bugs at his Pine Tree bungalow, has just finished a correspondence course in swimming and put the finishing touches to a scenario entitled "When the Tide Comes In," in which he is arranging to play heavy to Annette Kellermann's lead.

Sargent in His Trouville Costume.

The accompanying illustration shows Mr. Sargent arrayed in the Trouville costume, imported at great expense especially for the picture and goes far to prove his assertion that he will make some splash.

Just at present Mr. Sargent is undecided whether the picture will be released on program or open booking.

Ben Grimm, who is an acknowledged authority on state rights and prohibition matters, has assured us that the wave of dryness about to engulf this country will greatly enhance the value of the picture.

Leader: Although water does not visibly obtrude itself in this scene, there actually is considerable moisture in the immediate vicinity.

ANOTHER WARNING TO EXHIBITORS.

Indications in the form of complaints continue to reach this office of the activity of the gentry who select the motion picture business as a medium for picking up more or less easy money. J. W. Bauer, proprietor and manager of the Willou Theater of Havre de Grace, Md., writes of an unnamed individual who obtained about $20 from merchants in his town on a program proposition. The plan as submitted to Mr. Bauer was that a program for his theater would be printed for three months without cost to him if the right were given to the applicant to solicit a few local advertisers. The permission was given, the money was obtained from the merchants on an advance basis, and nothing had been heard from the stranger up to August 7. The latter gave Newark, N. J., as his headquarters.

The scheme worked in Havre de Grace is similar to that put over in other towns recently in this respect—that the money was obtained not from exhibitors but from merchants who might be interested in picture theater advertising.

NEW DECISION ON CHILDREN'S LAW.

On July 13, 1917, a Brooklyn exhibitor was tried before the Court of Special Sessions of the City of New York, Part II, Borough of Brooklyn, before Justice Cornelius F. Collins, Justice Edwin L. Garvin and Justice John J. Freschi, charged with admitting minors without proper guardianship. At the trial defendant's counsel conceded that the child did buy a ticket and was duly admitted to the theater without a parent or guardian accompanying it, but setting up and proving the defense that the parent or guardian of the child was in the audience at the time. The court unanimously acquitted the defendant on the ground that the intent of the statute was to prevent children in the theater unaccompanied by parent or guardian and that the technical guilt of admitting the child at the door without parent or guardian was not a violation of the statute.

"HAPPINESS" A COPYRIGHTED TITLE.

Judge Hand, sitting in the United States District Court for the southern district of New York, has granted to J. Hartley Manners, the playwright, a permanent injunction against the Triangle Film Corporation, forbidding the use of "Happiness" as a title to a motion picture. Accepting the contention of the plaintiff the Triangle has changed the title to "Seeking Happiness," but the word "happiness" must not be used as a film title or displayed on the screen by exhibitors.

Universal's New Service Department

Many Helpful Features, Including Adjustment of Claims and Preparation of Publicity for Exhibitors.

UNIVERSAL has established a service department to work in co-operation with both the Mecca and Universal Exchanges, taking care of all matters calling for adjustment with exhibitors. If films or lithographic paper chance to be delayed in transit, or any one of a dozen other things occur to cause the exhibitor worry or loss, the experts in charge of the new service department take the matter up at once and see that it is straightened out to the satisfaction of the man who's income depends upon the money-making quality of Universal films. As a matter of fact, the employees of the service department have been retained to represent the interests of the exhibitors, and although their salaries are being paid by Universal, they have been given a free hand to see the exhibitors get every dollar's worth of service to which he is entitled.

In addition to adjusting claims, the new department takes care of the exhibitor's advertising and publicity, wherever such assistance is desired. Newspaper copy is prepared, handbills and special folders gotten up, and circular letters composed to meet requirements.

Exhibitors are taking advantage of these co-operative features to a gratifying degree, and it will probably soon become necessary to enlarge the department, as its usefulness becomes more widely recognized.

The service department as an adjunct of the exchange was first put into effect last year by the Canadian Universal Film Company, and soon became so valuable and aids in getting and keeping accounts that its adoption by the American headquarters of the company became inevitable.

Carolyn Birch in "Babbling Tongues

ONE of the important parts in the big Ivan-Humphrey super photoplay, "Babbling Tongues," was ascribed to Carolyn Birch. The great variety of action demanded from her found its full response in her artistry. Her work shows the careful culture her dramatic possibilities have undergone.

Carolyn Birch.

After graduating from Notre Dame Academy, Lowell, Mass., with honors, Carolyn Birch devoted her time to art and music, but after a short time she joined the Vitagraph Company, where she played leading roles for three years, some of her best work being done in "The Night of the Wedding," "Out of the Past," "Heredity," "Butterfly's Lesson," "Fathers of Men," "Secret Seven," "Footlights of Fate" and many other successes, under the direction of William Humphrey. During her engagement with the Vitagraph Miss Birch won many admirers in parts that ranged from childhod to old age.

For the past season Miss Birch, being the proud possessor of a beautiful voice, has been appearing in musical comedy, having been personally engaged by Henry Blossom for an important part in his Irish opera, "Eileen," which just closed a successful season at the Shubert theater.

Miss Birch devotes a great deal of her time to outdoor sports, and is well known among the younger set in Brooklyn.

F. I. L. M. CLUB CHANGES OUTING PLANS.

The F. I. L. M. Club announces a change in the site of its outing, which is to be held Saturday, August 18. Karetsoni's Grove, Glenwood-on-the-Sound, Long Island, is the place where the big doings will be pulled off.

William C. Dowlan Director for Metro

THE latest addition to the directing staff of Metro Pictures Corporation is William C. Dowlan. Mr. Dowlan recently came from California, where he had been working with the American-Mutual forces, and was at once engaged by B. A. Rolfe to assist in the production of Metro wonderplays at the Metro studio, 3 West 61st street, New York.

Wm. C. Dowlan.

Mr. Dowlan has been the director of many important photodramas. For many years he was with Mutual, both as actor and director. He played De Maupras in "Richelieu" under Alan Dwan's direction, and himself directed such stars as Violet McMillan, Carter De Haven and Flora De Parker De Haven. With the last-named artists he produced the six-reel feature, "The College Orphan." "The Madcap" was another of his successes. For American-Mutual he directed Mary Miles Minter in "Youth's Endearing Charm," Richard Bennett in "And the Law Says," others being "The Light" and "The Lawmaker."

Mr. Dowlan received his experience on the speaking stage in Oliver Morosco's stock company at the Belasco theater, Los Angeles, and with Ralph Stuart in Minneapolis. All his stage experience has been in stock work.

Metro's new director was born in St. Paul, Minn., and received his education at the Christian Brothers' school.

Mackenzie Returns to Astra-Pathe

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the signing of a contract between Donald Mackenzie and Astra-Pathe, whereby Mr. Mackenzie is to direct Miss Mollie King, at present being starred by Pathe in "The Mystery of the Double Cross," in a new serial as yet unnamed. As five episodes have already been made, Mr. Mackenzie is taking up the work starting with the sixth, and his contract calls for his finishing the series.

Donald Mackenzie.

Donald Mackenzie is known as the director of "The Perils of Pauline," the first of the big money-making serials, and which has been shown in every country of the civilized world. His second masterpiece in the serial line was "The Shielding Shadow," another big dividend payer. His experience, which has covered a wide field, includes the production of such features as "The Galloper" with Clifton Crawford; "Mary's Lamb," with Richard Carle; "The "Spender," with George Probert; "The Precious Packet" with Lois Meredith; "The Challenge," with Montagu Love. Most of the above features were produced personally by Mr. Mackenzie when he had his own producing company, releasing on the Gold Rooster program with Pathe.

Petrova Has Own Company

Forms Combination With Superpictures and Will Make Big Features.

MADAM PETROVA left New York on Tuesday, August 7, for her summer home on the Maine coast after concluding an arrangement for the production of feature subjects by her own company regarding which she has this to say:

"It is true that I have formed my own company, the Petrova Picture Company, for the production of my own pictures in my own studios under my own supervision. This company has unlimited capital behind it and I am to have unlimited time in which to get the very best results. I want to make a few big, very big, pictures each year. All producing and distributing arrangements are in the hands of Frederick L. Collins, my partner in the new company."

At the office of Superpictures, Inc., Mr. Collins, who is also president of the McClure Publications, said, "Madam Petrova's statement requires no confirmation from me. The Petrova Picture Company is already an accomplished fact. Madam Petrova is to my mind the most distinguished figure in pictures. She has won her present brilliant position without the aid of extraordinary productions or unusual publicity. The people go to see Petrova. Given the best productions that money and taste can procure, backed by the biggest publicity campaign ever put behind a single star Petrova will make more money for the exhibitor than any actress now before the public."

The Petrova pictures, all of which will be special productions, will be handled by Superpictures Distributing Corporation in accordance with its recently announced policy of big pictures for big exhibitors. Conrad Milliken, vice-president of Superpictures, Inc., and secretary of McClure's, will act as general manager of the new company and handle all its financial and business affairs.

Charles E. Davenport "Safety First" Director

WITH the private showing of the New York Central railroad's new Safety First film, "The Rule of Reason," at the Rialto theater, Tuesday, July 31st, a once familiar figure in the motion picture directing field, returned to the firing line—Charles E. Davenport, who is the father of the Safety First film idea, directed this picture.

Three years ago Mr. Davenport was terribly burned while directing a big fire scene for the Reliance Company. He fell through a trap door into a great burning mass that had been saturated with oil. The result was that he barely escaped being burned to death and for three years he has been under constant treatment by specialists. It was during the long months in the hospital that Mr. Davenport originated the Safety First propaganda incorporated in dramatic motion picture productions and used in the great Safety First movements set afoot by all of the big railroad and manufacturing plants as educational features.

Chas. E. Davenport.

Mr. Davenport has incorporated in his latest pictures the same artistic touches as are found in all the large picture dramas. In teaching the lesson of Safety First, Mr. Davenport has not lost track of all the salient points that reach the human heart and sustain interest. Deftly, throughout the picture he touches love, romance, comedy, pathos, temperance, and safety operations, thereby making his subject intensely interesting.

"I am back in the field again," said Mr. Davenport, "to make bigger and better pictures and to carry on our extended program of Safety First propaganda.

David Powell

DAVID POWELL with the Empire All Star Corporation supporting Ann Murdock in "Outcast," has been a member of Sir Herbert Tree's company at His Majesty's theater, London. He came to America first in 1907 with Miss Ellen Terry and appeared with her as Barend in "The Good Hope" and as Sidi-el-Assif in "Captain Brassbound's Conversion." Returning to England he appeared for the following three seasons with Sir Johnstone Forbes-Robertson. When the latter toured this country he brought Mr. Powell with him to create the role of Christopher in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back."

David Powell.

Following this Mr Powell played under various managements in the United States, making a hit as the Junior Lieutenant in "Across the Border" with Holbrook Blinn's Princess Players. In 1916 Charles Frohman engaged him to play Geoffrey in "Outcast" with Elsie Ferguson.

In pictures Mr Powell will be best remembered for his work as Mary Pickford's support in "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," and more recently as the hero, in "Less Than the Dust," with the same star.

Other players he has supported are Billie Burke in "Gloria's Romance," Clara Kimball Young in "The Price She Paid" and Alice Brady in "Maternity."

"Outcast" will be released September 3. "The Beautiful Adventure" and "The Richest Girl" will follow.

TOWN BUILT FOR NEW KERRIGAN PLAY.

Construction of "an entire town" was begun last week, under the direction of Art Director R. Holmes Paul, at the Hollywood studios, where the productions of the J. Warren Kerrigan Feature Corporation are being filmed. The "town" is to be used as the setting for many of the scenes in the new play by Frederic Chapin, "Turn of a Card," in which Kerrigan soon will make an appearance, at the head of his own company, under the auspices of Paralta Plays, Inc.

In all, the town will consist of some eighteen or twenty structures, so situated as to form several small streets; and it will represent a small hamlet in the oil regions of California, where much of the action takes place. Twenty-five carpenters are at work on the set. The new Kerrigan vehicle is being directed by Oscar Apfel, and photographed by L. Guy Wilky.

EMILY STEVENS POSTPONES STAGE ENGAGEMENT

An agreement has been reached bewteen Metro Pictures Corporation and the Oliver Morosco forces whereby Emily Stevens, the celebrated star of both screen and stage, will postpone her annual New York engagement and tour of the country in a stage production, until early in 1918, for the purpose of continuing in Super-Feature pictures for Metro.

Miss Stevens will for the next six months appear only in special productions de luxe at Metro's Super-Feature studio under the supervision of Maxwell Karger. An extension of Miss Stevens' contract with the Metro Pictures Corporation has been effected proportionate to the high figure already mentioned in the body of the document.

JACK SHERRILL IN AUTHOR'S FILM SUBJECT.

Jack Sherill, the juvenile whose last appearance in "The Silent Witness" for the Authors' Film Corporation and in the character of "Pink" for the Frohman Amusement Corporation in their production of George Bronson Howard's "God's Man," has again been engaged by the Authors' Film Co. in the juvenile lead of a multiple reel patriotic subject soon to be released. Upon the completion of this engagement, Jack Sherrill will begin work on a big outdoor feature release for the Frohman Corporation in the star role.

World Players Like Outdoor Stage

Large Structure With Its 8,000 Square Feet of Space a Welcome Addition to Fort Lee Studio.

THE new outdoors stage for World-Pictures Brady-Made is attracting a great deal of attention in the studio colony at Fort Lee. The reports from members of the first company that tried the open air stage were so enthusiastic that the prejudice disappeared in a moment, and now five or six separate picture plays are being made simultaneously in this added space.

The World's New Outdoor Stage.

The new stage is rectangular in shape with dimensions of 65 feet by 125, giving a floor area of a trifle more than 8,000 square feet. This is the largest outdoors stage in the East, and its equipment is thoroughly modern.

The foundations are a series of heavy concrete piers, which in addition to supporting the general structure, sustain a series of large upright columns. From the tops of these, strong bronze wires are strung at various angles, carrying movable overhead sheets and screens which serve as deflectors and diffusers of light. This system works out perfectly for the elimination of undesirable shadows, enabling the cameramen to secure greatly improved values in lighting effects.

One end of the stage closely adjoins the side of the Peerless (World) studio, so that it practically becomes a part of that structure. It was built under the supervision of technical director William Smart.

"We are making better photoplays than ever, by the use of this stage," said William A. Brady. "This is due not alone to the atmospheric conditions, which are more favorable to photography in the open than inside an enclosure, but also to the fact that everybody naturally does better work in physical comfort than under bodily distress."

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of Aug. 12 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses—"The Amazons" at The Strand.

MARGUERITE CLARK, in "The Amazons," was seen at the Strand Theater the week of Aug. 12. This production was originally written by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero and the screen version was arranged by Frances Marion. Joseph Kaufman, the director, has turned out one of the triumphs of his career. The supporting cast includes Elsie Lawson, Helen Greene, William Hinckley, Helen Robinson, Edgar Norton and Andre Bellon.

Victor Moore, in his latest comedy entitled "Summer Boarding," an educational and industrial picture showing the evolution of the grain of wheat, "The Human Fly" climbing from the sidewalk to the top of one of Chicago's skyscrapers, and The Topical Review were also on the program.

The soloists were Henri De Caux, Rosa Lind, Arthur Depew and Ralph H. Brigham.

"The Law of the Land" at The Rialto.

Madame Petrova held the featured position on the program at The Rialto, appearing in a photoplay version of George Broadhurst's dramatic success, "The Law of the Land." The same heart interest, humor and suspense which gave the play its long run at the Forty-eighth Street Theater a few seasons ago have been retained in the adaptation made for the screen. Madame Petrova was seen as Margaret Harding, the woman who kills her husband in defense of her child. Mahlon Hamilton played opposite the star. The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company selected Maurice Tourneur to direct the picture.

The Rialto Animated Magazine, picturesque studies of North American Indians in one of our National Parks, new bird studies in color and one-reel comedy completed the picture program.

The soloists were Greek Evans, James Price and De Robyn.

"Pay Me" at the Broadway.

A new feature picture, "Pay Me," produced by the Jewel Productions, Inc., began an engagement at the Broadway Theater Aug. 12. Dorothy Phillips heads the cast.

Bill at the Eighty-First Street Theater.

At the Eighty-First Street Theater on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Seena Owen was seen in an "O. Henry Story" of love and romance, "Madame Bo-Peep." A Triangle comedy, "A Hotel Disgrace," was on the same bill.

On Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday Louise Glaum in "Golden Rule Kate," and the hilarious Keystone Comedy, "She Needed a Doctor," were the picture features.

Aimee Dalmores

IN Aimee Dalmores, the celebrated Italian beauty, George Fitzmaurice, directing Astra pictures, which are released on the Pathe program, believes that he has made a wonderful find. Miss Dalmores made her picture debut in the Pathe picture called "The On the Square Girl," which is scheduled for release in the near future, and the result of her work in that production has led Mr. Fitzmaurice to believe that he has found one of the greatest screen beauties in the world. Many women are beautiful, but not every woman appears beautiful when her image is projected upon the motion picture screen.

Aimee Dalmores.

Miss Dalmores, however, is one of that rare type whose beauty seems to be accentuated to a remarkable degree after it has transferred to the film and from that projected to the screen. She possesses that piquancy of expression coupled with a magnetism of personality that rivets the attention and accentuates the interest in her every movement.

Though still exceedingly young, Miss Dalmores has had a most interesting career. She was born in Salermo, Italy, just outside of Naples, but when she was only five years old came over to this country with her family. As a child she developed a great talent for music and at an early age was sent to Paris to study music and the arts, with an idea of fitting herself for the operatic stage.

Next season she expects to play in one of the two French theatres, which are now being constructed, in a repertoire of French plays, providing her work in the pictures does not take up all of her time. At present she is working on the translation of a one-act play which was written by one of the most celebrated dramatists of Italy and played with great success at the Manzoni Theater of Milan. Miss Dalmores is keeping the identity of this author a great secret, as she has not obtained the American rights to this playlet as yet. She is negotiating for them, however, through Enrico Caruso, who is an intimate friend of the author.

"The On The Square Girl" is said to be one of the best pictures that has been released on the Pathe program in some time. The scenario was written by Ouida Bergere, who also had charge of the casting, and it has been staged and directed in the usual capable and artistic Fitzmaurice manner.

Charles Christie Disposes of Territory

Awards Rights in Seven States for Christie Comedies to Cropper and Charnos.

CHARLES CHRISTIE, of the Christie Film Company of Los Angeles, arrived in New York last week after a successful business tour across country. He made stops at Kansas City, Minneapolis, Chicago, Detroit and Cleveland. In Kansas City Mr. Christie made an alliance with R. C. Cropper, president of the Standard Film Corporation. The Standard, which has offices in Kansas City, Omaha and St. Louis, will handle Christie comedies in Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska and Iowa. Mr. Christie also closed with H. L. Charnos, of the Standard Film Service of Cleveland, one of the best known exchanges in Ohio. Mr. Charnos takes over Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky, with offices in Cincinnati, Cleveland and Detroit. Mr. Christie expects to close other districts before his departure for home, in a week or more, closing up the United States.

Mr. Christie's trip to the east also was for the purpose of disposing of foreign rights. Great Britain, Europe and South America are open. His company now is shipping to New Zealand, Australia, the Scandinavian countries and Japan. "We have found that the best men to represent us are the ones who make a specialty of short subjects," said Mr. Christie, "rather than those who go in for features. You take men like Emmick and Schwalbe—they are regular exchange men, not like the buyers of state rights some of whom take on one picture and then wait a period before investing again. In the former instance the men have a regular organization, with a selling force, an advertising department and campaign facilities.

"In my trip across the country I met with real encouragement from the men with whom I talked. There is in evidence marked confidence in the coming year. And that reminds me the Christie company will shortly celebrate its first anniversary. It was on September 18 last we issued our first release. My brother Al is directing all subjects and has been for some time. He is doing everything he can to improve the tone of our output.

"Billie Rhodes, who was away from us for a short time, is back again and will be seen in one of our early pictures. Betty Compson and Margaret Gibson are still on the job. We have an abundance of stage room at our Los Angeles studio. There are three stages, one 80 by 125, one just enlarged to 75 by 100, and another 55 by 75. These enable us to lay out our work in advance, so we can go right to the making of a picture and do it quickly, efficiently and economically."

Mr. Christie said the one-week runs seemed to be on the increase in Los Angeles, twelve downtown houses now putting on pictures for seven days, and in some instances continuing the showings for two, three and four weeks.

REX BEACH WRITING HIS OWN TITLES.

In a little writing room overlooking Lake Hopatcong, at one end of which is his summer home, whimsically called "Manana," Rex Beach is busy with the sub-titles of his first picture for Goldwyn distribution, "The Auction Block." As soon as they are completed to the satisfaction of Mr. Beach the picture will be ready to be released.

It is not usual for an author to write his own sub-titles—those altogether necessary and too much neglected adjuncts of a properly made motion picture—but Mr. Beach is not going at picturemaking in the usual way. He argues that nobody possibly can know as much about what the titles ought to be as the man who wrote the story from which the picture play is made. Consequently, every Rex Beach title will be Rex Beach-made. It took six months to photograph "The Auction Block," and the titles are going to be worthy of the picture.

Despite the fact that "The Auction Block" is a "dress suit" play, it lacks none of the action that has made Mr. Beach's books famous.

VIOLET MERSEREAU'S NEW DIRECTOR.

Theodore Marston has been engaged by Bluebird to direct features in which Violet Mersereau will hereafter star. The productions will be made at Bluebird's Leonia (N. J.) studio, and Robert L. Hill will be Mr. Marston's assistant. Scenarios for Miss Mersereau will be prepared by John Brownell, who is in charge of the Eastern section of Bluebird's scenario department in the Mecca Building. Mr. Brownell is working on the screen version of a popular novel, the title of which cannot now be announced for the reason that the arrangements for securing the photoplay rights have not been wholly completed.

Neal Hart Signs with Universal

NEAL HART, Universal's husky hero of the open range, signed a contract this week to play feature leads in western pictures for the next year. Hart, who will henceforth appear on the screen in the character he knows so well, has had a varied career. His father is Cornelius A. Hart, formerly auditor of the City of New York, but young Hart turned his back on the big town early in life and went West to grow up with the country. At fourteen years of age he worked at the mouth of the Cheyenne River, South Dakota, on a vast horse ranch located on the Sioux Indian Reservation. Neal remained on the reservation two years, thus being enabled to obtain a thorough knowledge of the life of the red man living there.

Neal Hart.

He quit the ranch and drove a ten-horse freighting team from Fort Pierre to Rapid City in the Black Hills, leaving that position to go to Wyoming, where he worked with a trail herd into Rawhide Buttes. After a short time at this he left for the East, where he went to school, and in 1898 joined the United States Navy, serving on the Panther during the Spanish War.

When the war was over he received his discharge and returned to Wyoming. Later he entered College at Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, and played left half on the Varsity football team, where he distinguished himself as a speedy half back and was recognized as one of the stars of the season.

He studied civili engineering and afterward became superintendent of construction of the Thurman Branch of the Delaware and Hudson Railroad in the Adirondack Mountains, New York; also of the Titusville Electric Traction Company, of Titusville, Penn., and built the Galesburg and Kewanee, Ill.

His work as Deputy Sheriff in Wyoming was most creditable and he resigned with the good will of the people to enter the motion picture field, joining the Universal Company two years ago. He played an important role in the serial, "Liberty," and has been featured for the past year under the 101 Bison and Victor releases, with George Marshall as director. He has just commenced the production of a five-reel feature, "The Bumble Bee," in which he is supported by Miss Vivian Rich, Charles Hill Mailes, George Berrill, Miss Miriam Shelby, Joe Rickson and a score of the Universal cowboys. It is a typical Western picture, with many unusual thrills, and gives Hart splendid opportunities for powerful work before the camera.

After already earning the big part of a million dollars and a half for the Red Cross, the half-reel Red Cross motion picture made by the Whartons as their gift to the aid of the wounded soldiers of the war, has gone to greater fields. It has been turned over in its entirety to Evan Evans, chief of the motion picture division of the National Red Cross, and will be issued by that body to theaters throughout the country.

The picture was originally made to aid the committee of Rochester, N. Y., in a drive for a million dollars. However, with the aid of the picture, instead of getting a million, the Rochester workers got a million and a half. Then the requests began coming to the Whartons for the use of the film in other parts of the country. They became so general that it finally was decided to give the picture to the National Red Cross that it might receive the widest distribution possible.

Jewel Productions, Inc.

It's a New Distributing Organization and Will Handle Only Features of Proved Value.

IT'S a Jewel" is the slogan of a new distributing organization, the Jewel Productions, Inc., of 1600 Broadway, New York, which will purchase for cash outright, for distribution throughout the United States and Canada the biggest and best special feature productions obtainable. Independent producers have been invited to submit their pictures to the reviewing board of Jewel Productions, Inc., with a view toward selling them to this organization, which will endeavor to conduct the most efficient and co-operative string of exchanges in the entire industry.

One of the tests proposed by the officials of the Jewel Company is that before any production is purchased or even considered, it must have received the stamp of public approval during an exhibition of at least one week in a metropolitan center. This will eliminate entirely the gambling chance that it is usual for the distributor to take in accepting a production which he then must necessarily pass on to the exhibitor.

As a forerunner of the many fine attractions available to exhibitors everywhere through the Jewel Exchanges, they announce the purchase from the Universal Film Manufacturing Company of George Bronson Howard's exciting drama, "Come Through," which is well-known to have scored a decided hit during its run at the Broadway Theater, New York. The criticism of all the New York papers have been put into attractive book form and will be mailed to any exhibitor without charge upon request.

It is not planned to have any definite number of releases during the year, but the announcement reads that there will be approximately one attraction per month. "Come Through" will be available in the New York territory about the middle of September, and throughout the remainder of the country shortly thereafter.

The New York Exchange has already been opened and will be under the management of Harry Berman. Mr. Berman was a successful executive with the Artcraft Company. The office is located on the fourth floor of the Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway, and is now accepting booking for all of New York State, Connecticut west of the Connecticut River, and New Jersey north of Trenton.

Exchanges are also being rapidly opened in the following cities: Boston, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Denver, Portland, Ore., San Francisco, Atlanta, Dallas, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, and Toronto, Canada. The Detroit branch is being managed by Mr. H. A. Buge, formerly of K-E-S-E. He will handle nearly all of Michigan.

The entire circuit of exchanges will be under the general supervision of Leon J. Bamburger, who for the past two years has been sales manager for Vitagraph V-L-S-E. Mr. Bamberger is at the present time engaging a large staff necessary to exploit Jewel Productions.

Four Edna Goodrich Productions

Mutual Announces the Early Release of a Group of Interesting Subjects.

EDNA GOODRICH, who has appeared in more than a dozen New York successes, is starred in a series of four new five-reel productions to be released shortly by the Mutual Film Corporation. The first will be released within a few weeks.

The productions will be issued under the policy of "big stars only," announced some months ago by President John R. Freuler of the Mutual and rigidly adhered to since. Miss Goodrich's fame on the legitimate stage puts her distinctly into the "big star" class, stars of proven box office value. Mutual has already started a nation-wide publicity and advertising campaign to herald the first release of the productions starring the noted beauty.

The forthcoming productions are "Reputation," "Queen X," "A Daughter of Maryland" and "American Maid." "Reputation was written by John Clymer and was directed by John B. O'Brien. "Queen X" is by Assistant United States District Attorney Edwin M. Stanton of New York. Mr. O'Brien also directed this play.

"American Maid," adapted by Hamilton Smith from a clever story by Julius Rothschild, is, as the title indicates, a play glorifying that glorious product, the American girl, role that fits Miss Goodrich delightfully. "American Maid" was directed by Albert Capellani. "A Daughter of Maryland" is also indicated by its title as a play with a southern heroine, who does wonderful things in great emergencies. It was written by Samuel Morse and scenarioized by Anthony Kelly.

Cabanne to Produce for State Rights?

Griffith Pupil's Contract With Metro Expires Sept 1—May Produce on Own Account.

THE fact that the contract between Metro Pictures Corporation and Director William Christy Cabanne expires on Sept. 1 next, has only just become known in motion picture circles and naturally much speculation is being indulged in as to the future of the famous director, who was, until his engagement with Metro, chief of staff to D. W. Griffith, and who has to his credit over three hundred screen successes.

W. Christy Cabanne.

It was freely predicted that in view of Director Cabanne's latest success, "The Slacker," which is now playing to crowded houses throughout the country, the Metro Corporation would seek to renew the present contract. Mr. Cabanne refused to discuss the question to a finality or commit himself, but promised to make an announcement very shortly. It is known to his intimates that he has long cherished a desire to produce feature pictures on his own account—as he possesses a thorough knowledge of the motion picture business. It is also known that he has been in receipt of offers from various prominent men in the industry to finance and place him at the head of his own company on a proposition for state rights.

To Show "Fall of Romanoffs"

Elaborate Arrangements Being Made for Private Exhibition at Ritz-Carlton.

THE first private showing of the latest big Herbert Brenon special production, "The Fall of the Romanoffs," featuring Iliodor, the exiled Russian monk, the confidant of Rasputin, will be held in the main ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton on Thursday night, September 6.

This showing of which Mr. Brenon believes to be the greatest picture that he has ever made, will be absolutely the first time that any one outside of the Brenon producing forces will have seen this picture.

Preparations are now being made to make this the finest private showing that has ever been held in New York. It is for this reason that the beautiful and elaborate ballroom of the Ritz has been engaged and care will be taken that the picture is shown under ideal conditions of lighting and projection.

The list of invited guests will be headed by Boris Bahknetieff, the Russian Ambassador at Washington, and his entire staff in full dress uniform. With the exception of the newspaper men these will be the only guests outside of the motion picture industry.

Invitations will also be sent to the representatives in this country of the prominent English, French, Italian, Russian and Spanish papers, most of whom will be brought on especially from Washington for this occasion. Representatives of the big papers of Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago and other important cities of the United States will also be among those invited. The names of many prominent picture men are on the invitation list.

HART'S "BOYS" TRAIL WITH "CHIEF."

In the supporting cast for "The Narrow Trail," his first Ince-Artcraft photodrama of frontier life, William S. Hart will have a score of the cowboys who have contributed such notable bits of realism to many of his productions.

When the announcement was made that Hart would go to Artcraft, the actor was immediately besieged by his cowboy supporters, who begged to be taken along. To these men of the lariat and chaps Hart is "the big chief," and to him they are "my boys."

Richardson Back on the Job Again

In Five Months He Talked Projection and Consumed Banquets Over a Distance of 18,738 Bumping Miles

GARY, Indiana, was a hard luck story from start to finish, nor was any one to blame. As before related, we journeyed to that city as the guest of R. H. Fulton, manager of the Chicago branch of the United Theater Equipment Company, the second day of our stay in Chicago, only to find that, through a misunderstanding, no arrangements had been made for the lecture. So a new date was set for the following week, Wednesday, I think it was, and the time of arrival was 10 o'clock in the forenoon, as the men would be obliged to leave camp on the 1:10 car in order to open their shows at 2. But alas and alack, and then alack some more. An automobile load, President Armstrong, of Local Union 110, chauffeur, accompanied by Brother Fernie, one of the high voltage Motiograph salesmen (has sold 115 motiographs in Chicago during the past year, and that's gwine some, lemme tell you), who has charge of the Chicago territory, in his fliverette, with a bold operator-passenger, who had consented to risk his mortal existence in order to hear yours truly talk

Group of Gary, Ind., Operators.

And could that Henry F. run? Uhuh. It certainly could! Looked like a scared jackrabbit, and every time a rough spot was encountered his passenger would combine a groan with a grunt which could be heard above the slammety rattle of both machines. Armstrong tried to have some fun losing Fernie, but—well, it just simply couldn't be did.

But Mr. Jinx got on the job, and what with tire trouble and other aggravations, we did not arrive until thirty minutes of the time the men were obliged to leave for their work, so we merely said hello, shook hands, ate dinner and paddled back to town. (The affair was to have been in the 'camp,' four miles out of Gary, where the men have headquarters during the summer months.)

In Gary we examined, briefly, a few of the houses. Gary is a wonder city. Twelve years ago it was literally a waste of shifting sands. The steel company bought it, established a huge plant, and today the desolation of a few years ago is transformed into a modern, up-to-the-minute city, with something like ten moving picture theaters. I dropped into the Cosmo, on Main street. It has five sidelights on the left, and four on the right, showing very bright amber light to the rear; also there is a bright exit light to the right of the screen. Above the screen is a clock, with white light smeared all over it and the surrounding wall and ceiling. All of which is very, very bad from the projection point of view, and to this is added the sin of fans set in openings in the wall to right and left of the screen, both of which admit daylight. And still in addition to all this there is no black border around the screen. What in the wide world is friend manager thinking of to allow such utterly impossible projection conditions in his theater? It is costing him literally hundreds of dollars every year in business. The operating room walls are light, and the observation ports are five inches wide in a six-inch wall. There are Power's 6-A projectors. Jones Hartsock is operator. There is a separate room for motor generator set. The rewinder is hand-driven.

In this theater about everything having to do with screen result, except the operating room equipment itself, is wrong, yet the manager doubtless expects good results. Well, my dear sir, it just simply can't be done. No matter how excellent the work of your operator, you yourself are literally murdering it in cold blood. Why not pay some attention to scientific projection, which includes auditorium lighting, and get the benefit of the film service you are paying for. Also why compel your operator to peer at his picture through a knothole, and add to the difficulty of doing even that effectively by light operating room walls. Now, neighbor manager, it won't do a bit of good to get angry. Instead, just sit down and think it over. Apply a little common sense to the matter and see if my criticism is not, after all, right, and therefore for your own good.

At the Art Theater, owned by Marcus & Hellman, there were red lights right and left, which is bad, because red should be used for exit lights only. There was a brightly illuminated clock over the screen, and that is bad. John Cvitkovich is operator, John O'Brien assistant. There is a nice operating room, but too much light therein; also the walls are too light. There are two Motiographs. There is glass in the ports, which is good. Brother Cvitkovich has the doors which drop over the end of the Motiograph condenser cone connected by means of a cord passing through rings at the ceiling, so that closing one opens the other, and vice versa.

At the Grand, V. U. Young, manager, there were four bright amber side lights on either sidewall. The operating room is very small, and has a low ceiling. It has a vent to the open air, but it is entirely inadequate as to size; also there is no fresh air intake. The picture is, I think, larger than is desirable, and there is not nearly enough black surrounding it. At matinee much light enters through the exits right and left of the screen, while the wide-open entrance door floods the right wall and part of the front wall with light. The picture was being projected under speed, presumably to drag out to a schedule, with resultant very bad flicker and floating ghost-like movement of the players. The light tone was very bad and the light poorly handled.

Now it is no pleasant thing to speak thus of Gary theaters, because the Gary men had gone out of their way to invite me to visit them. But truth is truth, and I can only set forth things as they were. I did not make these perfectly awful projection conditions. I am setting them forth only and solely to the end that they may be remedied. I have nothing but kindly feeling in the matter. If managers do not know how to do these things, then why in heaven's name do they not employ competent advice, the same as they would seek the advice of an architect were they building a theater. Why set up utterly useless conditions which operate to render proper presentation of the photoplay entirely impossible? Is that good business?

You are selling screen results, and nothing else under God's heaven. The best film service in the world, the best operator in the world and the best projection equipment in the world, won't place perfect results on your screen if you render such results impossible of attainment by senseless blunders in auditorium lighting and other things.

Kenosha, Wisconsin.

So anxious were the Kenosha men to listen to a lecture on the technical side of their profession that, understanding I would address the Milwaukee local and the Chicago union on separate dates, they arranged to have half their number go to Milwaukee at the time of my visit to that city, and half go to Chicago on the later date. And the half did go to Milwaukee. Finding, however, that Milwaukee had not been sufficiently interested to bother with a mere lecture on projection, they got busy on the telephone wire next day, calling Chicago several times before we finally were located, and literally demanding that I journey back northward and visit them.

Well, what is a chap to do under such circumstances, particularly when Local 110 informed me that that body would escort me to the Wisconsin city. So the following Thursday saw me in a car, driven by President Armstrong and loaded down with Fred Havill, friend wife and a votes for women relative of brother Armstrong, escorted by three other cars containing the executive board of Local 110, and several members as well, speeding up through Evanston and Zion City to Kenosha, almost seventy miles away.

We were met at the city limits by four cars, loaded with Kenosha operators, carrying on their radiators the I. A. T. S. E. emblem, and were escorted, with much tooting of horns, to the Kenosha Chamber of Commerce rooms, where a luncheon was served to all and sundry, after which came the address, delivered to an attentive and appreciative audience. But seventy miles through the hot sun, over roads which made the driver say gosh dang, and springs send forth shrieks of protest, is not a stunt calculated to put one in the best possible shape for a technical address. However, the men seemed satisfied and pleased, and certainly I had no kick coming, for it was permitted me to meet with a bunch of real wideawake hustlers. And next time (for I trust there will be a next time) let us hope conditions will be more propitious. I did not have time to visit any of the Kenosha theaters, much to my regret.

Group of Kenosha, Wis., Operators.

Cleveland, Ohio.

And now at last I am really on that "last lap" friend Hoff has been talking about in the headlines. I had had no intention of stopping in Cleveland, but it having been suggested as being desirable I wired the Cleveland local, receiving in reply an assurance of a representative gathering of managers and operators. So I decided to make one more extra stop, and the morning after leaving the Windy City found me shaking hands with that good old standby, Howard Codding, on the station platform, Cleveland. Also Brother L. J. Shafranek was "among those present."

And was Your Humble Servant sick that day? Answer: He very muchly was! There were moments when a sentence of instant d-e-a-t-h would have only brought forth the request for a halving of the instant. The Kenosha trip, followed by a night of travel and an early turnout had been too much. But we nevertheless managed to weather the storm, and must have delivered at least some of the goods, because after a one and one-half hour address at midnight one of the Doubting Thomases remarked to a fellow member, "Gee, I didn't think he had it in him. I'm for Richardson from now on, an' don't you forget it!" Also as several of us sat in the hotel lobby waiting for the 2 o'clock train to leave at 3, one of the brothers remarked emphatically, "Well, Richardson, you certainly made a bunch of friends in this town tonight!"

And then we, the Squaw and Chief Manhattan (Oh, you Calgary!), clambered aboard a New York train, and at 5.25 P. M. Sunday, July 22, stepped out upon the platform —New York City—home again, after 18,738 miles, and experiences which will long live in the memory. I would not do it again for anything I can think of—I would not have missed it for ten years of my life. The strain was something pretty awful, but the kindness of my reception, and the splendid way the men accepted the truth, even when it proved to be a bitter pill, gave me courage to go forward, even when weary almost to the very point of exhaustion. For I feel that I was not laboring in vain, and that much good would eventually come to the profession through my efforts.

And now I'm on the job again. The last lap is finished, and I am ready to serve you as of old.

RICHARDSON.

Joseph B. Maxwell With Paralta

JOSEPH B. Maxwell has been made executive director of Paralta. The new officer will be subject only to the action of the board of directors. He will have general supervision of efficiency men. Mr. Maxwell is known to the theatrical profession as "Joe." He has been for many years recognized a great producer of feature vaudeville acts. In the development of this work he has maintained a small private theater for rehearsals and a costume department, and has managed his business on lines of such efficiency and economy that he has attracted the attention of the theatrical profession.

Joseph B. Maxwell.

The appointment of Mr. Maxwell to the position of executive director of Paralta is in line with the policy of the company to fill all executive positions with experienced theatrical men of high standing. Mr. Maxwell's many years as a theatrical producer especially qualifies him for the office he has undertaken to fill. He is also in full sympathy with the work before him, for he is one of those who cannot see why a picture that is scheduled to cost $50,000, on liberal estimates, should show a cost $65,000 to $70,000 or more when the balance sheet is struck.

Mr. Maxwell will make his headquarters in New York, but he will spend much of his time on the coast, where he will do a great deal of investigating to establish a system of cost computation in relation to picture production. He will also go deeply into exhibition.

Edward Hemmer has been engaged as chief of the eastern scenario department of Paralta. Mr. Hemmer has been identified with Artcraft, representing Mary Pickford's interests. Mr. Maxwell and Mr. Hemmer will take their positions at once.

WILL LOOK AFTER ESSANAY "SAMMIES."

Essanay employes who go to war are certain of being far better provided for than the majority of the boys who will be fighting for Uncle Sam. In the first place all are assured that their positions will be open for them when they return. Not to be out done by the display of cooperation on the part of George Spoor, president of Essanay, the remainder of the employes, those who do not go to the front, have organized for the purpose of providing comforts for those representing Essanay in the great National Army.

Several members of the force who were enrolled in the National Guard have already been called and a large number are looking forward expectantly to the day when they will be called to the concentration camps to start training with the first 500,000. Among those who hope to pass the examinations are Thos. Guinan. F. S. Jacobs, Chas. J. McGuirk, H. Tipton Steck and Andrew J. Callahan.

CRESSY WRITES FARCE FOR UNIVERSAL COMEDIANS.

Will M. Cressy, widely known as a vaudeville headliner and writer of tabloid comedies, has written a two-reel Nestor comedy, in which Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran will be featured. Lyons and Moran have just completed the final scenes of their comedy, "There and Back," which pictures the many hilarious incidents of their visit to the recent convention at Chicago. Work will be started at once upon the Cressy scenario. It is said to be a snap-and-go farce, with most of the action taking place in a sleeping car.

VICTORIA FORDE OPPOSITE TOM MIX.

Victoria Forde, who plays opposite Tom Mix in "A Soft Tenderfoot," his newest Foxfilm comedy, does wonderful riding in this picture. Miss Forde's horse, Bud, is known wherever horses congregate.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

AS I stood watching 15,000 khaki and white linen clad flag defenders pass in review August 4 before the Belgian commission a very pretty girl said, "I hope we get this scene in the pictures." I casually said that we were to have Everett Hale's "A Man Without a Country" on the screen. She said "That is nothing to a country without a man, and all the fellows I know are in line here." Yet she was a good sport, for she saluted the flag as it passed—something few men in sight did. It is a joy to see that young Collier is to appear in "Tom Sawyer" along with Jack Pickford. He made a distinct hit in "The Bugle Call," which ought to be reissued and put on at every picture house for its inspiration and lesson in patriotism.

The Hub is proud of its screen directors and has quite a few, notably Charles Miller, Ralph Ince, William Parke, Howell Hansel and William Humphrey. I have seen several good pictures of late, among them "The Message of the Mouse," rather uncanny round the mouse incident, and we wonder how they did the trick, for it was quite plausible. Miss Stewart was good, the play rather timely, and the picture more than worth while, directed under the eye of J. Stuart Blackton. "Big Timber" was great as to scenery picturing California country and woodland. There was nothing new in the plot, but "Wally" Reid and Kathlyn Williams distinguish any picture. "The Love That Lives" is an artistic piece of work for Pauline Frederick, yet we wonder if it is necessary to get in sex stuff. John Sainpolis, formerly of our Castle Square theatre, is some villain and a woman across the aisle said, "Good for Pauline for stabbing the blackguard." It turned out that she had been a servant in Miss Frederick's family here and "just doted on Polly." "Her Excellency the Governor" is one big delight and ought to please the suffragists. One critic says they had "impossible oplitics" in it—nay, nay. It was perfectly natural, and there are many Sylvia Marlowes who have proven that there is no sex in brains and ability. This is a well-acted play.

Why will producers put out such pictures as "American—That's All. The idea of the play was all right with its clever satire on society snobs and digging up of a fake family tree, but it has been done too much. Walter Walker, a local favorite, was capital, and Blanche Davenport made a right loyal mother who did not share Pa's views. In reply to my neighbor's query on the name Davenport, I had to say that she was not of the family of the late E. L. Davenport, whose two sons are in the pictures. I see that the late Fanny Davenport's hubby, Melbourne MacDowell, is a recent convert to the screen. I should think "Gismonda" might make a good picture, for in this MacDowell was excellent in support of his wife. It is heavy, true, yet is a change from such stuff we are getting too much of recently like "American—That's All."

"An Even Break" was shown at the Triangle exchange the other day, and it is a pretty good picture, for it works out the career of three kiddies who in the opening scene tell what they would like to be when grown up. This catches on at once as a novelty. "Mme. Bo-Peep" was also shown and had good ranch stuff and atmosphere, picturing God's outdoor country "somewhere in America." I found the new manager, A. L. Ehigott, a most genial man who is sure to get good results. He tells me he is named for Abraham Lincoln, was born in U. S. A. just after the War for the Union, and is by descent a German.

"Periwinkle" seemed a good vehicle for Mary Miles Minter, who is solid with the fans. Again we have the spectacle of a man washed ashore minus coat, money, etc., yet within a short time we see him making love to the lifesaver girl in white flannels, an up-to-date coat, scarcely obtainable in a far-away place. Furthermore the title told us that he did not want anyone to know of his being alive, or about the loss of the yacht. A wise one next me said, "What rot, when the United States life saving station has to report all wrecks," and he certainly talked a lot to the men at said station. Anyhow at this season we do not look very deep into details. George Fisher was recently seen here in a renewed run of "Civilization" at the Modern, portraying the character of Christ, which he created for Ince. There was good scenery and a fine view of a lifesaving station, also good interiors. The plot is not new, but the part of the mothering woman was splendidly done by Ann Schaefer. Fisher makes a good opposite for Mary.

I saw two Goldwyn pictures shown privately and must say they have hit a pace all their own. Reviewers are sure to say nice things of them, especially "Baby Mine" with Madge Kennedy in her first picture. As to the stately Maxine Elliott in "Fighting Odds," well, as a man said in my ear: "She's some peach."

"Oh, Boy" is on here for a run, and we miss Marion Davies from the cast, for she has written a screen play, "Runaway Romany," and is to be starred in it. What a clever short story "Pass the Hash, Ann" is, given to delightful fans by the Essanay as one of its Black Cat features. It is well cast and has a surprise ending, for who would have thought Ann, as played by Marguerite Clayton, was an heiress in disguise. Never once was this disclosed until after her marriage to a virile young man bored by society which had been thrust upon him and who went to his old lodgings in the boarding house district to find diversion and a change of scene. Well, he found the former all right in "Ann," the slavey who fascinated him at first sight. These are the short stories we want.

That night I saw another of the series at the Fenway, "The Finish," with Ernest Maupain and Mabel Bardine playing leads. That, too, had a punch at the end showing that all the harrowing incidents had been staged for a motion picture. Next on the program was that dear child, Mary McAlister, in "When Sorrow Weeps," a sombre picture with a tragic end, yet had its great lesson in the child influence over the woman who had sinned. Mabel Bardine, seems to be doing strenuous work in these series. "Where is My Mother?" is quite the best yet for little Mary. I wish we might have one of the older pictures presenting her with Henry Walthall, who is conspicuous by his absence from the screen round here. With his name a drawing card I wonder why we are deprived of our right to see him oftener. But then, I am only one of the public, and the managers put on what they think the average fan likes.

"The Golden God" is a good title and was well done by Alma Hanlon and Charles Hutchinson, who at times so resembles the Farnum brothers in looks and methods. Apollo-Art Dramas have thus far been most commendable, and there's a corking lesson in this of the over ambitious man who did not know when he was well off. The Vampire part was unusually well done and the entire production was full of pep.

"The Little American" is very popular here, many going twice to see it, and the best of the small city theatres are showing it to crowded houses not so much for Mary Pickford's work, but for the play itself, so timely and not overdrawn. One of the reels has been cut and I see nothing in any of it to rub anyone the wrong way except, of course, the Germans, who do not relish such realism. Far worse things have been told us here by reliable persons regarding the awful horrors perpetrated by "our friends the enemy." The patriotic American citizen will applaud and commend this offering of Artcraft.

"Annie-for-Spite" made a favorable impression on us over here and had a pretty good moral so far as dainty Mary Miles Minter went, also a somewhat new feature in the grouchy old woman with money to burn, but no love in her heart until awakened by the child she adopted for spite. Gertrude Le Brandt is some find for Mutual, and I've not seen better character work this season. There was some grumbling around me that she did not live long enough to enjoy the heart happiness injected by the innocence of the child who radiated cheer. Here we had George Fisher playing a caddish part at first, but he, too, was led aright through the heroine and all the fans thought the close-up of Mary and George was "simply great." Director Kirkwood's work deserves praise and I have not yet noticed a weak spot in his pictures. This play ought to go well anywhere for many reasons.

Many of the so-called Chippendale set went to see Margaret Illington in "The Inner Shrine," put on at the Exeter, and I hope the author, Basil King, who resides across the Charles, saw the fine screen work and the care in reproducing the dramatic features in his book. This is more than worth while, but it did jar with the fans to have Elliott Dexter play opposite in a caddish part. Hobart Bosworth, as usual did a finished piece of work. Miss Illington looks the part, and her graceful carriage was prominent here. Good picture and a credit to the Lasky players.

Observations

By Our Man About Town.

A PUBLICITY man says in one of the exchanges that the dividing line between screen and stage stars can no longer be located. That line, so far as it existed to the advantage of the stage people, was wiped out many moons ago. The names of people of any prominence on the stage who have not sought the beneficent influence of the moving picture studio and screen would not make a string long enough to form a well-fitting necklace for a small kitten.

The publicity man could, with perfect propriety, go further and state that most of the stage people have finally condescended to admit that many of the people who have been identified with the screen and perhaps never appeared upon the "boards" are "professionals," thus emphasizing the elimination of the dividing line which one time made the motion picture player look like a never ran. I have frequently heard people ask what influence brought about this change of heart on the part of the stage people, and the most correct reply to query I have heard was "It was an almost involuntary move propelled by the merits of the opposing forces." The air of superiority assumed by the stage people was the result of jealousy and fear. They saw the handwriting on the wall. It was clear to them that the photoplay and players were slowly but surely absorbing public interest. Then, gradually, the dignified ones slipped off of their pinnacles and became willing workers among the once despised "movie people." This change of front was not made without protest, however. It was not an adoption of a profession, they claimed, but a lending of art to a struggling venture for recognition by the amusement public. Some asserted that the financial inducement was so great that "it was absolutely impossible to resist." However, they got into the grind and soon learned to drop their air of superiority and become good fellows, for they found among those who were the real ones in the picture game a longer percentage of real democratic, human and genial people than they had met upon the stage. They learned that no matter how high he or she stood upon the stage the working plan for all was the same; that there is no such thing as a born screen player and all must learn the camera rules and stage workings irrespective of station in life or profession. It may be said that association really wiped out the dividing line, for the once lord and lady of footlights are often brought in close contact with people of lowly position who have an irresistible personality. Well, it is a good thing that the line has been eliminated. It is good for all concerned. Before this took place the photo player co-operated with the specially engaged star as a pet-cat plays with a strange dog and it was mighty uncomfortable for the regulars, the new comers and the directors. If the present condition reflects nothing else it shows there is at least a speaking acquaintance between the once rival factions, and whenever there is a benefit performance a generous sprinkling from both are to be found on the programs.

Some stage people have told me that much of the antagonism which existed between the identified movie players (I term them such because many of them were former stage players) and the stage people was originated and fostered by the managers who had them under contract. The managers intended to restore the people to the stage some time and wanted them always to maintain a superiority over the regular photo players. Some managers do very foolish things. It is difficult to even imagine what influence such a private injunction could have with the public. If the stage player was risking his prestige the risk developed with his entrance into the moving picture field and no amount of dignity could save it.

I sometimes wonder how some managers who enter the moving picture field with a bank roll managed to accumulate the money. I have in mind a man who was induced a few months ago to back a newly organized company, and in order to make him feel that he was the real thing and all credit for the expected greatness of the undertaking would fall upon his shoulders, he was allowed to walk about the executive headquarters and studio floors and "meet all comers." He delighted in posing and spouting and in three weeks knew so much about the business that there was no part of studio dialect he could not understand. He became so proficient that he could say in the most natural way, "If you do not do better I'll tie a tin can to you," but he was reputed to be a millionaire and nobody disputed his authority or took offense at what he said so long as he paid the salaries and bills promptly, and this he did with a readiness that won admiration. He was indifferent as to the outlay on the picture his faithful staff was producing for him. His chief concern was as to the number of machines he would be required to purchase, to count the money that would come in when the picture would be released. He knew what he was doing. He was well posted before he entered the business. I know that from his remarks when I introduced a friend to him at the studios. "This is Mr. ———, who has been with the ——— picture company for many years," said I. "O, yes?" he exclaimed, "dot vos a good gombany. For many years I got bigjures from dem. I own a lot of houses. Now I make my own. I got dem all skinned. I'll tell yer a segret. Mark me, I have lot of money. One year from now dere vill be nodding but independent mannajagjers and I will lead them," As we left the studio my friend remarked, "I wonder who instilled that line of talk into him?" It will be an interesting year to me, awaiting the outcome of the new magnate's prophesy.

More than a year ago I questioned the wisdom of picture producers in publishing contract terms with their players for advertising purposes. I was told such advertising did not amount to anything, as the public knew, so far as the salaries were concerned, the figures were fictitious. The practice eventually led to complications with the government, which at least caused much inconvenience to both parties to the contracts. Now I see exhibitors are looking into the salary question, in which they claim to have an interest, because it has an important bearing on the fixing of their rentals. They claim that large salaries and bonuses to stars, whether real or fictitious, are used as a pretext to increase the taxes upon exhibitors in the form of increased rentals. In former years one of the most stringent rules of producing companies was that the salaries paid its players should not be divulged and none observed the rule more religiously than the players themselves. One of the best known men in the business has stated that there was more to be gained under the old custom. Exibitors have learned that the salary list is a large item in the expenditures for a production and that large salaries are often created by competitive bids for the services of players, which competition causes increased producing expense and leads the producer to attempt to have the exchanges and exhibitors make this good by increased rentals. "I am well aware," said the party who gave expression to the above sentiments, "that the exhibitors have been appeased in the past by assurances that most of the published salaries were mainly fictitious and that increased rentals were made imperative by actual advance in cost of materials and others overhead expenses. But they have discovered that there have not been as many fictitious figures as have been represented. For instance, take the Triangle-Artcraft law suit in which the employment contract of William S. Hart was involved. In this case it developed that, aside from the salary he was to get Hart was offered $100,000 for his consent to an elimination of a certain clause in his contract. This is big money to offer one actor for drawing his pen through a few lines. It is as much as some very famous stage stars have received for an entire season's salary. Pictures, say the exhibitors, are not like oil, sugar and like commodities which the people must have. The war and other conditions are such that increased rentals cannot be met by increased admission fees. Occasionally the admissions may be raised for special features, but this is only a method of advertising, and the house almost invariably meets with a loss, but it usually results in reviving attendance at the regular prices, but not sufficiently to justify the management to increase expenses except on special days.

In the interest of exhibitors who are running legitimate houses and on account of location are unable to get more than the minimum price of admission charged by cheap houses, the authorities should start a cleaning up campaign and wipe out unsightly joints that have the fronts profusely decorated with gaudy lithographs of war pictures they do not exhibit. The exhibitions are rank swindles and upon that ground the licenses of the places should be revoked. The License Commissioner would perform an act of justice to the legitimate exhibitors and save the business as a whole much odium if it would put inspectors on the job and deal promptly with the offenders. Some of the places referred to can be found on the Bowery, Third avenue, other places on the east side, and some on Seventh and Eighth avenues, and in the Harlem district.

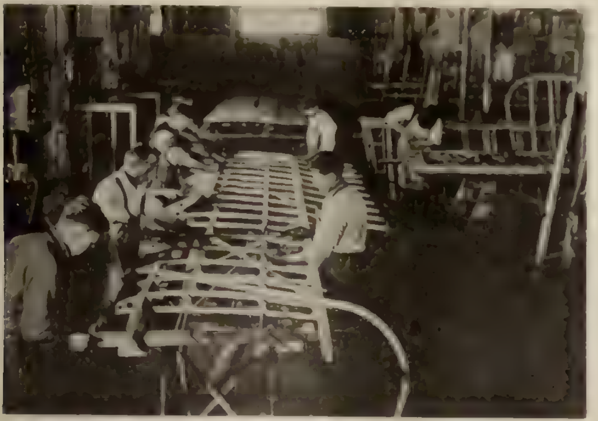
"Making an Aeroplane" (Universal).

A CAREFULLY planned illustration of how the thousands of aeroplanes being made in America for use in France are manufactured, will be found in the Universal Screen Magazine No. 30. Here we see first the roughing out of the struts, and learn that by frequent gauging a perfect streamline form is assured. The government inspector examines every part with minute care as it is turned out to forestall serious flaws in the mechanism of any one of these planes. Laminated sections of the propeller are cut from walnut wood, after which the parts are glued, trimmed and shaped by hand. Copper tips are attached to prevent the ends of the propeller from splitting, and a guage is applied to insure the correct pitch; for we learn, the slightest error will cause serious vibration. The balance of parts is so minutely adjusted that a dab of paint on one blade will maintain the balance. The making of the wing rib, the placing of the ribs of the wings, and the covering of the wings with Irish linen come next. They are then checked up on a blue print by an inspector and the Government stamp is placed on all parts. Then there is the making and adjusting of the landing wheels; and not until all parts are properly located is the motor put in place. This is an interesting subject.



Scene from "Making an Aeroplane" (Universal).

"Beads of Rose Petals." (Mutual-Gaumont).

One of the industries of California is the making of beads from the petals of the rose. Roses, we are told, arrive at the most perfect state of development under California suns. Here they are gathered by the wheelbarrowful and made into lovely necklaces. The manner in which this is done seems to be very simple, and we see the petals pulled from the full blown blossoms and laid aside to dry, after which they are sifted several times through a sieve. The final move is the mixing of the rose pomace which has been drying for fifteen days, into a paste and the shaping of it with the hands into dainty beads.

"Helping the Deaf to Hear" (Paramount-Bray).

The scenes of this picture taken at the Fanwood Institute of New York and to be found in Pictograph No. 80, shows how the deaf are actually made to hear. Hearing, we are told is a matter of sensation and sound which is carried to the brain through auditory nerves. When these nerves are destroyed sound cannot reach the brain. but through the new method of teaching, other nerves of the body are trained to catch the sound waves and transmit them effectively. The picture shows the success of the method by exhibiting a brass band composed of deaf children who play in absolute time and harmony while an audience of deaf children hear through fingers and limbs. The subject is a most interesting one and is illustrated in a comprehensive manner.

"Mounting Butterflies" (Educational-Ditmars).

Here we learn much about catching butterflies and night moths, putting them gently to sleep in a can prepared for the purpose with a pad of cotton wet with one ounce of chloroform, and putting them away in triangle of paper for future use. When a sufficient assortment has been gathered they are placed on a wet cloth for twenty-four hours to soften, after which they are pinned carefully on a grooved mounting board which has a cork bottom. After two days' drying they are ready for display, when they are placed carefully in boxes for the purpose. A beautiful pair of Celebes moths, which are exhibited in the picture, are said to be worth $500. An interesting point in the picture is the capturing of night moths by painting the trunk of a tree with a molasses mixture.

"Waterfowl" (Educational-Ditmars).

Ducks and geese of various kinds gliding about a lake open this picture in which a number of kinds of waterfowl are shown. Mallards are in evidence, and one of the prettiest things in the picture is a mallard mother taking her ducklings for a swim. A Canada goose with her young is also exhibited, and also a white swan with her offspring. The black swan of Australia is seen, and also the cassowary which lays its eggs and then struts off complacently leaving the male bird to hatch them and rear the young. A beautiful scene, subtitled "Mirror of the Lake Veiled by a Breeze," shows two swans gliding on the water as per subtitle. An especially interesting picture.

"Stars of Yesteryear" (Paramount-Bray).

Scenes at the Actors' Fund Home on Staten Island which is being contributed to each year by many who realize the debt of the public to their entertainers of the past have been photographed for the seventy-ninth release of the Pictograph. The home, set in the midst of a beautiful estate, was opened to the cameraman by Daniel Frohman, who, accompanied by Hazel Dawn, journeyed there to see that nothing was left undone to assure a careful illustration of the subject. The picture contains animated pictures of various of the well-known stars of former years.

"Home-Made Fireless Cooker" (Universal).

In the thirtieth number of the Screen Magazine we are taught a very important lesson in the making of a fireless cooker which can be arranged with very little trouble or expense. A large lard tub or candy pail, we are told, will serve the purpose of a fireless cooker. Inside of the tub or pail is placed a cushion stuffed with excelsior or sawdust, and soapstone or metal radiators supply extra heat, and necessitate the use of a galvanized iron pail and tin cover to protect the packing material. The galvanized pail is set in a three-inch wrapping of tightly packed excelsior, sawdust, powdered asbestos or shredded newspaper in order to conserve the heat. With this arrangement the meat or vegetables which have been heated to boiling point and placed in the cooker will be ready in five hours' time. An instructive illustration.

"Photographing the Moon" (Pathe-International).

The views of the moon photographed in this picture were made at the Lick Observatory in California. This observatory has the largest telescope in the world, and the views of the moon photographed through its lens are of unusual interest, showing it at various stages of its monthly transit. These views cover only a half reel of film.

"Mazamas and the Three Sisters" (Educational).

An attractive scenic released by Educational Films Corp. The "Three Sisters" are three mountain peaks in the Cascade country, located in the State of Oregon, each being over 10,000 feet in height. The Mazamas is a mountain-climbing club, deriving its name from the Mexican word for a Rocky Mountain goat. The mountain views and snow scenes are beautiful and artistic. Much of the reel is devoted to views of the "Mazamas" sliding down the steep hills, it being explained that if you are able to do this standing erect, it is called "Glisading," but if any other part of your anatomy touches the snow it is plain sliding. Robert Bruce directed the picture and the sub-titles are characteristic and clever.

"Marken, Holland" (Mutual-Gaumont).

The opening of this subject, which will be found in "Tours Around the World" No. 39, shows the island of Marken in the distance. We then approach its shores and note the quaint aspect of its buildings and its people. Fishing is its chief industry, and the customs and costumes of the Scandinavian bargemen, quaint and unlike our own, have evidently not changed with the years. The island is situated in the Zuider Zee, and the scenes which will be found there are not unlike those in other parts of the Dutch possessions.

"La Grande Chartreuse" (Mutual-Gaumont).

At the monastary of La Grande Chartreuse in southwestern France a celebrated liqueur has been made by the monks, which has added much to the fame of the monastary. In approaching it we are drawn by the cameraman through a group of limestone mountains in the Alps, which afford delightful scenic treasures. A carriage road, which was begun in 1854, leads to the monastary over the bridge of St. Bruno, named after the founder of the monastary, which was founded in 1084 and inhabited by the Carthusian monks. An attractive subject, nicely illustrated, contained in "Tours Around the World" No. 39.

"A Trip to Majorca" (Mutual-Gaumont).

One of the most interesting of travel pictures is contained in the thirty-ninth release of "Tours Around the World," entitled "A Trip to Majorca." Majorca is a Spanish island situated in the Mediterranean Sea, and in the picture we are given views of the city of Palma, which has no less than 65,000 inhabitants. Palma is situated on the hills and has narrow, gloomy streets, according to the scene of the picture. The second city of Majorca, Manacor, is also shown and the Caves of Arta nearby, which is one of the finest groups of stalactite caverns in western Europe. The Spanish types, especially the women of Majorca, with their queer costumes and head-dresses, are interesting.

Notes from Washington

Washington Correspondent Quotes Interesting Figures on Moving Picture Theater Attendance.

CLARENCE E. LINZ, correspondent to the Moving Picture World for the District of Columbia, sends the following interesting information concerning film conditions in Washington as they concern the child:

The daily attendance at the motion picture theaters of the District of Columbia, according to a report on the "Facilities for Children's Play in the District of Columbia," just issued, by the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor, is 44,088, of which 35,858 are adults and 8,230 are minors. All of these patronize the 73 city theaters, which have a total seating capacity of 27,796.

The Children's Bureau made quite an extensive study of the recreational facilities of Washington, including an investigation of film conditions. On this latter subject the report states that "Out of 250 films inspected in the course of this study, 99 were comedy scenes or farces, 68 were romantic, 51 showed crimes as main features of the stories. 23 were educational, and 7 were adventures, while 2 could not be classified. Virtue is generally triumphant, and the criminal always meets an unhappy end; but many parents feel that less emphasis should be placed on the criminal incidents. The accurate portrayal of a burglar blowing open a safe may be an object lesson to some impressionable boy with adventurous tendencies. In the old days the dime novel was condemned because it was believed to teach crime, and the cheaper melodrama always had a villain who, before his capture, taught a few tricks of his trade to the aspiring young gangster. These, however, were mere child's play in comparison with the photographic dramas of today. In some way parents and children should be assured that the play is clean and proper for them to see.

The figures obtained by a survey of 73 of the motion-picture houses give a result which is equivalent to an attendance once a week of every person in Washington. A fairly accurate survey showed that the average daily attendance was 44,088. Counting all under 18 years as minors, it was found (contrary to the usual impression) that adults were far in the lead, with 35,858 a day, the minors showing a daily 'movie' strength of 8,230. Of the total 39,416 were white, 2,740 were colored; the remainder were not reported separately. The adult whites numbered 32,242. Under 18 years, the white boys and girls numbered 7,174 and the colored 640.

The schools have tried to encourage the presentation of educational films at the theaters by arranging for groups of children to attend. Good films are also shown occasionally at a few school buildings outside of school hours, and by a few of the volunteer agencies which conduct social activities.

A Line on Robert C. Bruce

He Crosses the Sage Brush Country and Hobnobs with Traditions of the Ancient Cliff Dwellers.

AT LAST after months of silence we get a line on the well-known scenic film producer, Robert C. Bruce. Shortly after the beginning of the New Year Mr. Bruce started on a ten-months' trip for the purpose of making pictures for the Educational Films Corporation of America; and with the exception of a glimpse or two of his trials in the mud roads of Georgia and Louisiana overtaken by the spring thaw, we have seen or heard little from him. Now we have discovered traces of him in the sage brush country of Arizona and New Mexico, only to learn that he has flown to Montana, where he is at present doing the beauties of the National Glacier Park. He has visited the Grand Canyon of Arizona and snapped up its best scenic treasures, of which more anon.

At New Orleans Mr. Bruce was joined by Jesse G. Sill, a Portland cameraman. A person of "local color" was also added to the automobile cargo at New Orleans, from whence the party motored around the southern rim of the United States, keeping as close as possible to the oceans and bays that wash its shores.

Aside from being a scenic director Mr. Bruce is an apple rancher in the foothills of the Cascades, near White Salmon, Wash. Bronze of hue, wiry of build, clear-cut of feature, he appeals to one as a sincere lover of the great outdoors. On his return we expect great things in scenic illustration, building our hopes on his past efforts with artistic results.

HALL LEAVES GOLDWYN.

Emmett Campbell Hall, one of the first of the photoplay writers and for a long time a member of the Lubin staff, has left the staff of the Goldwyn company to resume free lancing. Mr. Hall joined the Goldwyn staff when it was formed and has written a number of continuities for them, including that for "Polly of the Circus," the initial Goldwyn release, for Miss Elliott, Miss Marsh and Miss Cowl, but ill health necessitated Mrs. Hall's return to their home at Glen Echo, Md., just outside Washington, and Mr. Hall decided to return to free lancing in order to be with her.

CHARLES SIMONE CONVALESCENT.

Charles Simone is slowly recovering from a painful illness which has confined him to his home for several weeks. Though not yet out of danger and much against the advice of his physician, he is quietly at work completing arrangements for his own producing company. He feels that he will be well enough to start actual operations some time next month. No definite announcement of his plans will be made until he deems it "safe" to make it.

Among the Picture Theaters

Empress Theater, Fremont, Neb.

An Attractive House, Whose Trade Mark Is "Quality Amusements."

ONE of the most attractive theaters in the State of Nebraska is the Empress, located in Fremont, a city of 10,000 inhabitants, situated about forty miles west of Omaha. It is owned by the Empress Theater Company, which has adopted as its slogan "quality amusements." N. A. Johnson is president of the company and R. B. Thomas secretary and manager.

The building is 44 by 132 feet, with a spacious lobby 28 by 30 feet. The proscenium opening is 25 by 32 feet and there is a full size stage, so that the house may also be used for the spoken drama if desired. Gray is the predominant color in the decorations.

At the back of the balcony is the operator's booth, which is very large, and, being situated near windows overlooking the street, adds materially to the comfort of the operator, providing him with a plentiful supply of fresh air. Simplex projection machines are used, and the length of the throw is 102 feet.

As Fremont is located on the Lincoln Highway, the Empress theater attracts considerable patronage from automobilists, who are glad to vary the monotony of a cross country trip by spending a few hours viewing the excellent pictures shown in this house. Triangle, Paramount and Metro service is used, and the program changed daily. Announcement of coming features is made on the back of photographs of prominent stars, which are distributed to the patrons.

Interior of the Empress Theater, Fremont, Neb., Showing Artistic Stage Setting.

The seating capacity of the house is 920. In addition to the orchestra pit, there is a commodious balcony seating several hundred, and four spacious loges. The balcony is without posts to obstruct the vision of the audience downstairs; it is supported entirely by rods suspended from the ceiling and brackets attached to the side walls. The seats in the balcony are made of wood, while those downstairs are heavily upholstered.

In the center of the stage, immediately in front of the screen, is a beautiful electric fountain, which enhances the beauty of the stage setting; artificial flowers are also extensively used in the decorations, being banked around the wings and entwined in the scenery.

A five-piece orchestra provides the music for the evening performances, while a piano alone is used for matinees. Admission prices are 5 and 10 cents in the afternoon, and 10 and 15 cents in the evening.

BENTON COMPANY TO BUILD FOUR THEATERS.

Announcement has been made by the Benton Amusement Company, incorporated for $150,000, that they will erect four motion picture houses, seating from 1,000 to 1,200 each, in the following cities in Illinois: Carbondale, Christopher, West Frankford, and Mount Vernon. These theaters will cost from $20,000 to $35,000 apiece, will be thoroughly up to date, and equipped with all modern improvements; and in addition, each house will have a large stage, dressing rooms and complete scenic paraphernalia to allow the presentation of spoken dramas from time to time.

George Colovoa is president and general manager of the company, which includes a number of prominent St. Louis citizens. The headquarters will be located at Benton, Ill., where the Benton Amusement Company already operates two theaters, the Auditorium and the Mars.

Diamond Theater, New Orleans, La.

Old Vaudeville Structure Converted Into High Class Picture House—Manager Chisholm Sees All Subjects Forming Program Before Presenting Them to Public.

THE Diamond theater has been making history in New Orleans since its opening in the latter part of April as a motion picture house. During the winter the house was known as the Lyric. It was a vaudeville house. Manager R. M. Chisholm looked at his neighbors who were running motion picture theaters, put his two fingers to his forehead in the attitude of deep thought and asked himself the question, "Why not convert the Lyric into a picture house?" A number of expert painters and decorators were put on the job, and in a remarkably short time the old Lyric was a thing of the past. So successful were the workmen that not a trace of its former personality was distinguishable in the new and beautified building. Structurally, the Diamond is ideal for a motion picture theater. It has the space, the fittings, the seating capacity, and the convenient location. It is an attractive house from the street and more attractive in the interior. It is fitted with every appliance for the showing of pictures to the best advantage, and the management allows not the slightest defect to mar the presentation of the screen subjects.

Diamond Theater, New Orleans, La.

But the most notable thing about the Diamond is the policy which was adopted at the start that no picture whatever should be shown to the patrons unless it had been screened for the management and secured his approval. This policy has been made the keynote of all of the advertising matter of the theater and the people like it. Good pictures is the slogan of the house, and it matters not whether they are program releases or states rights subjects. Manager Chisholm is a showman. His long experience with dramatic companies and productions, his years of experience in theater management before the picture had gained the ascendency, makes him a student of the psychology of the game. He studies human nature.

The Diamond has a seating capacity of 2,100; it is fitted with every appliance for the comfort and convenience of its patrons, and it has already enlisted the support of a class of educational and professional people who have never heretofore been made to feel that the personal equation is as effective in the motion picture business as in any other one.

Colonial Theater, Reading, Pa.

Carr & Schad, Inc., Adds Another Splendid Picture Edifice to Its Rapidly Growing Circuit—Cost More Than $250,000 to Erect.

THE Colonial theater, Reading Pa., which opened on April 16 last, is one of the handsomest, most modern and most efficiently operated photoplay houses in the country. It is situated on the north side of Penn street near Seventh, an advantageous location because it can draw its patronage from many directions. The structure is a testimonial to the brains and energy of the Carr & Schad interests and the motion picture industry, and unquestionably is a great credit to the city in which it is located. The Reading public named the new theater by a voting contest held at one of the Carr & Schad houses, and the management accepted the people's choice. More than $250,000 was laid out for the erection of this sumptuous picture palace and the tremendous business that the Colonial has been enjoying since its dedication is evidence of the appreciation of the public.

The Colonial seats 2,000 persons, 1,100 on the first floor and 900 on the spacious balcony, the boxes and loges, and from every part of the auditorium one can get desirable seats. Upon entering the theater, the colonial idea at once asserts itself by the eight massive marble columns, directly back of the lobby, which is also in marble. The approaches to the balcony are by stairs and inclines. A feature of the new building is the mezzanine floor with a promenade, which adds a social novelty to the institution.

The balcony is divided into three different sections, actually making three separate balconies. The six elaborate loges and the four comfortable boxes are elegantly furnished with draperies, valances of red damask, wicker arm chairs and settees. The best upholstered opera chairs with springs have been installed in the main auditorium and balcony. Ladies' retiring rooms, gentlemen's cloak and smoking rooms, telephone exchange, drinking fountains and every modern improvement has been provided for.

The interior decoration is marvelous, and puts one in mind of a wealthy man's home. The walls and ceiling show shadows of French grey and rich gold and brown. The Adam detail approaches ivory color. The embellishment and furnishing denote taste and refinement, luxury without ambitious display, and the entire appearance simply captivates everyone, for the lines of beauty must be seen to be actually appreciated.

A $25,000 Kimball organ is a part of the musical feature There is also a fifteen-piece symphony orchestra to aid in supplying the proper musical accompaniment to the pictures.

The lighting is another surprise. The dimming process is one of the features. The exterior is illuminated mainly by the flood lighting system, an innovation in this respect in Reading theaters. The lobby has been done in marble, while a massive marquee over the pavement protects the crowds and adds "class" to the beautiful structure. The ventilation of the Colonial is of such a high degree of efficiency that the air at all times is pure and fresh, and one can sit through an entertainment with all the comforts of his home surrounding him. The winter ventilation is arranged in a manner which will neither allow overheating nor underheating. The "mushroom" system is used, in which the air is forced into a plenum chamber, where it is heated, and then passes through a mushroom shaped radiator under the seats and so warms the house. The same system is used in the summer, save that a blower, which cools the air, is put into service. The main office of the management is on the second floor of the building. The operating room is equipped with all modern apparatus, including motor generators purchased from United Theater Equipment Corporation of 1604 Broadway, New York.

A great deal of the credit goes to the untiring efforts of Claude L. Carr and Henry J. Schad, the hustling managers of the Carr & Schad, Inc., both pioneers in the film business in Reding. They began operation as exhibitors about 12 years ago at the old Victor, which occupied part of the space now devoted to the lobby at the Arcadia, one of their theaters. Carr & Schad later bought the new Victor, and it was at this house that their efforts began to be realized. About five years ago they secured the Empire, and later business warranted them in taking over the Crescent. After remodeling the Empire and changing the name to the Princess, the latter house was then opened. Carr & Schad's continued success resulted in their leasing the old Palace theater, and after renovating that memorable structure to such an extent that they actually rebuilt the entire theater, they opened the Arcadia at this site on June 26, of last year. The success of Carr & Schad has been due to the fact that they have always catered to the public, offering only the best of programs playing return engagements when requested time and again, and their own personal interest in the detail affairs of the business. The policy of the new Colonial is to have only the best photoplays.

COMBINES DANCING WITH MOTION PICTURES.

H. O. Conover, leader of the Chester Cornet Band, Chester, N. J., recently introduced a novel form of entertainment in the village of Chester. Each evening in the town hall a motion picture show, consisting of a feature picture and short comedies, is given. The music is furnished by the Chester Cornet Band and, after the show, the seats are removed and dancing permitted. This innovation has proved very popular.

In addition to his duties as leader of the band, Mr. Conover also manages the entire entertainment. He advises that after a careful examination of all the trade magazines he finds the Moving Picture World answers his needs in every way.

MAJESTIC THEATER UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT.

Among the most enterprising exhibitors in Ashland, Wis., are the Latts Brothers, Abe and Louis, who several years ago entered the moving picture business with the Bijou, a small house. Later they interested L. A. Schwager and formed the Royal Theater Company and, at a cost of $50,000 built the Royal theater, one of the handsomest and best equipped in the city of Ashland. They have recently leased the Majestic theater for five years.

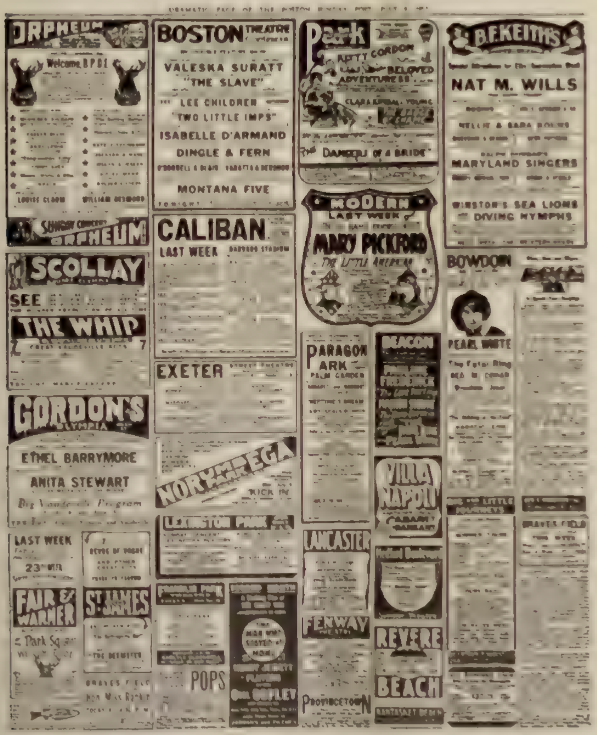
Feature photoplays and vaudeville are presented at both houses. However, since acquiring control of the two theaters, it will be the policy of the management to also present first-class road attractions from time to time.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Brunette Boston.

EVIDENTLY the Boston exhibitors take a dark view of life. Judging from their Sunday advertising they can see nothing but black ink to their advertising. We offer as Exhibit A a page from the Sunday Post. This was taken the Sunday before the Elks' National Convention. But two houses thought to use the Elk emblem as a courtesy or a business getter. The Post runs eight columns to the page, and is twenty-one inches deep, making 168 column inches, of which 154 inches are amusement advertising. Of this the picture theaters take 68 inches; not a very large proportion for the summer season. The first impression the page gives is that it is too black. The next thing noted is the comparatively small number of lines that stand out. The Orpheum at the top of the first two columns stands out because of the Elk cuts, but these would be even more prominent if the heads had a little more white space. So true is this that it would have paid had the cuts been made smaller that the white frame might have been increased. A smaller cut on white would have been more prominent than the larger size. The Orpheum bottom strip and the top of the Scollay Square advertisements are so much alike that they kill each other. The Orpheum has the advantage of the top of the page and its heading cannot be hurt, but the bottom is lost and would blanket the Scollay were it not for the reverse cut for "The Whip." But the film title is the only thing to stand up in that section of the advertisement. Gordon's gets a better display through the use of Gothic names for the stars, and presumably interest in the stars will draw attention to their plays, but the titles ride too close to the names of the stars to permit either to stand out as they should. Caliban is well displayed. It needs but the single word, for this is a unique pageant for the benefit of certain patriotic schemes, and the papers have given columns of publicity to the undeniably interesting event. The best display is that of the Modern with its shield for Mary Pickford. The Park, in spite of its top column position, is almost useless.



It is one of the accepted propositions of advertising that black grounds for white letters give them the greatest possible prominence. It ranks with the red-on-yellow, black-on-red and similar elementals. The white letter on a black ground is declared by science to be the most readily distinguishable. Undoubtedly this is true, but the white on black theory does not take cognizance of the fact that people habitually read black on white. Moreover the law is further qualified. A good strong black and a brilliant white are necessary. Absolute black and full white. The average daily newspaper produces a dirty gray black on a yellow paper, and the result is by no means good. We reproduce a rearrangement of four cuts dependent upon the white on black for display. If you will return for a moment to the cut of the full page and look at the lower left hand corner, you will note that the St. James advertisement in the second column is materially hurt by a somewhat similar reverse cut for "Fair and Warmer," just as the Orpheum and Scollay Square kill each other off. Rearranged so that the reverse cuts are on either side of the St. James, it will be seen that the St. James is the more prominent; not because of the white letter, but because of the fairly open display above and below. The placement of the house name is not wholly good, but the frame of three point rule serves to hold it all together. The Beacon shows well because they use a large letter and clear the lines. On the other hand the Franklin Park uses a condensed letter and the white gets but a small chance to show up. The Fenway shows up better for this reason, but the address, below the word "theater," is almost completely lost. Ink has [illegible] partly filled them.

Reverse cuts are good only when they are in large letter and so unusual on the page that they gain prominence through that fact, and the best means of fighting a page of heavy display is to use a frame of white within a frame of black. This costs money, but very little in proportion for the return. It is a very simple proposition. Suppose that advertising space is a dollar an inch and you buy ten inches in the form of a two fives. If five thousand persons read your advertisement, it costs you a cent a person. But suppose you take an additional two inches for a frame. Because you stand out on the page, ten thousand persons see and read your advertising. This costs you but little more than half a cent per person. Surely the additional space is a good investment. The rule works both ways, however, and the final reduction of the rule is to do what the other fellow doesn't until he starts to follow you, and then still do what he doesn't by doing what he was doing. Keep a couple of jumps ahead of the other fellow and you'll always be in the lead.

Show the cut of the full page to ten persons, asking what picture advertisement most strongly attracts [illegible] first [illegible] and probably nine out of ten will point to the advertisement of the Modern; not because the shield is a fashionably patriotic shape, but because the advertisement differs from the rest and so stands out. This is not so much due to the shape as to the white space around the corners, and the display. Taken by itself the advertisement does not stand up very well. There is too much small text to be gone over, but the essential facts stand out full. The name of the house, the name of the star and play and the fact that it is the last week are all comprehended in the first glance. The rest does not matter so much. And not only is this all told plainly, but the attractor line, "Uncle Sam's Favorite Niece," calls the attention of the reader to the stars in "THE LITTLE AMERICAN"

THE GREATEST PATRIOTIC STORY EVER SCREENED

A SPECTACULAR CINEMA PRODUCTION THAT STRIKES A RESPONSIVE CHORD IN THE BREAST OF EVERY AMERICAN. COMBINING THE ART OF MARY PICKFORD WITH THAT OF CECIL DE MILLE at the bottom of the advertisement, and once down there the eye will get something of the small type. But the small lettering does not tell much. It says that it is a spectacular cinema production that strikes a responsive chord in the breast of every American, but it does not tell why. It does not tell of the torpedoed ship, nor of the grip of the story, it merely makes some broad general statements utterly unsupported by any clinching argument. A film fan does not go to the theater to see a spectacular cinema production unless he knows something about it. He does go to see the ship sunk by a U-boat—and Artcraft—because he knows that it will be well done and well worth seeing. He may have read in the papers the account of the picture, but even if he has, unless he is a most ardent fan it will be well to remind him of the fact that this is the particular Pickford offering that features. There are many Pickfords being shown. Tell him that this is the one in which the ship is sunk. The advertisement runs 4½ inches across two columns.

The Park takes an additional inch, and the two fives look more than one inch larger, but the Park crowds its space terribly. The scene sketch is too small to attract much attention or to suggest much of the tableau, and the few display lines are killed almost entirely by being crowded. Hand lettering is always harder to read than type, and it seldom pays to letter the entire advertisement. It does pay to mortise, if necessary, or the design can be drawn to such a scale that the type lines can be set up and pasted on the sheet and then the whole can be reduced, though even this will blur the outlines and make it more difficult to read the text. Generally these drawn designs are done much larger than the reproduction. They look well on a whole sheet of drawing board where they look badly in the reproduction. All drawn designs should be examined through a reducing glass. In the house trade mark there is a streak of white to be seen under the house name. This is the script signature of the house manager, apparently, but it reproduces so poorly and comes so close to the edge that it looks more like a fault in the cut than anything else, and serves no good purpose since the name cannot be read. Turn to the cut of the full page and note how in the further reproduction the Keith advertisement alongside shows up, on one hand and the Boston on the other. The very clearness of these two theater advertisements makes the Park seem more obscure. The Boston is all type and the Keith house has only a cut head, but both are better, though they cost considerably less. A drawing pays only when the drawing will give an appeal so much stronger than the type display that it is economy to pay the cost of the drawing. Where a drawing is used and throwaways are employed, it is a good scheme to have two cuts made, one for the advertisement and the other for the distributed matter, for a good two fives should be just as good as a nine by ten throwaway. That is the truest test of good advertising.

TONIGHT—MARY PICKFORD in THE PRIDE OF THE CLAN

The Scollay Square plays vaudeville but features the pictures in two fours. Eliminate the vaudeville section of the advertisement and you would have a display for "The Whip" that would work equally as well as an inch and a half, single column or a cross page. This is the real test of value. The "See" lines are not well chosen. A race between auto and train is no novelty these days, nor is a terrible railroad wreck. These have been used in numerous features. The line "See the winning races at the track" is meaningless. All races are won if there is a race. There is no appeal. See the fiercely contested races might be better, but the copy writer has overlooked the real factors of "The Whip" and has picked out the sensation stuff. That "The Whip" is a Drury Lane melodrama is something that has a meaning in America. That is offers an unusual story is more important than the train wreck. The argument lines are badly done, but the display is well done, and here the reverse cut works well because it stands out from the rest of the type and is large enough to be taken in at the first glance without effort. The cut of the electric fan builds up the suggestion of coolness that the theater seeks to convey, but you have to look twice to see that it really is a fan and not merely an ornament. A more open drawing would have helped.

The daily advertising is very small. That in the Post runs but 10½ inches; mostly picture houses as the drama houses are closed for the season. It is not easy to get a display in an inch or an inch and a half of space, and the best that can be done is to note the attractions in brief, but there is really a better display in the small daily space than in the page on Sundays because the advertisements do not kill each other with the same enthusiasm shown in Sundays. The general average of Boston is decidedly low. A surprising thing is that the Hearst paper gets but a small percentage of the advertising. In most cities the Hearst sheet leads, but in Boston they seem to make less effort, and yet Boston has comparatively few papers in proportion to the large suburban territory served, and it should pay to go into all of the established sheets on Sunday, at least.

Wholesaling.

F. A. Wilson, of the American Maid Film Co., Minneapolis, sends in an envelope, 25,000 of which were distributed to homes, while 5,000 blotters were put into the offices. Thirty thousand pieces of advertising for one subject is a pretty large order, even in a city. The film was Hall Caine's The Deemster, showing at the Lyric. The blotter shows well executed cuts of Mr. Caine and his son, well printed and with appropriate text. The envelopes are cheap manila (but not too cheap) similar to the telegraph envelopes, and printed in blue. In the corner is "A Message for You. Important and Interesting." This is split by three-point rule between. In place of the address is a thirty point "It's Yours—Open It." There is something insistent about the phrase, and yet it is not offensive. The enclosure is colloquial in the extreme, perhaps too extreme in phrase to appeal most strongly to those most likely to be interested in the visualization of a Caine novel, but it certainly does stick in the memory. We quote the opening phrases:

> Oh, no; you won't.
> Your first impulse was to throw this away.
> But you are not going to do it until you have read every word, thank you.
> What's all this strange communication about?
> Listen!
> What're you going to do next week?
> "None of your business," did you say? Well, now, don't "lip up" until we have sung our little song.
> Did you ever hear of a distinguished, beard-garnished gentleman by the name of Hall Caine? You recollect that he wrote "The Deemster," "The Christian," "The Eternal City," "The Manxman," "The Bondsman," "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" and enough others to earn for him the honor of being the world's greatest living author.

Evidently everyone who gets such a letter is going to forget it, and Mr. Wilson says it brought the crowds, which is the final answer. If it gets the money, it's good. The way the envelope scheme is worked is better than average. It puts new life into an old stunt. Try that. It's yours—open it. You will find that it will work for you, too; perhaps better than the fake telegram, not alone because it is newer, but because it is better.

Unkind.

A recent issue of Paramount Pointers, Philadelphia, tells of a crowd of cars in front of a local house and reports that there were "thirty automobiles and six flivvers." That's no way to speak of the Pacifist Perambulators. The same issue announces that Walter Brookes, of the Auditorium, Coatesville, will loan a mortised cut he had made for The Bottle Imp. Gordon (100%) Fullerton and Ralph Ruffner are swapping cuts up around Puget Sound and now the City of Brotherly Love is getting more brotherly. In time we hope to see a regular exchange of this special advertising material. Will Mr. Brookes please be reminded that it is a long time since we heard from him last?

On another tack we lift this, which in turn was lifted from the Philadelphia North American:

> Sometimes—but not often—on a theater program one will see "By Request" after the announcement of a repeated production. "By request" means that someone in the audience was considerate enough to convey his impressions of the picture to the manager, which is what they all want, but unfortunately seldom get.
> Often enough patrons are willing and even desirous of seeing the same picture twice, or even of obtaining a picture they have only heard of. If they would tell the theater manage> ment, there would be nine chances out of ten in favor of getting it. After all, the main object the authorities have in view is the satisfaction of the public, and if they have to guess at their taste all the time there is small opportunity for invariably hitting it right.

> Almost every exhibitor is able to obtain the pictures he wants from his local dealer. And almost every member of an audience is able to obtain the one he wants from the exhibitor. If the two could only get together there would be ever so much more success in the making up of programs.
> "By request" is one of the best advertisements a picture house can have. It means that the onlooker and the manager are working in unison.

There is a good suggestion here. Follow it up. And lastly comes this gem:

> Summer is coming! Just as well might the captain of a liner say to the engineer, "Draw the fires, we're going full speed now," as for a theater proprietor to say, "The summer is coming, I'll get a cheaper service." Don't cut down! Build up!

This should be set in display. The time to hustle is when business is good, to keep it good. You can't save money by program cutting. If they won't come for what you have, offer something better, not something cheaper. It's not economy, it is business suicide to cut down. Keep the prices down and the program up.

Liberal.

There is nothing stingy about A. L. Middleton, of the Queen, De Queen, Ark. He used the form letter invitation winding up with a coupon to be torn off. You simply signed your name, wrote your address and gave the number of persons in your family and the entire family could get in free any night except Saturday. And each letter was pen signed by both Mr. and Mrs. Middleton. Special envelopes were used, printed up:

A FREE PASS.
For.....................................and family
De Queen, Arkansas.

Naturally that got the attention and the letter made good the promise. The essential part reads:

> If you were never in a picture show in your life, come just this once as our guest. We will consider it an honor to have you present and do everything possible to make you enjoy the visit.
> If you and your family are regular patrons, then we are anxious to show this much appreciation of your past patronage and extend this invitation to you.
> Yours for a greater QUEEN,
> A. L. MIDDLETON,
> MRS. A. L. MIDDLETON.
> Tear off here.
> Name of head of family.....................................
> How many in family..........Street address.................
> Good Any Night This Week Except Saturday

The letter is a shade too long, requiring an extra length sheet, and the printer had to use some wrong font e's and t's to get it all in, but they read it for the sake of the pass. Mr. Middleton has gotten his house organ into shape now and he looks like a comer.

Better Sans Cuts.

The Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., is using the Kraus program fronts, but has dropped the inside page cuts and really gets a better display, as the reproduction of the inside page shows. Using a black ink instead of trying to imitate the front cover also gives a better effect. They were quick to get the idea. It may save others trouble to recall the reason. The Kraus fronts are offset covers, brilliantly printed from costly plates with a careful make-ready that permits a profit only when the cost of that make ready is distributed over a run of a million. The house, using these covers, sought to get the same effect with a job ink and sixty screen cuts, with the natural result that poor press work showed up the cuts and they looked worse than usual through comparison. Job type seems to be about the limit of ability in the Easton print shops, and the house is wise to keep within the limitations. Just mentally make note that any sort of special program front will inevitably kill the coarse screen cuts you add, and stick to type for your announcement. As a matter of fact good printers could have done a rather better job of composition on this, but it is better than cut work with colored inks. Black ink is always the safest play with an incompetent pressman.

The Stillman program is not what it was when C. E. Madden got it out, but now and then it runs a good line. Here is one that will work on any program:

> MERELY A SUGGESTION.

> Do you think that some of the folks at home would be interested in seeing this little magazine? We have tried to make this issue worth while; if you think we have succeeded, slip it into some convenient pocket and take it home with you. Then we'll know what your opinion really is.

It might be well to drop the "Then we'll know, etc.," and use instead "Or sign the coupon below and hand an usher and it will come to you each week." That would be better still. On the Stillman program the paragraph runs at the top of the column with nothing to direct attention to the address coupon at the bottom of the same column.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Mr. Tourneur's Opinions.

SEVERAL times we have disapproved of the opinions presumably expressed by Maurice Tourneur, of the Famous Players. We say "presumably" because of the ever-prevalent press agent and his little trick of blaming his ravings on others. Lately we wrote Mr. Tourneur and asked him just what he personally thought, and this is his reply:

> I do not think I have ever said that a director is the whole thing in the production of a picture. My contention is this—that it seems almost impossible to get a decent story at the present writing. I admit that .there are several good script writers in the business but they all seem to be doing something else besides writing scripts. Give me good human stories, stories that don't have to be fixed up and it will add ten years to my life that I know have already been deducted for no other reason than worrying over the material handed me to make into pictures. If you have anyone in mind who can write stories that do not need to be fixed up, I would deem it a great favor if you could bring us together. I'll see to it that either the firm or myself buy his stories—and at his price.

We think this represents more nearly our own idea of Mr. Tourneur than what the press agent has made him say, but we should like to know just what Mr. Tourneur's ideas may be as to the script which does not need fixing up. We will grant that there is no script coming into his hands that Mr. Tourneur or any other of the few really competent directors cannot improve in spots without spoiling the flavor of the real author; just as there never was a good play produced that did not represent the combined efforts of the author, the stage manager, the production man, himself, perhaps, and lastly the critics. Of course, in this field, the comment of the critics cannot alter the production as is the case with a play of the stage newly produced each night and always capable of change. For this reason, if no other, the director of a photoplay must be more competent than his brother of the stage, and he must cut and change more liberally. But .emendation is one thing and complete revision is another, and Mr. Tourneur's views on just how much change is permissible would be of interest.

But Mr. Tourneur's contention that at this moment it is almost impossible to get a decent story, is correct only in part. He very probably knows that the Famous-Players-Lasky system of script handling has, of late, driven elsewhere all self-respecting authors. No one who could write good stories could do business with the Turnbull reading room. His first step seems to have been to throw out those to whom H. R. Durant looked for material. His second was to turn back the stuff sent in for the thousand dollars each script offer. Apparently he did not want to do business with authors in general, and authors in general stayed away. Now, if the recent announcement that each production man can have his own script man and make his own choice still holds good, Mr. Tourneur can, in time, procure for his own use the work of men who can write, but as he himself points out, most of the men who could write good stories are now doing something else, because the conditions in the Lasky-Famous Players' studio have been duplicated in practically every other studio of any consequence. The staff writers have been afraid for their jobs and have discouraged the men who can write better stuff then they can—which is not always saying much.

From another angle, the fiction writer has been disgusted with script writing. If he went at the work with the determination to make a name for himself, he was soon persuaded that he was wasting his time. His script was thrown away as being not worthy of notice. His original synopsis was taken and distorted until little remained of the novel. Then he saw the production ascribed to him and, if he had any literary conscience whatever, he fled shrieking and did not repeat the experiment.

It would be interesting to take the files of this paper for the past two years and check off the names of those who were announced as about to write directly for the screen. How many of those did more than one story? How many did more than two? Of course, the studio staffs will explain that the stuff supplied by these practiced writers was hopelessly impossible, but they do not explain that they gave no real aid, and made no actual effort to train and encourage these writers of note. Not many of them, perhaps, would have made good in any circumstance, for fiction work and photoplay are much further apart than most persons realize, but some of these competents could have made more than good; so good that the editorial writers would have become worried about their jobs, for the sole excuse many of these staff men now have is that they write better material than is coming in, and the only reason this is true is that they have discouraged and driven from the field the men who could have made good.

And many directors have worked in with the staff men by also trying to show their employers how necessary they are to the establishment and how much they have to change and alter after the script comes into their hands. If Mr. Tourneur finds it difficult to obtain good material, he will find that the bulk of the difficulty lies in the barrier raised by the studio writers and the second rate directors.

For that matter some directors cannot see stories. We know of at least one instance where several stories done turned out so well on the screen that the director could not see that later stories by the same writer were as good, and the market was closed. Some of the later stories were probably better, but the director could not see this through the script, and so he passed the idea over. This does not apply to Mr. Tourneur, of course, nor to a half dozen others, but these really qualified men are suffering for the sins of their associates.

It is useless to suppose that the fact that Mr. Tourneur alone will be willing to buy and produce as bought will tempt back to the field those who have left, but until there are more really competent directors and until these directors insist that the editorial departments back them up properly, there will be no chance for real pictures. In a more remote day one director used to obtain good stories by ignoring the stories the editor sent him and working over the rejections. There are fewer good stories in the mails today because the best writers have turned to other lines, but they could be won back through a concerted offort, and only through a concerted effort can they be won. To quote from Moving Picture Stories:

> When production flounders, when bank balances run low, when extinction threatens and fire vaults are stored with unsalable junk, when interested inside advice fails of solving the problem, producers may at last realize that they are traveling in a circle and make a break for the Safety Zone of the real scenario writer.

Here is a producer who is willing and anxious to get good original scripts, but he will probably find that he is handicapped by conditions from within. But don't rush all your stuff to Mr. Tourneur. When he says he wants first class stories, he means thoroughly competent work. That is the other point of view. Directors are sometimes afraid to express a desire for good work because they are promptly inundated with the poor work of those who are too stupid, even, to realize that their work is worse than poor.

Prepare.

If you want to be an author and think you have it in you, the best preparation for a successful career is to purge your mind of all the bromides. Write out all the stories of the beautiful young girl who dies for love and the poor but honest young man who perishes because Gwendolyne weds the man with the sixteen-cylinder car. Write the regulation triangles until you are sick of them yourselves. Write all the stories in which you employ incidents in which you yourself have figured and which, at the time, you thought should make good stories. Write all the temperance stories or the free rum stories and the war stories and the peace propaganda stories you have in your system. Get rid of any other old junk of that sort and then—and not until then—you can start with a clean slate and a clear vision and write the stuff worth while. There are some stories that you can no more help writing than you could help having whooping cough when you were a child. You simply must write them, so write and feel no shame. Other and better writers have done the same before you. Others who come after you will give the same offense. It is no crime to write of the little child that brings two loving hearts together. The crime is committed when you send that sort of stuff to the editors. Have your mental housecleaning and get it over early, then start in and plug away on worth while stuff, and by that time you will know what is worth while and what is without value.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Back Again.

Well, here I am, back on the job again, ready to work with you, and to help you in any way possible. You need the work of this department, and we need your co-operation and assistance, so let us all pull together for the benefit of the industry broadly, and for the benefit of the finished result on the screen in particular.

And right here I pause to express, as well as such a thing may be expressed in weak words, my sincere, heartfelt appreciation of the splendid hospitality and the warm greeting and welcome encountered almost everywhere. The exceptions are so few as to be scarce worthy of note. It would be impossible to convey, through the medium of words, my feeling of graititude to the almost a hundred unions of operators, and the many exhibitors leagues, or to the thousands of individual exhibitors, theater managers and operators who have contributed to the making endurable the awful grind I have been through. But you may rest assured that your spendid reception, and your magnificient kindness, individually and collectively, will not be forgotten so long as life shall last, and that I shall earnestly endeavor to justify your faith and your friendship by bending every effort in assisting toward the establishment of the moving picture industry upon a final firm foundation as a high-class form of theatrical amusement. For by so doing I can best serve you, since a benefit to the industry automatically becomes a benefit to every man, woman and child connected therewith, and no benefit is, or can be more keenly, or more instantly felt than that which has to do with the proper presentation of the photoplay to the audience.

I have not said a personal goodbye, but only au revoir! for we shall, I hope, meet again. And now, I repeat, let us work earnestly together for the betterment of the projection of the photoplay, which includes those many things having directly to do with the result upon the thousands of screens in this and other countries.

High Amperage.

Louis Phillips, Waterbury, Connecticut, has the following to say with regard to high amperage:

> In looking over the June 23d issue of the department I took particular notice of the remarks you made with reference to Brother Bowen's article on high amperage. Must say I was pleased to read your views of the matter, which I feel to be correct. But before going further I wish to say that Brother Bowen deserves credit for his excellent work. I myself have witnessed a demonstration of his ability as an operator; also I have conversed with him personally, and find him to be a good fellow all around. Myself, as well as many of the boys of Local 273, New Haven, have experimented extensively, and have exchanged ideas with one another on the high amperage matter, as well as on the solid negative carbon trim. Thus far my experiments have demonstrated that when you exceed 70 or 75 amperes you are only getting imaginery added brilliancy, and are actually throwing good money away. In the different houses to which I have been sent by Mr. S. Z. Poli to install new equipment or to try and improve screen results, I find that in every case where the boys were using 70 or 80 amperes with two cored carbons they are now using 45 to 60 amperes with a solid negative electrode or carbon, with as good, if not better results. The trouble with most of our boys in using, or trying to use a solid negative, is (operators please take careful note of this, Ed.) they do not keep the point of the negative close enough to the crater of the positive, hence the negative will burn round instead of to a needle point, which causes spitting and an uncontrollable arc. If they will bear in mind to keep the negative needled by keeping the carbon well fed, they will increase the amperage at the arc, and secure a clear and whiter field on the screen. I also maintain that if this were done there would be a large saving, not only in current, but also in carbon, as it does not require so large a solid carbon as it does a cored one. I, myself, was several weeks practicing before I learned to successfully control the arc when using a solid negative carbon, but now I would not have anything else.
> And now with regard to votalization when using high amperage: If you place a pan of water on the stove and heat it under such circumstances that its vapor is permitted to freely escape into the air the temperature of the water can never be raised above that of its boiling point, which is 220° F. (isn't it 212 instead of 220? Ed.) or 100 degrees C. Under these conditions the temperature of the boiling point of water represents its votalization temperature. This is the general law for all substances, provided the vapor formed in the process of votalization be free to escape into the air. Under this condition the temperature of the liquid will remain constant during its votalization, the increase in temperature of the heat source only having the effect of accelerating votalization, and increasing the formation of vapor. I believe this same law applies to the carbon crater, and that the temperature of the positive crater is limited to the tempearture of the boiling or votalization point of carbon under atmospheric pressure. This being true, an increase in the current strength (amperage) has no effect upon the temperature of the crater, but serves only to increase the volume of votalization, consequently the crater area.

I believe no extended argument is necessary on this particular matter. Brother Phillips simply endorses my own position with regard to this argument. Brother Bowen, if I rightly remember, was not sure of his position, but merely "believed" that the quickening of the process of votalization would serve to increase the temperature of the crater. I hold the analogy presented by Brother Phillips to be a good one. I see no reason why there should be any difference in the application of the law quoted, as between carbon and water.

With regard to close feeding of the arc when using a solid carbon film, why that would, of course, be relative. I would first have to know what friend Phillips means by "close feeding." If you carry your arc too short, and at the same time give your lamp the necessary angle, you will have considerable light interference, and that is bad. In this connection it has been pointed out to me that where operators use silver tipped carbons of too large diameter for the amperage, pitting the condenser is increased by reason of the fact that the metal coating does not burn off far enough down, but comes up too close to the tip of the carbon. The size of the negative carbon is, of course, of considerable importance, since the smaller the point the less light interference there will be, because it is a fact that where the solid carbon is used it is not practical to carry as long an arc as can be carried with two cored carbons.

What Will Be the Limit.

Recently a theater manager asked the editor the following question: "I understand there are now a few operators receiving $50.00 a week. Do you think it is possible for an operator to be worth that amount of money and, if so what do you think should be and will be the limit in the matter of operator's salary?"

This is a somewhat difficult question to answer insofar as concerns the latter part of the query. The modern operator in a high class theater is placed directly in charge of an in-put wattage often running in excess of 5,000. He takes direct charge of machinery, valued at anywhere from $800 to $2,000. He takes charge of films having a physical valuation of from $600 to $1,000. He is expected to reproduce upon the screen productions which cost well up into the tens of thousands, and even up into the hundreds of thousands of dollars. It is his duty to reproduce upon the screen the art of artists receiving many thousands of dollars a week—artists who really are among the best the world has ever produced. He has direct charge of the very heart of an amusement enterprise (theater) representing an investment of anywhere from $5,000 upward, the income of which depends much upon the excellence of his reproduction upon the screen of the photoplays intrusted to his care.

I don't believe that any up-to-date, modern theater manager will question the statement that it requires brains and real ability to handle a proposition of this kind, in the best possible way, and certainly no man of intelligence would question the statement that the life of the machinery in charge of the operator, as well as its efficiency of operation, will depend upon the knowledge of the operator, and the application he makes of that knowledge. What the average theater manager does not understand, however, is the fact that the operator who works for low wages is not necessarily a cheap operator. In fact, he may be exactly the opposite—a very expensive one. No one having even slight knowledge of the handling of films will, for one moment, question the statement that tremendous damage is caused by ignorance and carelessness on the part of the operator, and any damage done must, of course, be paid for, and the box offices of the country are the goats.

It is quite true that there are now a few operators receiving $50.00 per week, and I venture the assertion that they are well worth it. It would not be a paying proposition for the houses employing these men to discharge them and employ cheaper operators. As a matter of fact, the probability is that these same houses will voluntarily increase, rather than decrease, the salary of their operators. Just how high operators' salaries in high class city houses will go, I do not know, but I certainly would not regard $75 per week as anything in the nature of excessive. Men in this class of theater are projecting film service which cost hundreds of dollars a week, and it must be projected intelligently and efficiently or there will be a loss of ticket sales at the box office and, in a house of that kind, it would take but very little loss to far more than overbalance a difference as between $50.00 and $75.00 in a week.

As a matter of fact, I have long contended, and do still contend, that the responsibility placed upon the shoulders of the modern operator is out of all proportion to the wages he receives. A $20 man reproducing upon the screen a $50,000 photoplay, and the art of a $10,000 a week artist, is, to my mind, utterly incongruous. It doesn't fit together right. When you pay $20 a week, Brother Manager, you get precisely $20 worth of brains—no more, and no less, except in isolated cases, which only serve to prove the rule. It must, however, be remembered that, whereas $20 a week isn't going to buy very much in New York City, it may buy fully twice as much out in Centerville, Iowa. It is not, of course, to be expected that the Centerville, Iowa, manager could, or ever will, pay $50 or $75 a week. That would, I think, be absurd. But I do believe even the Centerville manager would, in the long run, be the gainer to pay $25 or perhaps $30 a week, which would, perhaps, everything considered, purchase about the same grade of talent that $50 would get in New York City—that is to say, relatively. There really isn't the necessity for the same degree of skill in Centerville, or rather for the same wide range of knowledge that there is in the big theaters in New York City, because the big theaters use much heavier amperage, and play to patrons who pay from 25 cents to one dollar admission; also the equipment of these theaters is much more costly and elaborate in every way.

I am thoroughly and firmly convinced that, within reason of course, increased operators' salaries will bring increased results and efficiency which will very much more than compensate for the outlay.

Standards.

The convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers met in Chicago July 16 and 17. Press of other business prevented the editor from attending any of its sessions, except just for a few moments of the first day. This I regret, because I would certainly have protested against some of the action taken with regard to adoption of standards. The convention adopted the following, so I am informed, though no official report of the proceedings has yet reached me, on this, the 25th day of July:

> A—Film Speed: A film movement of sixty feet per minute through motion picture machines shall be considered a standard speed.
> B—Frame Line: The dividing line between pictures on a motion picture film shall be exactly midway between the marginal perforations.
> C—Projection Angle: The maximum permissible angle in motion picture projection shall not exceed twelve degrees (12°) from a perpendicular to the screen surface.
> D—Projection Lenses: The outside diameter of projection lens tubes shall be of the following diameter: 38 mm., 46 mm. and 65 mm.
> E—Projection Lens Foci: The focus of motion picture projection lenses shall increase in ¼-inch steps to 8 inches, and from 8 to 9 inches in ½-inch steps.
> F—Projection Lens Mounting: Picture projection lenses shall be so mounted that the light from the picture aperture shall have an uninterrupted full path to the rear component of the lens.
> G—Picture Aperture: The film picture aperture in a projection machine shall be 0.906 inch wide and 0.679 inch high.
> H—Projection Lens Light: The standard height above the floor to the center of the projection lens of a motion picture machine shall be 48 inches.
> I—Film Perforations: The dimensions and location of film perforation shall be in accord with the illustrating diagram herewith. (The diagram is not given here.)
> J—Standard Picture Film shall be 1⅜ inches in width and carry a picture for each four perforations, the vertical position of the picture being longitudinal of the film.
> K—Lantern Slide Mat Opening: A standard opening for a lantern slide mat for use in conjunction with motion pictures shall be 3 inches wide by 2¼ inches high.
> L—Thumbmark: The thumbmark spot on a lantern slide shall be located in the lower left-hand corner next the reader when the slide is held so as to be read against a light.
> M—Lantern Strip: A red binding strip shall be used on the lower edge of the lantern slide.

Let us examine into the matter from the practical point of view, taking the actions up section by section.

A—This is a matter for serious consideration, and one which this department has been carefully considering for more than four years, without arriving at any very definite conclusion. In fact we have hesitated mostly by reason of the almost universal carelessness with regard to projection machine tension. There is no doubt but that film sprocket holes will give satisfactory service as a speed of seventy feet per minute, provided machine sprockets be kept in proper condition, projector tension (film gate) be properly adjusted, and that the speed of projection of the entire programme be such that it does not force excessive tension. And even under the present deplorable practice I am convinced that a standard of sixty-five feet per minute is entirely practical. The trouble with the low standard is that with present day brilliancy of projection, added to the impossibility of securing revolving shutter conditions in many theaters, sixty per minute approaches under many local conditions, entirely too close to friend flicker, and that is very bad. Speed of projection (which is also camera speed) is not a thing to be lightly approached. In my opinion a very serious error has been made in this item. In fact I believe an error was committed in considering it at all at this time. Other things should have come first, particularly film gate tension devices, now wholly lacking on one machine, and by no means ideal on others.

B—This is excellent; also it was needed.

C—Am not prepared to comment on this at this time, except that I had rather it had been expressed in terms which the average operator can understand. Expressing things in degrees is all very well for architects, but architects are not always employed, and I know I will myself have to look the matter up and see how many inches per foot twelve degrees drop stands for. Why not have said "shall not exceed three inches to the foot, or whatever it is"

D—Thirty-eight millimeters means 1.[illegible] inches, which would give us an actual lens opening of probably about ¾ of an inch. This may be necessary in extremely short focal length lenses, but I don't believe it. And even if it is I believe that better results would be obtained with a larger diameter lens stopped down to required diameter. Forty-six mm. is equal to 1.81102 inches and sixty-five mm. equals 2.55905 inches. with these two latter standards I find no fault, except that it may operate, in many cases, to compel the operator to work with a lens which will waste a large percentage of his light. In my opinion the practical thing to do is adopt a single standard of lens diameter, which same should approach the last named standard. Projector frame construction should be such that a lens of that diameter may be brought within one inch of the film, and a simple card of instruction to the operator, attached to the lens, will do the rest. I freely admit there are some cases in which this would represent some waste in first cost, but it would, nevertheless, viewed as a whole, represent large saving. But there is still another important angle. Really high class projection lenses are of huge importance, in that they not only give better screen results in definition, but also save their own cost in economy of operation—light saving. This department only awaits the return of normal conditions to embark upon a strenuous campaign of education, to the end that high class projection lenses (lenses costing not less than $75) be installed. We expect to convince theater managers that the doing of this will represent true economy. And how will they get lenses to fit this standard? You may say that this is only the outside diameter, adopted for convenience of machine manufacturers. Granting this, I am still not at all certain the action was a wise one. Moreover, it was taken, so far as I know, without the committee on optics having been consulted, or even called together. And don't tell me this has nothing to do with optics, for it most emphatically has.

E—Let us hear from operators on this.

F—Comment unnecessary

G—Seems to me it might have been possible to adopt a standard which would not consume the whole multiplication table to figure necessary lens focal lengths. Don't know, however. .9 x .7 might be impractical. Would like to hear from Don Bell, however, as to why it is—if it is.

H—Umph! Wonder what this means. Very few machines set level when in use. Presumable, however, it refers to height of pedestal, or table, when projector is in level position.

I—So far as I can see, the standard is good. But I would rather trust this particular thing to the knowledge and wisdom of Don Bell than to all the rest of us put together.

J—Comment unnecessary, except why not also include that hugely important item, film thickness, which has directly and enormously to do with excellence in screen result, as well as life of film?

K—Only approximately correct, I believe. Would not three inches by two and three-tenths have been better?

L—Good.

M—Excellent.

Now don't imagine that I am merely criticising to hear my typewriter rattle. These matters have directly to do with the work of the operator, and with economy of projection, as well as with the finished result on the screen. The thing the non-practical man is apt to overlook is that the setting of a standard which seems to be entirely practical, and would be, viewed as a single unit, may directly affect several things, which to the non-operator appear to have no connection therewith. I am anxious to see the Society of Motion Picture Engineers succeed. It is a body sadly needed. I am myself a member thereof. BUT I am not going to sit silent and see it do things which I believe to be wrong.

I would like to hear from operators with regard to the standards I have been discussing. Don't sit silent until the thing is done past repair, and then put up a wail that it is wrong. If you think it is wrong NOW is the time to lift your voice in protest. But don't merely say it is wrong. Give your reasons why.

Chicago Local Union 110.

As you all know, this department has been at outs with the leadership of Local Union No. 110 for several years. During that period of time we have felt called upon to, upon several occasions, say some things with regard to that body which were far from pleasant. We deeply regretted the necessity for this, but we nevertheless believed it to be a necessity, and he who fails to perform a duty because that duty is unpleasant, or may have unpleasant consequences, is lacking in courage, and unfit to fill a position which is constantly calling for inititative. We simply did our duty, as we saw it, invariably qualifying our action with the statement that it was not local 110 we were hammering, but its leaders.

And now it is with a feeling of devout thankfulness we are able to say that local 110 has at last awakened to the situation, has shaken off the incubus of wrong leadership and is today as clean and upright a body as any in the land. I have already spoken of these matters in the account of my visit to Chicago, but feel it only right the matter should be set forth, briefly, in the department in which my censure of that body appeared.

Local 110 is one hundred per cent. organized. It numbers among its membership those who would be a distinct credit to any organization. As a whole, I believe it will rank above the average, and now that its affairs are in honest and competent hands, I look forward with confidence to progress in the art of projection in that city. The editor now carries an honorary membership card in 110, and is proud of it. Any help he can give, or any this department can give the Chicago men will be a pleasure. One thing I would like to suggest, if I may, viz.: As soon as is practical, the offices, it seems to me, ought to be moved into better quarters. It might cost more, but the money would be, I firmly believe, well expended. A union is a business institution, pure and simple. If I have business with a business concern and find it occupying nice offices, in a nice building, that fact [illegible] create a far better impression than would the [illegible]. [illegible] my own local, has really very nice offices, in a very fairly high grade office building. It costs much more than the way we used to do it, yes; but you could not get local 306 to move its offices back into a dingy, ill-kept Third avenue office, such as she used to occupy, even if given rent free. I hope I may be pardoned for speaking of this matter. But I am of the opinion that the sooner a complete severance of everything which has to do with the past is made, including location, the better it will be for all concerned, and I have faith to believe the above will be accepted in the spirit in which it is intended. I also trust that a job will be found for Brother Goldberg, so located that he will not be abliged to pass any book stores on his way to and from work. It must grouch him terribly to see so many pirates (authors) getting away with it. My regards to my brothers of 110. May she forge ahead in power and in knowledge, which is itself power, and become a body to which we can point as a model for others to emulate. And under President Armstrong's leadership, assisted by the present corps of able officers, I see no reason why this should not come to pass. If I or this department can help to that end, say the word and it shall be done.

Film Waxer.

At last we have what seems to be a real solution of the emulsion-sticks-to-the-tension-springs nuisance, which is not only the bugbear of the operator who handles first run film, but works an immense amount of damage to the film itself, in many cases actually ruining new films worth well over one hundred dollars. The waxer in question is the invention of Alexander Weiss, a Cleveland, Ohio, operator, and a member of the Cleveland local union. This department has carefully examined the device, and has had it tested. It certainly does deliver the goods. It is designed for use in film exchanges, but I can also recommend it to the favorable consideration of theaters using first run service. True it is, by comparison, a little costly—am not certain, but my recollection is that $25 is the price—but this is as nothing when one considers it in the light of an insurance against film damage, and an insurance as against possible trouble on the screen due to excessive emulsion deposit.

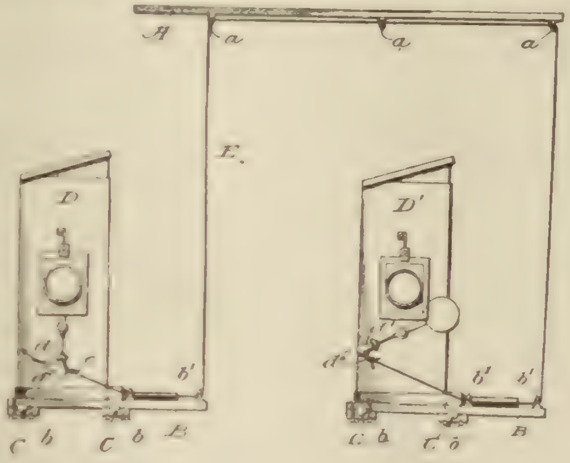
The device is very simple. It consists of two upright bars joined to a base, in the upper half of each of which is a slot about ½ inch wide by 3/16 of an inch thick. At the bottom of these slots is an iron roller over which the film passes. In the center of these slots is a cross slot. At the bottom is a base with thumbscrew, by means of which the device may be clamped to the bench between the rewinder standards. The action is as follows: In each of the first named slots is placed a bar of wax, apparently just plain paraffine. Between the two standards is placed an iron weight, with pins protruding from its sides, the same engaging the cross slots and resting on top of the wax bars. In process of rewinding the film is pulled between the aforementioned iron roller (about seven-eighths of an inch in diameter) and the lower end of the wax bars, with result that just sufficient wax is deposited to insure against sticking of the emulsion to the tension springs, or shoes, of the projector.

One thing I would like to mention, however, viz.: the directions say: "by winding the film through at moderate speed (about 2½ to 3 minutes to the reel) there is enough wax deposited to insure same against damage. Never apply more pressure than that supplied by the weight in order to leave a plainly visible trace of wax on the films, as too much wax is almost as bad as none at all." This, it occurs to me, is a point which requires somewhat further elucidation, if the waxer is to be used in the theater, because I am opposed to rewinding film at such high speed as 2½ to 3 minutes to the reel. I have recommended that rewinders be reduced in speed until it requires ten minutes to rewind 1,000 feet of film, and I intend to continue to so recommend. Would this slow speed tend to deposit too much wax, Brother Weiss?

For use in exchanges I can heartily recommend the device, just as it is. It is now being successfully used by two or three of the large film corporations, and should be used by them all. With, or possibly without, some minor change to take care of the matter spoken of, I would also recommend it to the consideration of theater managers using first run films. Wax bars are supplied by the manufacturer. The device is being marketed by the Projection Supply Company, Cleveland, Ohio.

Douser Connection and Film Cleaner.

Samuel T. White, Greenville, N. C., is inventor and patentee of a douser connection as per illustration. Perhaps I am in error, but really I am unable to detect any material difference as between Brother White's invention and similar douser connections illustrated and recommended [illegible] in the department fully three years ago; also the [illegible] scheme has been, and is now, in use in hundreds of theaters. Possibly there is a material difference between these connections and the invention of friend White. If so let him set them forth. True he has anti-friction ceiling rollers, but that, I think, is not of much importance.



Neighbor White's film cleaner has the same general appearance as that of the Mortimer, illustrated [illegible] of the Handbook, but it uses lamp wicking for wi[illegible], so it is claimed, makes no deposit of lint on the film.

Has Helped.

W. W. Brunberg, Tucson, Arizona, gives voice to the following:

> We have been following you on your travels and have found much of interest in the articles you have written describing same. Your visit to Tucson was highly appreciated. It was educational insofar as concerns our business, and has helped to make us all work and strive to attain the best.

Glad to know it, Brother Brunberg. I, too, have pleasant recollections of your desert city and the bunch of live wires I met there. I have not forgotten the Grand Opera House chauffeur (darn him) who took me over those desert roads so fast that when my head wasn't toying with the canopy above, I was hitting the cushion with more force than grace. Some chauffeur, my boy! Some buzz-wagon driver! But I enjoyed every minute of it, allee samee.

Get It.

I would advise all operators to send twenty-five cents to the Society of Projection Engineers, 712 Eleventh St. N. W., Washington, D. C., for a copy of the transactions of its Atlantic City meeting, April, 1917. This booklet contains some rather weird statements, but it also contains, in the report of the committee on electrical devices, some things of value to the practical operator. Also there are things with which the operator will instantly take issue. Some of the statements made are correct, some are partly correct, and some are wholly wrong. On the whole, however, the booklet is well worth its price to the operator, and ought to be in his library.

UNHAPPILY this is not an uncommon defect in cinematograph lenses, but may easily be tested for by focusing upon coarse printed matter with other placards at varying distances before and beyond the one focused upon. If any of the other placards film clearer than the one focused upon it is plain proof that the visual and chemical foci do not coincide.

Definition is that quality which enables a lens to produce sharp and crisp images, and its presence in an objective is a proof of exact workmanship as well as careful computation. The best workmanship will be wasted in a lens not well designed, and bad workmanship will annihilate the best computer's skill. If all the various defects and aberrations are corrected and the workman has done everything to carry out the designer's ideas, the lens will give at full aperture a flat and sharply cut image over the entire area covered. The area covered with perfection is sometimes called area of critical definition. Since most of the aberrations depend upon the opening of the lens, the definition may be improved in some cases by reducing the opening at the sacrifice of speed.

Illumination. We speak of even illumination when the margin of the plate receives as much light as the center, and the negative shows an even density all over. A perfectly even illumination is only possible with small stops, especially when a larger plate is used than the lens is rated for. All speed lenses show more or less drop in the illumination (vignetting) toward the margin of the field covered when used with full aperture.

This vignetting or cutting of oblique rays by the lens barrel is apt to show quite plainly in pictures taken at large aperture when extreme short focus cine lenses so that to get a full exposure at the edges may even require a slightly larger diaphragm opening than is needed with a lens of longer focus where the vignetting effect is imperceptible within the small area of the aperture plate.

Covering power is expressed by the area which the evenly illuminated flat field covers with perfect definition. It depends upon the diameter of the lenses and on the degree to which the different aberrations are corrected and may, in some cases, be increased by using smaller stops.

The greater the relative aperture and the greater the covering power, the more valuable the lens.

Flare spots. Occasionally a negative will show a nebulous patch of light covering shadows and high light alike. Such patches are called flare spots or ghosts. They are formed by light reflected within the lens, at the lens surfaces bounding air spaces, and as a general proposition, it may be stated that every lens having an air space will show a flare spot under some conditions. Although it is possible to so adjust the curvature and direction of the lens surfaces that the flare spot is spread over nearly the whole plate, therefore not noticeable, this generally could be accomplished only by sacrificing more important corrections.

Before it can be said that one lens is superior to another with respect to flare spot formation, the two lenses must be thoroughly tried out under a great variety of conditions of illumination. It will generally be found that if under certain conditions one lens shows a flare spot and another of different construction does not, by changing conditions the second lens will show a flare spot and the first will not.

Very small stops may show flare spots when larger stops do not.

Flare spots are most apt to appear when photographing an object against a strong light and least apt to appear when the light is coming from back of the camera.

A condition resembling flare is apt to occur in a dirty lens particularly from almost imperceptible oil spots from oil spattered by the camera mechanism or from finger prints. Moral: examine the lens frequently and keep it immaculately clean and well protected.

Flare will occur with the best of lenses where strong extraneous light is allowed to strike the lens. Moral number two: Use a lens hood.

Granularity.

The following statement from the Eastman Kodak Research Laboratory should be of interest to those who have been bothered by this not uncommon trouble.

> While high speed and fineness of grain do not ordinarily go together from a sensitive emulsion standpoint, our chemists have been able to materially increase the speed of our motion picture negative stock, and at the same time maintain unusually fine grain.
> Although different emulsions may vary in granularity, our photomicrographic tests of each coating show the variation to be practically imperceptible.
> Our experience has been that granularity may be traced to a number of causes, the most common being over-exposure, with consequent under-development, under-exposure with over-development; also very slow or very fast drying. Aside from the above mentioned, grey or light settings, even if treated in the best manner as regards exposure, development and drying, invariably show excessive grain for the reason that there is little or no color value present to cover the emulsion. As a consequence light settings should be used as little as possible, or if so, extra care should be taken with exposure, the tendency being to over-exposure; also, developing and drying should be done with exceeding care.

Answers to Correspondents.

C. D. B., Easton, Pa., writes:

> I expect to take a trip to Cuba, Jamaica, Santo Domingo and Venezuela, and am going to take my motion picture camera and negative with me. I would like you to advise me if a wooden case covered with leather is alright for the climate there, and if the negative should be developed at once, and how should the negative be packed. I have been trying to get some dope along these lines, but so far have been unfortunate. If you will give me the information I should have for that climate it will be appreciated.

A wooden camera is very bad for tropical climates, although some makes stand tropical latitudes very well if kept from excessive moisture and heat.

A heavy white blanket is a good thing to throw over your camera, except while actually taking, to protect it from the heat of the sun.

If your journey is an extended one you should arrange to have fresh supplies of film shipped to you.

If the film is in tins, as it comes from the Eastman company, and the tins carefully sealed with adhesive tape you cannot do better than leave it in the original cans.

A double walled case, preferably of sheet metal, with felt between the walls, is the best for carrying the film tins.

Fused calcium chloride or quicklime wrapped in absorbent cotton may be packed in the case to insure dryness.

In a moist, hot climate do not load any more film than you expect to use, and defer loading until the last moment. After exposure transfer as quickly as possible to air tight containers.

If you have a portable developing outfit you can develop your day's work at night. If you have to ship your film back for development despatch it as often as shipping facilities permit.

Remember that moist salt air deteriorates film very rapidly when it can gain access to it, as in the camera or magazines, so the shorter the time in the camera the better the film will be.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE

Chicago's Picture Palaces Should Charge Higher Admissions

AT THE present time there are 418 picture theaters in Chicago. Of this number 204 houses have a seating capacity of 300 or less. This shows that nearly one-half of the whole number are small houses. The houses seating from 300 up to 500 are 42 in number, while there are 147 with a capacity running from 500 up to 1,000, and 25 houses with a capacity over the 1,000 mark

The feature and star productions have, therefore, as their chief patrons the 147 houses with a capacity from 500 to 1,000 and the 25 houses over 1,000, or 172 in all. The smaller pictures have their chief support in 246 houses. This shows that the most costly product must find its support in 172 houses, while the cheaper has 246 patrons

Do not figures show conclusively that, in order to keep the industry on a solvent basis, the 172 houses must charge higher admissions than they are now doing?

Chicago is, perhaps, the most backward city in the country in this respect. Picture programs, sometimes representing an original outlay of $60,000 or $75,000, are offered for 10 and 15 cents. Not only this: these programs are shown in magnificent modern theaters which cost as high as $250,000, with all modern comforts such as none of our dramatic theaters possess. Is it not extravagance run mad to persist in this course? Is it not a fatal cheapening of the moving picture itself?

Is it not time that the owners of these fine structures devoted to moving pictures should get together and agree on the raising of admissions. Never mind your little brother in your vicinity, with his small house of 300 capacity. He is looking for the nickels and maybe a stray dime; but this loss will never hurt you big fellows if you will only rise to your opportunity

New Treasury Regulations in Great Britain Affect American and Other Foreign Companies.

New treasury regulations which effect film companies incorporated outside Great Britain and Ireland and which have a place of business therein recently became law in the United Kingdom. According to these regulations foreign companies trading in Great Britain must notify the registrar of all changes of directors, and must disclose the particulars set out in the Registration of Business Names Act, 1916, which are required in the case of partners in a firm. All companies incorporated abroad, with an office in Great Britain, are required to furnish such information, and to them are made applicable the requirements as to trade catalogues, circulars, show cards, and business letters, according to an article in the London Kinematograph, of July 26.

The word "director" includes any person in accordance with whose directtions or instructions the directors of a company are accustomed to act.

Every company incorporated outside Great Britain which has a place of business therein must, within one month from the establishment of said business, file with the registrar of companies a certified copy of the charter, statutes or memorandum and articles of the company, a list of the directors, the names and addresses of one or more persons in Great Britain authorized to accept service of process on behalf of the company, etc.

Any company to which the new regulations apply shall, for infraction thereof, be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds, or in the case of continued offense, five pounds daily for every day during which the default continues.

Chicago Film Brevities.

President R. O. Proctor has called a special meeting of the Reel Fellows' Club for Aug. 10, when it is hoped the members will take steps to place the affairs of the organization on a sounder financial foundation. President Proctor has been an active official ever since he took charge of his office, and he is deserving of the heartiest support of the members to make the Club a permanent fixture in the industry.

I. Van Ronkel, manager of the Chicago office of the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., was pleasantly surprised one day last week when he entered the office and found all the members of his staff seated around a large table. The table was covered with good things of the confection order and the occasion is said to have been the "fourth" celebration of Van's fortieth birthday. Whether it was Van's fortieth of forty-fourth birthday, I wish him many happy returns of the day.

Julius Singer, long connected with Laemmle interests, is at present in Chicago stirring up interest in the Alice Howell comedies, released through Universal.

The customary annual picnic given the employees of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co. by President Rothacker, was held at Point Comfort, Fox Lake, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 8. The employees have formed an organization known as the Pleasure Club, the officers of which are George H. Gibson, president; Barbara Mertes, vice president; Lillian Riedel, treasurer, and Ernest Neumann, secretary. About [illegible] members of the club left for Fox Lake to participate in the festivities, which unfortunately terminated in a sad accident which put an end to the day's enjoyment and brought sorrow and gloom to the members of the club. A boat in which Miss Anne Zimmerman and Mrs. Rose Primm and three of their friends were rowing on the lake sprang a leak and sank, resulting in the drowning of the two women mentioned. The screams of the women attracted two men, who swam for the sinking boat and succeeded in sustaining three of the occupants until further help arrived. The remainder of the day was occupied in searching for the bodies, that of Miss Zimmerman being found at five o'clock

A cablegram from London to the Chicago Journal, Aug. 6, shows that the citizens of Liverpool recently raised a fund which they placed at the disposal of Admiral Beatty, of the British navy, for the benefit of British sailors of the Grand fleet. Admiral Beatty, in acknowledging the gift, wrote as follows to the committee in charge:

"I can serve your intention in no better way than by indicating the work of the fleet cinema committee in organizing moving picture entertainments on each ship. The benefit to the men will be real and lasting. I know of no better means by which their minds can be withdrawn from the monotony of their surroundings and thereby become reinvigorated to renew their work."

George Beban, one of Morosco's popular photoplayers, made a brief stopover in this city Wednesday, August 8, on his way from New York to Los Angeles. Manager Stoughton, of the Famous Players' Chicago office, arranged a luncheon in honor of Mr. Beban at the Blackstone hotel, to which the photoplay editors of the Chicago dailies and the trade press were invited. Mr. Beban made a speech in which he referred to the fact that the New York office of his company wishes to change his type of picture. "They want me to do stories with love interest, with me as the lover, and the triangle and all that sort of thing," said Mr. Beban. "Now I don't feel that's right. I can't work against my judgment. I believe in specialization. People have their fields and are better in them than they would be elsewhere." Everyone present was in favor of the picturesque, colorful peasant characters which Mr. Beban has been so successful in portraying, and which have won him the love of the picture fans.

Selig's latest feature, "The City of Purple Dreams," has been completed under the direction of Colin Campbell, and the first print has been viewed in Chicago by the Selig staff. Everyone who viewed it pronounces it unusually strong in love interest, the cast excellent, and the settings exceptionally fine. Thomas Santschi appears in the principal role and is said to rival his Boris Androvsky in "The Garden of Allah." Others in the cast are Fritzi Brunette, Bessie Eyton, A. D. Sears, Frank Clark and M. Scott. A fist fight between Messrs. Santschi and Sears in this feature is said to rival even the famous fight in "The Spoilers."

C. G. Stuart, owner and manager of the Palais Royal theater, 1710 W. Madison street, this city, was a caller at our office last week. The Palais Royal seats 400 people, and an admission of five and ten cents is charged for a program of Paramount, World and V.L.S.E. makes. Mr. Stuart has been a subscriber for the World for the past four years. He reports fair business at his theater during the hot weather.

The Roll of Honor

HARRY KING TOOTLE, publicity manager for Gaumont, with offices in Flushing, has been named by the official examining camp board as one of the 1,265 candidates for commissions in the army at the second Plattsburg camp. Mr. Tootle will take up his studies on August 27. He has been a candidate for admission to the first school, but when he found he was not to be included in the lucky first allotment he kept plugging away with his eye on the second camp. That he has been successful will afford pleasure to his friends as well as satisfaction to himself. The members of the World crew, all of whom know and esteem Mr. Tootle, extend their congratulations.

William K. Howard, 24 years old, manager of the Minneapolis Metro exchange, has answered the call from Uncle Sam and is to drop his pen for a rifle on August 11. Manager Howard bade farewell to a large number of Twin City exhibitors at a special showing of "The Slacker" at the Lyric Wednesday, August 1. Mr. Howard is greatly admired by his associates for his straightforward business methods.

Tom Forman, the Lasky player, has enlisted and is now "Private Tom Forman, Company 17, Coast Artillery, Federal Reserve." This company was called to the colors August 5. Forman's commanding officer is Captain Ted Duncan, and his second lieutenant is Walter Long, both former members of the Lasky organization.

Harold (Dutch) Johnson, booker for the Indianapolis K-E-S-E office, enlisted in Company L, Fourth Infantry, Indiana National Guard. This is the second man from the same office who has joined the colors, Norman Dickson, traveling representative, having joined the Officers' Reserve Corps.

Jack La Mond, assistant cameraman at Metro's Super-Feature studio, has volunteered in the Marine Corps, and has been made a quartermaster sergeant.

H. Mayer, advertising man for Christie comedies, has joined the aviation corps. Mr. Mayer while on a visit in New York learned his number had been drawn in the draft at Los Angeles. He immediately availed himself of the prerogative of selecting his own branch before being called.

James Harrison, Arthur Munn and Wilfred Locket of the Christie forces in Los Angeles have left the studio and joined their company of the coast artillery at San Pedro. Al Christie gave each a remembrance in the form of a wrist watch.

TWO CONTESTANTS WIN $50 EACH.

The Paralta Plays cash prize contest, which was instituted by this company in April last, has just been brought to a conclusion. The prizes of $50 each were offered for the most effective design for advertising lettering and for the most effective advertising phrase.

The $50 prize for the most effective advertising phrase was awarded to Mrs. Florence B. Thompson, of the First National Bank of Montevideo, Minn.

The $50 prize for the most original and unique advertising lettering was won by George A. Bjorson, of 213 Olive street, Warren, Ohio. Mr. Bjorson was born in Sweden and came to this country when seven years of age. He lived in Boston till six years ago, where he became an expert electrical engineer. The past six years have been passed in Warren, Ohio, where he is engaged in business.

DRAFT STRIKES FORTY UNIVERSALITES.

More than forty members of Universal's producing staff will answer the government's call to the colors. There is a marked amount of good cheer manifested on the part of the boys on the Big U payroll who are on the draft list, however. Not one voiced a complaint when he learned that his number had been drawn from Uncle Sam's hat.

Among the actors who come within the scope of the first call are William Franey, Milton Sims, Francis McDonald, Lloyd Whitlock and J. Webster Dill.

More Than Forty of Universal's Men Answer the Call to the Colors.

Two of the directing staff probably will be called soon—George Marshall and Mancelia De Grasse. Cameramen Jack Mackenzie, J. Kull and E. R. Meeker were among those whose numbers were selected early in the drawing.

Robert A. Dillon, of the scenario staff, and Harold Hoadley, of the publicity department, are listed among the first names in their respective districts, as are Fred Datig and Leslie Irwin of the employment offices, S. F. Keister and John Shea of the accounting department, and H. L. Mohr and Grant Whytlock of the cutting room.

PERSONALITIES.

Theodore Burkart who has been cast director at the Peerless studio is now office manager for the Doris agency.

Clara Kimball Young is now to do "Magda." It seems that she was unable to secure the world rights to "The Marionettes."

The New York Screen Club has adopted an arrangement so that all members who enter the service of the United States, or any of its allies, will be carried as full fledged members without charge to them in any way.

Eugenia Magnus Ingleton, ex-scenario chief at the Peerless and Paragon studios at Fort Lee and later scenario editor at Universal City, from which position she was promoted to be director of her own productions, has resigned from Universal City and arranged to direct a seven-reel super-feature which she has written. Anna Luther will have the stellar role in the story.

Peggy Par, formerly with the Essanay company, where she was known as Peggy Sweeney, has been engaged by the Klever Pictures Corporation as leading woman for Victor Moore Comedies.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. HARLEMAN

Max Linder Leaves for France

Celebrated Film Star Returns to His Native Country for Complete Rest.

MAX LINDER, the famous Essanay comedian, who has been seriously ill here for several months, departed from Los Angeles on Monday, August 6th, and sailed for France on the 11th, taking passage on the steamer S. S. Espana. If the submarines don't get him he will soon be back in his beloved France.

Mr. Linder had a serious nervous breakdown several months ago and has been very ill ever since. He suffered severely from exposure in the trenches and the wounds he received when fighting with the French at the Marne. His stay in Chicago aggravated his condition and he went to California to recuperate. His health has improved considerably, but the comedian is still far from well. The trip to France and a complete rest for several months, his doctors believe, will put Linder on his feet again.

V. R. Day, manager of the Los Angeles studios of the Essanay Film Company, and members of his staff escorted Mr. Linder to the depot. A number of his friends among the profession and representatives of the daily press were also present to bid the popular little Frenchman good-bye. Linder said he was sorry to leave beautiful California and his many friends there. He is expected to return in February next year and complete his contract with Essanay.

A Survey of the Film Situation

H. O. Davis, General Manager of Triangle Film Corporation, Has Compiled Valuable Statistics of the Industry from Every Part of the World.

A WORLD survey of the film situation has just been completed by H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager of the Triangle Film Corporation.

The report contains statistics and an exhaustive summary of cinema affairs in every section of the globe, from the viewpoint of both exhibitor and producer. It has taken more than a year to gather the data and several months to assemble the facts in the desired form. Much of the information is of a confidential nature and is considered an invaluable asset for the furtherance of the Triangle's plans for the future.

According to Mr. Davis, the features of the summary that now may be made public pertain to figures furnished by thousands of exhibitors in every part of the United States and all of the foreign countries in which amusement enterprises have not been completely devastated and demoralized by the war. The exhibitors have reported on almost every phase of their business, important among which are brands of films used, receipts, population, class of population, kinds of films most popular, methods of advertising, results of advertising, support given by newspapers and publications, popular interest in motion picture affairs, popularity of individual players, opinions as to the relative importance of star, story and direction and a score of other technical but vital facts.

"The result of this survey," said Mr. Davis, "is that we have assembled in concrete form an array of statistics that remove from our relations with the exhibitor the element of chance or guesswork and reduces production to a mathematical and business certainty. The information in the report is indisputable and contains a condensed summary of obstacles to be overcome both by exhibitor and producer and a detailed account of conditions encountered by experienced showmen in the various communities represented.

"By way of illustration, by turning at random to a city listed in the survey we find a city in Japan of 120,000 population. It is a manufacturing community and the majority of the residents cannot afford to pay more than a stipulated price of admission for their film entertainment. The kinds of plays most popular here are these which depict an uplifting moral or show industry and thrift attaining reward and success. Vampire plays are unpopular here, but short news reels or fillers which have an educational value are at a premium. Bright, witty comedies are always popular here, according to the report, but the residents of this community do not care particularly for the slapstick and custard pie variety of humor. In this Japanese city, as throughout the entire nation, plays are never popular that have Japanese actors performing menial tasks or shown as the butt of ridiculous jokes perpetrated by Caucasians or members of another race. The Japanese are not averse to seeing their countrymen the target of jokes or horseplay, but they resent their countrymen being shown in a more unfavorable light than the other actors. There is much other information about this city and the motion picture situation in this locality, but these facts are enough to explain the purpose and nature of the survey.

Mr. Davis announced that other details of the survey will be made public in the near future, as will policies planned and outlined for the further development of the new Triangle.

Motion Pictures in the Orient

Staff Photographer of International News Service Tells of Cinema Theaters in Japan and China.

J. J. HUBBELL, staff photographer of the International News Service, who recently completed a tour of the Orient, brings back an interesting story of the moving picture theaters in Japan and China, where the animated drama has taken firm hold on the imagination of the Oriental public. With regard to the theaters themselves he says:

"Many odd customs prevail. Incidental to the showing of a picture in a Japanese theater a lecturer appears at the side of the screen and depicts the emotions of the actors. He weeps audibly with the heroine and roars with laughter at the antics of the comedian. It is hard work and these interpreters work in relays, although they seldom retire until they fall from exhaustion.

"The Chinese depend almost exclusively on America and Japan for their films and have no native companies. The Chinese theaters are divided into two parts, the men sitting in the orchestra and the women in the gallery. Scenes that are laughable to an American are enacted in these Oriental motion picture houses. As the visitor deposits his ticket of admission in the box at the door he is handed a hot towel. As he walks to his seat he wipes his hands and face to remove the grime and moisture, in order to make himself as comfortable as possible for the pleasure that is to follow. But the theater owner insists on getting his towels back and the Chinese men and women, after they are seated, throw them across the house to ushers, who are stationed at various points. Sometimes, when business is good, the house is filled with flying towels, sometimes to the detriment of the screening of the picture.

"Each person of the audience is also supplied with a cup of tea, which he sips with a gusto that frequently, when a thousand persons are in the theater, resembles the escaping of steam from a damaged boiler. Despite these minor interruptions the Chinese enjoy the silent drama to the fullest extent and are not critical if the film is seven or eight years old, and sometimes so badly scratched and damaged that it is little short of impossible to distinguish exactly from the movements of the figures and the numerous defects of the film."

J. WARREN KERRIGAN BREAKS LEG.

Word was received at the Los Angeles offices of the Moving Picture World Saturday morning, August 11, stating that J. Warren Kerrigan, the star of the J. Warren Kerrigan Feature Corporation, had had his leg broken Friday evening by the fall off a horse he was riding near Santa Barbara. He had been taken to the Cottage hospital in that city, where he will probably be confined for the next six weeks.

Mr. Kerrigan had just finished his second Paralta play, Frederic Chapin's "Turn of a Card," and had gone out into the country about Santa Barbara in the cool of the evening for a ride with some members of his company. While crossing some open country, about ten miles from the city, his horse stepped in a gopher hole and went down so suddenly that the rider was caught unawares.

Mr. Kerrigan is a trained horseman and has had many a bad fall in pictures without more serious results than bruises, but his horse fell in this instance so suddenly and in such a peculiar way that his rider had no chance to throw himself from his saddle clear of his horse, but went down with his mount, his right leg being caught and doubled under him in such a way as to break it below the knee.

The members of Mr. Kerrigan's company, who were riding with him, caught his horse and lifted him into his saddle. The party rode slowly into the city, Mr. Kerrigan suffering intense pain from the broken bone. At the Cottage hospital the physicians said that the injury was a simple fracture and that Mr. Kerrigan would be confined to his bed for five or six weeks.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

M. G. Jonas, publicity director of the Universal Pacific Coast studios, states that Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, the well known Nestor comedy stars, were mistaken for spies somewhere in the wilds of Wyoming, while on their way back to Universal City from Chicago, where they had represented the Universal players at the recent International Motion Picture Convention. They had much difficulty convincing the federal authorities that they meant no harm when they staged a photoplay scene with a railroad bridge as a background.

There was considerable telegraphing between the comedians and general passenger agent of the road before the Universal players were permitted to go on their way.

Lois Weber has finished her first independent production, "The Whim." The story deals in a strikingly dramatic but convincing way with the influence of the home on the characters and lives of three families whose lives become strangely interwoven. Mildred Harris, formerly with Fine Arts, plays the lead, supported by a real all-star cast, including Kenneth Harlan, Anne Schaefer, Helen Rosson, Gertrude Astor, Adele Farrington and Alfred Allen, of "Hell Morgan" fame.

The film is now in the cutting rooms, and announcement of its release will shortly be made to the trade.

Bebe Daniels, leading woman of "Lonesome Luke" comedies of the Rolin Film Company, has returned to the studio after an illness of two weeks.

Alf Goulding, recently with the Fox Studios, has been engaged by the Rolin as director for the Harold Lloyd Company. Mr. Goulding was for a number of years producer for Marie Dressler, Pollard Opera Company and others equally well known. He was also director for G. M. Anderson, of Broncho Billy fame.

A benefit performance will be given at Shrine Auditorium, Saturday night, August 18, for the benefit of emergency hospitals in France. Mrs. Frank Wright, delegate for the French Wounded Emergency Fund, is in charge of the arrangements.

Mrs. Wright is a cousin of Sir Herbert Plummer, commanding one of the British armies in France, to whom is accredited the victories of Vimy Ridge and Messines. She proposes to raise money to send to France Americans who cannot fight, but who are willing to do their share in repairing ravages, restoring devastated districts and making French towns and French country places fit for men to live and work in.

A great number of film stars, including Charles Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks, have promised to appear at this benefit performance.

"Kewpie" Morgan, the fat comedian of many Universal films, didn't take into consideration the phenomenal memory of the elephant last summer when he fed Charlie, the big pachyderm of the Universal zoo, a plug of tobacco wrapped in a bunch of hay. Charlie was a very sick animal for a day or so, but recovered and the incident was forgotten—except by the elephant.

The other day "Kewpie" was working in an animal picture with Eileen Sedgwick on the stage at the zoo. The eleplant house was across the street and Charlie was roaming around peacefully inside. Charlie usually is a docile animal, and a light, wooden gate was believed to be quite sufficient to keep him within bounds. But suddenly he espied "Kewpie" and remembered him.

With a blow of his trunk he made kindling wood of the gate. "Kewpie" and Miss Sedgwick were in the middle of a scene and did not notice the elephant until he started to tear down their set in order to get at the comedian. He bumped the wooden building with his massive head and wrecked one side of it entirely before "Kewpie" fled.

The elephant gave chase and the fat fellow dashed wildly around the zoo with the elephant at his heels. "Kewpie" finally took refuge in the empty lion arena, the steel bars and braces of which were strong enough to resist the elephant's attack.

Again Louise Glaum is to scintillate her sinuous self through a vampire production under the Triangle's banner, but this time in an entirely different atmosphere. Her new vehicle, which will be called "Gonda," will give Miss Glaum an opportunity to display her versatility inasmuch as her most recent appearance in a vampire role was distinctly different. This play, just completed, "Milestones of Success," shows the celebrated charmer amid the splendors of an Egyptian "love nest," but in the new production she will have to lure her victims to their fate in a crude frontier resort.

Miss Glaum's part in "Gonda" will be similar to that of Dorothy Dalton in "The Flame of the Yukon," but the story is decidedly different and the settings will be even more elaborate than the other famous Triangle production. Miss Glaum's most recent drama and the one she is beginning this week are under the direction of Walter Edwards. Jack Livingston will play the leading male role and others prominent in the cast will be Lee Hill and William Ellingford.

Stiles Dickinson, Lasky portrait artist, recently gave an afternoon reception at his Hollywood bungalow studio to a notable gathering of screen stars. An early morning glimpse of the far corner of the new Keystone studios would create the impression that the Triangle fun-makers are training for the army. Several of the Keystone stars, including Ray Griffith, Bob Millikin, "Slim" St. Clair, Harry McCoy, Lige Crommie, Lloyd Bacon and Earl Rodney have appropriated the parallel bars and other athletic paraphernalia that was used by Doug Fairbanks when the present Keystone studios were devoted to the making of Triangle-Fine Arts plays.

Fred J. Balshofer, who is directing Harold Lockwood's first Master-Production for Metro release, has announced the completion of the cast for the picture, which is a film version of the novel, "Paradise Garden," by George Gibbs. In his role of Jerry Benham, Lockwood is to be supported by Vera Sisson, who plays the part of Una Habberton, a settlement worker; Virginia Rappae, as Marcia Van Wyck, a society vampire; Lester Cuneo, as Jack Ballard, a young man of the world; William Clifford, as Roger Canby, Benham's tutor; and George Hupp, as Jerry Benham himself at the age of ten.

The part of Marcia Van Wyck was the most difficult to fill, since the play required a juvenile vampire, a character possessing youthful good looks and at the same time the acting ability necessary to portray a most difficult situation in the story with the young man about whom the drama hinges.

Others in the cast are B. A. Sprotte, as Henry Ballard, captain of finance; Catherine Henry, as Miss Gore, Marcia's companion; Harry De Roy, as Christopher, Benham's servant; and Violet Eddie, as Miss Redwood, young Benham's governess.

Clarence H. Reedscale and William H. Hauber, youthful members of the Fox Film Company, had narrow escapes from death in Santa Monica Canyon one day this week when they tumbled over a ledge. Each was picked up in a semi-conscious condition and hurried to the St. Catherine's Hospital.

Reedscale's right foot was severely lacerated and he was badly bruised about the arms and legs in his descent. One of his toes had to be amputated. Hauber's injuries, though not as serious, were quite painful. His right knee-cap was torn off and he sustained many minor contusions about the body.

Fred J. Balshofer's heavy man, Lester Cuneo, who has appeared in many pictures in support of Harold Lockwood, learned this week by a telegram from his home in Chicago that he is listed in the first draft call, and may find it necessary to leave for training with the troops within a few weeks. Harold Lockwood missed the first draft by a few numbers and will not come up for examination until the second call.

Florence Vidor, who scored a success in support of George Beban in "The Cook of Canyon Camp," Sessue Hayakawa in "Hashimura Togo," and as leading woman for Julian Eltinge in his first production, has been made a permanent member of the Lasky stock organization. Miss Vidor was born in Houston, Texas, and educated in convents there. Two years ago she decided to enter the silent drama and was first engaged by the Vitagraph Company. Later she supported William Farnum in "The Tales of Two Cities" and "American Methods." Miss Vidor will shortly be seen as leading woman for Mr. Hayakawa in a forthcoming production to be made under the direction of George Melford.

The draft got several members of the Lasky organization. All of the young men without dependents had previously enlisted, so it only hit those who had others besides themselves to support. The first man drafted was Wallace Reid, the Lasky star, being selected early in the drafting day. Wallace has several dependents and it is not known whether he will request exemption or not.

The draft also hit Roy Marshall, assistant director for Marshall Neilan; Wellington Wales, auditor; two brothers, Claude and Edmund Mitchell, Claude being chief assistant director, and Edmund being assistant auditor. The draft also included several men who had previously enlisted, and as all the men drafted have dependents the conscription will be but slightly felt at the Lasky studio.

Joy is paramount at the Ince studios. A telegram, we are informed, was received by Mr. Ince this week to the effect that a decision has been rendered in the United States court at New York by Judge Manton, denying the petition by the Triangle Film Corporation to restrain Wm. S. Hart and the Artcraft Company from releasing Hart pictures through that concern. The injunction was issued by the Triangle Corporation upon the allegation that Hart was under contract to that company for a considerable period yet and that any arrangement with Artcraft would be a breach of faith and would inflict great losses upon the plaintiff, as Hart is a great asset as a star. The reply of the defendants alleges that Hart's contract with the Triangle contained a clause stipulating that all of his pictures were to be supervised by Thomas H. Ince. As Ince has left the Triangle, the defendants claim that Hart's contract has expired automatically. Judge Manton's ruling, according to the telegram, was a sweeping decision for Hart and Ince. Hart is now engaged in the Lasky studios in the filming of his first picture for Artcraft.

"Iris"

Pathe Releases Five-Reel Adaptation of the Famous Pinero Play—Production by Hepworth.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A SMALL but capable company of English players appears in this production of Iris, from the play by Sir Arthur Pinero. The adaptation has been a careful one and, barring a few minor lapses, such as the sudden transition of the heroine from comparative affluence to poverty, is worthy of commendation. It conveys to the screen the delicate shades of meaning and dramatic finesse of this well-known dramatist and the interest is carried from the slow comedy situations at the beginning to a gradual, but inevitable climax. The effect of the whole is decidedly artistic and satisfying.

Scene from "Iris" (Pathe).

Alma Taylor, an attractive English actress, plays the part of Iris Bellamy. She performs with assurance and the interest in watching her grows with each appearance. Stuart Rome appears as Lawrence Trenwith, the poor but favored lover, and Henry Ainley as Fred Maldonado, the wealthy and designing suitor who temporarily catches the butterfly in his net.

While the sex motive is at all times apparent, it is handled with a skill that lifts the production above the usual crudities and sordidness. Iris, after promising Trenwith she will wed him upon his return from a Canadian project, loses her own money through an inherent extravagance and love of finery. She quickly falls into reduced circumstances, almost too rapidly as it is shown. This gives Maldonado his opportunity. Knowing her condition, he meets her on the street one day and hands her the key to a lavishly furnished apartment, which he tells her he has had fitted up for her use. Sorely pressed, Iris goes to these rooms and is of course followed by Maldonado. Later Trenwith returns and strong scenes follow, in which he casts off Iris, only to take up with her again after she has left Maldonado with the intention of kiling herself.

The interior settings are not sumptuous, but attractive, and there are several well-chosen exteriors which give picturesqueness to the production.

"Miss Robinson Crusoe"

Five-Part Metro Release Produced by B. A. Rolfe and Starring Emmy Whelen a Comedy-Drama With the Thousand Islands as Its Chief Locale.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SPEEDY motor boats in an exciting race is one of the features of "Miss Robinson Crusoe," a five-part comedy-drama produced by B. A. Rolfe and released on the Metro program. June Mathis and William Christy Cabanne wrote the story, and Emmy Whelen, the English musical comedy star, is the featured player. The character intrusted to Miss Whelen is called Pamela Sayre, a wealthy young woman who has grown weary of her pampered existence and imagines she would enjoy being mated with a cave-man. Bertie Holder, who is deeply in love with Pamela, finds this out and proceeds to do his best to gratify her desire. He carries her off in a motor boat to an uninhabited island in the St. Lawrence River and treats her with such assumed roughness that she falls in love with him right away. There is an underplot involving two foreign gentlemen whose mission it is to steal certain valuable documents from a member of the United States Government's war board, and a slight serious interest is built up around them. For the most part, however, "Miss Robinson Crusoe" is a light and frothy entertainment, with picturesque glimpses of Thousand Islands scenery and the thrilling motor boat race already mentioned.

Emma Whelen is a most attractive young woman, but she is not another Mary Pickford and has considerable to learn about acting for the screen. Walter C. Miller, Harold Entwhistle, Sue Balfour, Margaret Seddon, Augustus Phillips and Daniel Jarrett form a satisfactory supporting company.

Jack Pickford and Louise Huff to Be Directed by Taylor.

Jack Pickford and Louise Huff pass under the directorial hand of William H. Taylor for their next Paramount picture, which will be staged at the Morosco studio.

"Mary Jane's Pa"

Greater Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, in Five Reels, Fine Adaptation of Well Known Play.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

"MARY JANE'S PA" has delighted its hundreds of thousands as a play and there is no reason why it should not now delight the millions in film form. For the scenario writer, A. Van Buren Powell, and director, William P. S. Earle, have done a remarkably effective thing in the adaptation of the original play, written by Edith Ellis. It has many of the finely sympathetic qualities which give a story universal appeal and none of them have been missed or slighted. The screen production, on the other hand, is notable for its careful detail and no effort has been spared to give the narrative an appealing setting throughout. The paintings of Frederick Earle give additional charm to many of the subtitles and both the interior and exterior scenes are good.

Marc MacDermott plays the part of Hiram Perkins, who was almost an Enoch Arden. He came home to find his two children grown up and his wife in love with another man. Instead of retreating under these circumstances Hiram remains and helps run the village print shop, which his wife has been conducting. He finally makes good and is once more restored to favor with his wife. The part is an appealing one and Mr. MacDermott brings out the vacillating, lovable qualities of the man in an artistic way. Eulalie Jensen as the wife is equally pleasing; in fact this sweetly sympathetic woman does much to make the piece so strong. Mildred Manning and Clio Ayres play the parts of Mary Jane and her sister. Others in the cast are Emmet King, William Dunn, Mary Maurice, Templar Saxe and Edward Elkas.

"Mary Jane's Pa" tells a well-rounded story, enacted in charming rural surroundings. It has plenty of action, a touch of melodrama at times, and abounds in humor and pathos. It may be set down as one of those fortunate productions which hits the family circle square in the eye. In other words, it has something in it for everyone.

"The Midnight Man"

Jack Mulhall Featured in Five-Reel Butterfly Release, Supported by Ann Kroman and Others.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel subject, written by Bess Meredyth and produced by Elmer Clifton, at no time rises to any very dramatic heights, although it carries the interest fairly well and has at least one novel plot feature. This is the little turn in which the hero invites the crook to join hands with him in his efforts to invent a burglar-proof combination.

Scene from "The Midnight Man" (Butterfly).

The story leads off slowly and a number of scenes are shown which could well be spared, as they have nothing in particular to do with the plot development. The production is one that might have been put into three reels, so far as continuity is concerned. The bathing scenes and certain others are bright and agreeable in themselves, but not necessary to the story.

Jack Mulhall plays in characteristic form in this number and makes a favorable impression. He appears as the son of a safe manufacturer and is in love with a girl who is the daughter of a rival manufacturer. The young man is trying to invent a lock that cannot be manipulated by burglars, and to offset his ingenuity and provide the necessary obstacle to test his skill, a crook character is introduced known as "The Eel." This is the main situation of the story, for The Eel has an unblemished reputation as a safe breaker. He succeeds in opening the hero's first combination, but in the course of the story they combine forces and invent one that cannot be manipulated. The opportunity is not made the most of, as there is very little suspense as the story unfolds.

Others in the cast are Al McQuarrie, who makes the most of his opportunities as "The Eel," Uard Lamont, Hal Wilson and Wilbur Higby.

"Down to Earth"

Artcraft Presents Douglas Fairbanks in a Comedy of Purpose with Plenty of Zip.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"DOWN TO EARTH" is a comedy of the kind that delights and entertains for the moment and, in addition, puts over a totality of effect which leaves a clear impression on the audience mind. There is no dispersing of attention, as in a mere vehicle to display a talented artist's favorite style, perplexing spectators to follow the story—none of that, but straight and harmonious structural charm from the outset to the end. In the course of a single composition, while it should follow a lead throughout, the subordinate characters, as in "Down to Earth," should in themselves be clean-cut in order to lead up to and enforce a harmony of aim, if even through contrast. This play is a well-woven pattern of very distinct threads, all uniting in a broad harmony of design.

It is in a genuine dramatic composition of this kind that Douglas Fairbanks really appears to best advantage. His personality is strong enough to move swiftly without the crutches of an infirm vehicle. He is in again and out again without loss of continuity, while that of the story is smoothly preserved. In a chivalrous attempt to rescue a lovely young girl from a fake sanatorium, whose patients are permitted to indulge their half-imaginary diseases, and, at the same time, cure her of destructive habits acquired in a life of self-indulgence, he purchases the good will and clientele of the place and smuggles the patients collectively aboard his yacht to avoid a pretended smallpox quarantine. He carries them all to a supposed desert isle, which is in reality a slice of headland cut off from civilization by inaccessible hills except through a single pass, where he posts a negro to impersonate a wild man.

On this supposed desert isle, the various types of neurotic and dyspeptic patients, each a distinct type, each rich enough to devote absorbed attention to "symptoms," are put through a rigorous course of training beside their activities in providing the necessities of life. The result solves a problem of our race and our times, but there is a pretty love story besides, and abundant comedy opportunity for the subordinate roles, at once a relief and an added charm. I saw the story artistically presented at the Rialto with opportunity to judge of its effect upon a critical audience, and it was received by a crowded house with enthusiasm.

"The Little Duchess"

Five-Part Peerless Photoplay Featuring Little Madge Evans Has Juvenile Story of Considerable Interest—Released by World.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IN LITTLE Madge Evans a juvenile star has been discovered whose power to please is never in doubt. "The Little Duchess," a five-part photoplay written by Julia Burnham and produced by Peerless, has been selected for the young lady's use. It is the story of a little girl who is left an orphan and sent to an asylum. She is known as Jerry, her right name being Geraldine Carmichael, and is the granddaughter of the Earl of Carinmore, a crabbed old nobleman, who cast off his son when he married Jerry's mother. The girl runs away from the orphanage with a boy named Billy and joins a circus. Here she is found by the Earl's lawyer and taken to England. Her grandfather is a woman hater and is bitterly disappointed when he learns that Jerry is a girl. He will not consent to let her remain unless she dresses as a boy. The Earl has thought his wife unfaithful to him for over thirty years. Jerry is able to set him right on this point, and the aged nobleman learns to love the little girl. There is an amusing underplot involving an attempt to pass off a bogus grandchild upon the Earl, and all the material is in keeping with the central theme. Harley Knoles, who directed the production, has selected the right types of characters and the proper locations, and transferred the story to the screen with excellent results.

Madge Evans, as stated at the beginning of this review, has the first requisite for a successful screen career—a winning personality. She is also a level-headed small person and does her bit with the calm assurance of an experienced actress. The supporting company includes Pinna Nesbit as Jerry's mother, Jack Drumier as the Earl, James Davis as Jim Dawson, Patrick Foy as Jim Snyder, Sheridan Tansey as Billy and Maxine Elliott Hicks as Sophia Dawson. Jack Drumier's performance of the Earl is particularly meritorious, and little Miss Hicks is as droll as ever in the role of the bogus heiress.

Scene from "The Little Duchess" (World).

Baby Osborne Picture on September 2nd.

Baby Marie Osborne is the star of the Pathe Gold Rooster play to be released on September 2, "Baby's Diplomacy." In the opinion of competent critics it should rank as the best picture in which she has ever been featured. The story is one which gives her more opportunity to show her talents than any of her previous starring vehicles. With her is an excellent cast, which includes Katharine McLaren, Philo McCullough, Margaret Warner and the famous little colored boy who has shone in several of the Baby's most recent pictures.

"The Varmint"

Jack Pickford and Louise Huff in Five-Part Screen Version of the Owen Johnson College Story Produced by Jesse L. Jasky—Released by Paramount.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

READERS of "The Varmint," the Owen Johnson story of college life that first appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, will welcome it in picture form. Gardner Hunting has made a five-part screen version, which Jesse L. Lasky has produced, the picture being under the direction of Wm. D. Taylor. Much of the story will appeal to the average patron of the screen. Allusions in the class room scenes to certain advanced points in grammar may be a trifle mystifying to those who have not known the advantages of a college education, but everyone will understand and relish the football game in which the hero figures, and the game fight he puts up against the entire school. The character of "The Varmint," christened John Humperdink Stover, has been faithfully and amusingly drawn by Owen Johnson, and the pranks of the plucky little braggart and his companions will be recognized as part and parcel of a college boy's experience.

Scene from "The Varmint" (Paramount).

The opening scene shows John Humperdink Stover perched on the front seat of the stage that is taking him to Lawrenceville. Behind him rides an elderly gentleman whom he takes to be anyone but a college professor. To him Dink confines a highly colored history of his exploits at the school from which he has just been expelled, and is confounded when he learns later that his listener is a professor of Latin at the Lawrenceville college. The daughter of this instructor becomes an important figure in "The Varmint's" school life, and Dink and the professor learn to respect each other to an unexpected degree before the finish of the story.

The picture has been skilfully produced, but will owe a large measure of its success to young Jack Pickford. He suits the part of J. H. Stover, and consequently has little difficutly in bringing out "The Varmint's" best and worst points. Louise Huff hasn't very much to do as Laura, but makes the most of her opportunities. Theodore Roberts plays the professor of Latin with a nice appreciation of the humor of the character, and Marian Comer gives a neat bit of male impersonation as the Tennessee Shad. Henry Malvin, Ben Suslow, Milton Schumann, Maurice Kessell, Manfield Stanley and Ed. Sedgwick complete the cast.

"Bab, the Fixer"

Jackie Saunders Featured in Five-Reel Comedy-Drama Produced by Horkheimer for Release by Mutual.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

JACKIE SAUNDERS again is up to her hoydenish tricks in "Bab, the Fixer," a five-reel comedy-drama produced by H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer for release by Mutual. Miss Saunders is seen as the daughter of a father who has become discouraged in his search for oil on his Western ranch. Much to the displeasure of her mother, the girl becomes betrothed to the youth who owns the adjoining ranch. Oil is struck on "Bab's" father's tract and the action shifts to the East. In the city the socially ambitious mother sends the daughter to a fashionable finishing school. Much footage is devoted to happenings at the school—happenings in which "Bab" takes a leading and sometimes hilarious part. The girl's mother schemes to separate her from her fiance, but is unsuccessful. The mother's ambitions lead to a separation from her husband.

Here "Bab" begins "fixing" things again. She is unsuccessful at first, but finally saves from financial ruin her father, her mother and her fiance. She finally "fixes" herself for life by marrying the young rancher.

The story was written by Lee Arthur. It shows little originality in either subject matter or treatment. Miss Saunders wears some fetching boudoir outfits and other clothes that will appeal to the women folk. In the cast with her are Arthur Shirley, R. Henry Grey, Leslie T. Pope, Mollie McConnell, Ruth Lackaye and Clara Kahler.

Photography, settings, lightings and other technical details are adequate.

"The Barker"

A Selig Production Which Has Chiefly to Do With Circus Life—Lew Fields in the Title Role—The Story by Chas. K. Harris.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE script of "The Barker," by Chas. K. Harris, was evidently written specially as a vehicle for Lew Fields, the famous actor, who has grown gray in the service of the dramatic stage. The written story centers attention and sympathy on the gentle old professor who has sacrificed his happiness and his mature life to save his unworthy younger brother. This sacrifice means expatriation from his native land and separation from his only child, a toddling girl, who occupies the whole of his heart and all his thoughts. In destitution, in his country of refuge, America, he secures, through the aid of a friend, a position with a circus as announcer or "barker" in front of one of the side shows.

The director of the picture has failed to give Mr. Fields the prominence intended in the written story. Indeed, Mr. Fields is almost quite submerged at times by minor characters, although his characterization is always pathetic and at all times shows the work of an artist.

James Harris as the Count De Grasse, the ringmaster of the circus and one of the villains of the story, gives a clever impersonation. So also does Frank Hamilton, who takes the role of Lemuel Salter, the crooked circus manager. Pat O'Malley's Wilfred Wells, the young owner of the circus, will make a strong appeal to the fans. The fight between Wells, the young college graduate, and the burly Lemuel Salter is a "pippin." There are no gentle taps here. It is a matter of science and sledge-hammer tactics all the way until the bully cries enough.

As Floria Fielding, the flying trapeze artiste of the circus, Amy Dennis is an attractive and graceful figure. In the scenes in which Floria appears with the Barker, before he learns that she is his long lost child, Miss Dennis shows affecting little touches of kindness and regard that will please the spectator. Humpy Jim Wilson, a circus employee and a devoted friend of Floria, is very well represented by William Fables, and the old circus musician, Professor Rendezvous, finds a fitting double in Fred Eckhart.

Scene from "The Barker" (Selig).

The release was made August 13 through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay.

Three Big Fox Pictures Released Soon.

To "The Honor System," R. A. Walsh's superb cinemelodrama, will go the honor of being the first release of William Fox's newly created Standard pictures. August 26 has been set as the date when this ten-reel masterpiece will be available for showings throughout the country. Thus far "The Honor System" has been issued only to certain cities near New York.

The second release of Standard pictures will be "Jack and the Beanstalk," the Fox kiddie feature, which is playing at the Globe theater, on Broadway. This will be sent out on September 2. Two weeks later, on September 16, "The Conqueror," William Farnum's brilliant screen presentation of the romance of Sam Houston's life, will be released.

"Golden Rule Kate"

Abundant Drama in Five-Part Triangle Photoplay Starring Louise Glaum.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

EVENTS move at a lively pace all through "Golden Rule Kate," a five-part Triangle photoplay written by Monte M. Katterjohn and starring Louise Glaum. The story tells of life in a Western mining town, and vigor of action, primitive passions at their best and also at the other extreme, and excellence of production are all to be found in the picture. The character played by Louise Glaum has earned the name of "Golden Rule Kate" from the square way in which she conducts her business, the lady being the proprietor of a saloon and dance hall called "The Red Light." She is also known as "The Sage-Brush Hen," and is located in Paradise, Nevada. Her object in collecting the loose change of the community at her center of the town's social life is to support her younger sister, who is not permitted to mix with the elder woman's customers.

Kate has everything her own way in Paradise until the arrival of a minister, who opens a church across the street from the saloon and proceeds to denounce "The Red Light" and its works in good set terms. This arouses Kate to violent anger, and when she makes the mistake of thinking that the Rev. Gavin McGregor has ruined her sister, she goes after him, gun in hand. The minister establishes his innocence, the wronged girl is avenged by an admirer who makes her his wife, and Kate closes the doors of "The Red Light" forever.

The flavor of Western romance about "Golden Rule Kate" will make it a welcome addition to the list of pictures that are intended merely to entertain. Reginald Barker, the director of the photoplay, has been keenly alive to the fact that drama is what is wanted on the screen, and cast, locations and the production in general are all centered on this one point.

Louise Glaum is just the type for the name part and her acting is in keeping with the quick-tempered but sound-hearted Kate. William Conklin as Rev. Gavin McGregor and Jack Gilbert as "The Heller" are the most effectvie members of the supporting company. Other capital performances are contributed by Jack Richardson, J. P. Lockney and Gertrude Claire.

"The Further Adventures of Stingaree"

Two New Episodes Are "At the Sign of the Kangaroo" and "By Order of the Court"—Plenty of Action as Usual—Two-Reel Kalem Pictures.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

ONE expects plenty of action in two-reel pictures, and the two newest episodes of the adventures of the chivalrous gentleman bandit, Stingaree, serve their purpose by ringing the changes on incidents that show his valor and kind heart. There are unnecessary cut-backs in them, and on the belt worn by one of the New South Wales Mounted Police a big U. S. is a bit too plain. But enough of carping. True Boardman, Paul Hurst, that doughty character man, and Edythe Sterling add many a bit to more than counterbalance drawbacks. The stories these films tell are of interest. They are Kalem pictures of two-reel length.

"By Order of the Court" tells a satisfying story of how Stingaree dares to enter a court in high session, judge sitting under the picture of Queen Victoria and all, just to bring evidence that will free an innocent man about to be condemned of murder. Stingaree and Howie are in need of a new horse. The sister of the accused prisoner is hurrying to get the paper that will free her brother in the hands of the judge before the trial is closed. Stingaree, trying to get her horse, is the unintentional cause of her falling. She turns the paper over to him and he delivers it. The judge accepts it and permits the outlaw to get a fair start on the police.

"At the Sign of the Kangaroo" has for its climax a rescue by Stingaree of a policeman whom he has locked in a room at the Kangaroo hotel. When he discovers the house on fire he goes back at the risk of his freedom and carries the sleeping man out. The story is not quite so concrete as the former episode and not so satisfactory, yet most of it is certainly likable, and it will be sufficiently entertaining to the average audience. The woman's part in this picture is the least pleasant that we have seen her play as yet. She is wife of the chief of police and does the sneak work of a detective to help her husband.

"The Show Down"

Bluebird Photoplay in Five Parts Featuring Myrtle Gonzalez and George Hernandez Has Picturesque Scenes and Fairly Interesting Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel

FEW of us have escaped the desire at some time in our lives to become Robinson Crusoes, and interest in the adventures of a number of castaways on a desert island is bound to be of an absorbing nature. In "The Show Down," a five-part Bluebird photoplay featuring Myrtle Gonzalez and George Hernandez, the big situation is made possible by the principal characters being shipwrecked in the Pacific Ocean and finding shelter on an uninhabited island. The heroine is the daughter of a wealthy man who is noted for his selfishness, and her chief admirer is a blase young man who finds life a decided bore. Forced to shift for himself, the young chap develops unexpected courage and resource and performs an important service for the country. The girl does her part also and her father turns out to be just the reverse of his reputation. In fact the real characters of the entire party are brought to the surface by the primitive lives they are compelled to lead.

Many of the scenes on the island have great pictorial beauty and the work of a well selected cast brings out all the good points of the story, which was written by Lynn F. Reynolds and Waldemar Young. Myrtle Gonzalez as Lydia Benson, George Hernandez as her father and Arthur Hoyt as George Chesbro are especially effective.

"The Little White Girl"

Little Mary McAlister Supported by John Cossar and Mabel Bardine in the Latest Episode of Essanay's "Do Children Count?" Series.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

LITTLE Mary McAlister is fortunate in having such excellent all-round actors as John Cossar and Mabel Bardine to support her in "The Little White Girl," the latest episode of Essanay's "Do Children Count?" series, a twenty-five minute picture.

John Cossar is Captain Shaw, a Civil War veteran who has become a miserly recluse. Mabel Bardine is his daughter, who eloped, was deserted, and turned away from her home by her father.

Scene from "The Little White Girl" (Essanay).

Little Mary is taken from an orphans' home by a woman who proves a hard taskmaster. The opening scene where Mary is blacking the stove for this woman is amusing. Mary joins some children in teasing the old miser and the children shove her into his house and shut her in. She wins his heart. He moves to better quarters after making arrangements with her guardian to support her. He sends her to a dressmaker's, where she falls in love with the dressmaker, who turns out to be her mother and the captain's daughter.

Little Mary is as usual at her best when she is trying on clothes or inspecting and trying the various toilet articles in her new and elegantly furnished bedroom. This picture is much better than some of its immediate predecessors. It was released August 8.

"The Discounters of Money"

A Well-Directed Two-Part O. Henry Story on the General Film Program Featuring Carleton King and Catherine Charleton.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

A PHOTOPLAY does not need to depend on a strong story. The story of "The Discounters of Money," the latest two-part O. Henry story, is slight. But the direction makes this an excellent film.

Catherine Charleton is Alice, a proud aristocrat whose family holds the first key made for Gramercy Park. Carleton King is Howard Pilkens, possessed of four million dollars inherited from his brewery father. Bobby Connelly and Aida Horton play these two parts in a flash-back showing what happened at the age of five. The names of the babes drawn from the wood are not known. They are a Virginia couple who have eloped. The girl adds interest to her part.

Carleton King is good in the opening scene when he is dressing for the evening. He's one of those young men who will not have anything to do with money that falls on the floor, even when it is bills. The valet can have it. He loses his grip on this characterization afterward. The scene in Alice's house when he proposes misses the mock-heroic tone that O. Henry gave it. Even a sub-title quoted from O. Henry seems flat. When he leaves the house he meets the babes drawn from the wood. He gets a bully punch in the eye protecting the young man from a gang of thugs. He offers the girl the hospitality of Alice's house and the youth the hospitality of Union Square Park.

The girl, Miss Eva Montgomery Bedford, tells Alice of her elopement from her old home in Virginia. The flash-back of this scene is especially good. We cannot recall a scene handled with so much emotional appeal where a girl's sorrow at leaving her old home overbalances her joy at being with her lover just as she is getting into the buggy to drive away. This director also has a fine sense of religious values. When Miss Bedford is ready to crawl into Alice's bed she kneels at the bedside to say her prayers. This is not done to set the scene for a vision; it is done just to be realistic. It is a master stroke. Most directors know the theatrical value of a family Bible or a crucifix, but few appear conversant with the religious duties of everyday life.

When Howard left Alice he told her to send him a rose if she ever wished to reconsider her answer. She promises to send him the little toy kitten he gave her when they were five years old, the only present she ever accepted from him. After Miss Bedford tells how brave Howard was in the gang fight Alice's blue blood gets a dash of Lexington red. That night Howard receives the toy kitten by messenger. When he opens the package he finds underneath the kitten a rose.

The ending of this photoplay is a stroke of genius, and it is not O. Henry's ending. Howard telephones to Alice in the middle of the night. Alice wakes up with the telephone ringing at her bedside. She considers a moment, decides that it must be Howard, then turns over and goes back to sleep without answering the phone.

"Fourth Conquest Program"

Five-Reel Program Made by Edison That Contains Dramatic, Comic, Educational and Scenic Subjects.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

THE principal number on the fourth Conquest program is Ralph Henry Barbour's story, "The Half-Back," in three parts, with Yale Boss in the leading role. This was reviewed in the issue of May 12 on page 978.

The comedy is "In Love's Laboratory," one reel. In the cast are: William Wadsworth, Jessie Stevens and Ivan Christy. The story is about an inventor of an almost perfect safety match. He succeeds not only with his invention, but also with a love match.

A Boy Scout story, "The Boy Who Cried Wolf," announced as a two-part subject on this program, was not shown to the reviewers. The story was written by Richard Harding Davis.

The short subjects on this program are: "Crystals in Formation," 398 feet. The titles make this an excellent educational and one that will interest those who never saw the inside of a school room. "Playing in Florida," 282 feet, deals mainly with a trip by airplane at a dollar a minute. "A Joy Rider of the Ocean," 320 feet, is a demonstration of the tenacious qualities of the Shark-Sucker. This picture was made at the New York Aquarium. It shows how this remarkable fish is used to catch turtles and other denizens of the deep.

Scene from "The Half Back" (Edison).

This program will interest the family. It is entertaining from beginning to end.

"Think It Over"

Catherine Calvert, Supported by Richard Tucker, Featured in a Five-Part Comedy-Drama—Released by Art Dramas.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

CATHERINE CALVERT is featured in "Think It Over," a five-part photoplay written and directed by Herbert Blache, made by U. S. Amusement Corporation and distributed by Art Dramas, Inc. It was released August 13.

Catherine Calvert gives an interesting portrayal of girlhood (she looks between sixteen and eighteen) in the part of Alice Rowland, an orphan school girl placed by the will of her father under the care of a wicked guardian who tries to marry her to his son to keep control of her estate. Richard Tucker does well as Whitworth, a middle-aged bachelor. Alice's mother who survived her husband, tried to correct the ill effects of the will by asking Whitworth to look out for the girl.

Alice hears her guardian plotting with his son to force her into marriage. She flees in the night to Whitworth, her bachelor angel. To keep her guardian from taking her back she marries Whitworth. Then they pretend to go on a honeymoon, not intending to live in wedlock. An auto accident compels them to spend the night at a friend's house. They are forced to occupy the same bedroom. (This situation is built up with a heavy hand.) But Whitworth sleeps on the porch roof outside the window. In the night he rolls off onto the ground. When his host finds him in the morning he pretends that he is a somnambulist. When Alice becomes of age she decides to be Whitworth's wife in earnest.

The acting of Catherine Calvert and Richard Tucker recommends this picture to Art Drama patrons. No doubt they will welcome it.

Bluebird Plans

Has Many Important Productions Completed and Under Way—Changes in Directing Staff.

BLUEBIRD has no worries concerning features for its program, provisions for releases having been made to cover the next three months, with productions complete and awaiting schedule once the final titles are affixed. Joseph De Grasse, Harry Solter, Rupert Julian, Edward Le Saint, Elmer Clifton, Robert Leonard and Bluebird's two women directors—Elsie Jane Wilson and Ida May Park—have contributed features of promised excellence and in accord with Bluebird standards.

Harry Solter having finished "Bitter Sweet," the next release in which Ella Hall will appear, has begun work on "The Dynast," featuring Carmel Meyers with Kenneth Harlan and Charles Hill Mailes chief in support. "Bitter Sweet" is intended to present Ella Hall on the October program, with Jack Nelson and Gretchen Lederer her principal aids.

Joseph De Grasse, who has all along directed Dorothy Phillips, has taken the screen management of Franklyn Farnum who will make his first lone-star appearance among Bluebird in "The Maverick," a comedy-drama Mr. De Grasse has just finished. Hitherto Mr. Farnum has co-starred with Brownie Vernon, but a general shift in Bluebird arrangements will make Herbert Rawlinson her screen-mate hereafter. The Rawlinson-Vernon combination will be directed by Elmer Clifton first appearing in "It's Up to You," a work just finished on the West Coast.

Dorothy Phillips, who has been alternately directed by Ida May Park and her husband, Joseph De Grasse, will in future have Miss Park as her mentor, "Bondage" being ready for release as Miss Phillips' offering for October. Since making her first appearance, last December, as a Bluebird star, Miss Phillips has appeared consistently once a month in Bluebird release, and has now taken a vacation that will be a well-deserved although brief holiday.

With Miss Phillips taking a temporary rest, her principal supporters, William Stowell and Lon Chaney, have been otherwise provided for. Mr. Chaney will play an important role in Franklyn Farnum's "The Maverick," and Mr. Stowell will be featured in Edward J. Le Saint's production of "The Man of God," now being finished at Universal City.

Robert Leonard is on the West Coast with Mae Murray, Bluebird's new star, completing preparations for her first production. The story has been selected, but until work is further advanced the title will not be announced. It is declared that for her introduction to Bluebirds, Miss Murray will have a scenario that will call into requisition her various talents showing her not alone as an actress but presenting her as a dancer in various styles as well.

Rupert Julian, who co-stars with Ruth Clifford, is working on "The Desire of the Moth," a story written by Eugene Manlove Rhodes. "The Mysterious Mr. Teller" has arrived at Bluebird headquarters and awaits release date. In this feature Mr. Julian and Miss Clifford carry mystery roles that operate one against the other in formulating a plot that is quite unusual in photoplaying.

Elsie Jane Wilson's first production has also arrived from the West Coast, carrying little Zoe Rae as the star of "Hidden Treasures." Now Miss Wilson is working on "The Cricket," in which Zoe Rae will also star with Gretchen Lederer, Rena Rogers and George Hupp chief in her support. Miss Wilson, who is the wife of Rupert Julian, has always assisted her husband in producing and is now advanced to the position of director for a series of plays in which little Miss Rae will be presented as a Bluebird star.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS GETS REMARKABLE COLLISION SCENES.

A most unusual feat was accomplished in the Hearst-Pathe News No. 64. A large ocean steamer was sunk by collision in New York harbor, but fortunately all of the many passengers were rescued. Within ten minutes a tug was chartered and sent down the bay with cameramen aboard. Scenes were secured of the passengers being picked up from the water.

Will Break Down Prejudice

Kaplan Believes That His Russian Art Films Will Make Foreign Product Popular.

THE film productions of the Moscow Art theater, Russia, described by Collier's Weekly as the pioneer in intelligent realism and one of the foremost theaters of the world, are to be shown soon in America. N. S. Kaplan, whose Russian Art Film Corporation is sponsor for the new Russian repertory, is aware of the prejudice of Americans for foreign films that by the very character of the production, the exaggerated gestures of the actors and the different style of direction give a flavor that is unpalatable to the patrons of the cinema theaters here. To overcome this attitude he has surmounted all obstacles in the way of obtaining the services of the renowned players of the Moscow Art theater.

Competent critics who have seen the half dozen productions which he has prepared from the more than fifty negatives which he brought from Moscow several weeks ago, say that he will succeed in impressing American exhibitors and theatergoers with the fact that Russian art films are consistently of a high and popular standard, that they reveal the highest and best taste in studio preparation, are based on masterpieces of literature and present unusually capable actors in a system that makes for real artistic direction.

It seems assured that these Russian Art films will be recognized at once as fully equal to the best traditions of the motion picture in America. Their atmosphere is always so real and natural and there is no attempt to make them appear anything but what they are, true pictures of Russian life with all its struggles and passionate ambitions, successes and failures [illegible].

AMERICAN WAR PICTURES FOR RELEASE IN FRANCE.

Although it has not been generally known, the Gaumont Company has been making pictures of America's military preparations for release in France through the Societe des Establissements Gaumont. The pictures have been made under the direction of Pell Mitchell, editor of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly. Recently he spent a day at Yaphank, N. Y., with Lawrence D'Armour, his chief of camera staff. At Yaphank the huge cantonment is being rushed to completion to house forty thousand men of the new National Army. The grounds and buildings were "shot" from all angles that the people of our sister republic across the ocean may see for themselves how whole-heartedly America is getting into the war. Among other pictures taken for release in France are a complete series of views of activities at West Point, the greatest military school in the world. Naturally the Gaumont Company is also sending abroad many pictures which have appeared within the last few weeks in the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly. These pictures will appear first in the Gaumont Palace Actualities, the news reel which is such a popular part of the program at the Gaumont Palace, the largest motion picture theater in the world.

"LUKE'S WILD WOMEN" FOR RELEASE SEPT. 2D.

In "Luke's Wild Women," a two-reel comedy to be released by Pathe on September 2, Harold Lloyd, the inimitable Rolin comedian, and his fellow fun-makers, "Snub" Pollard and Bebe Daniels, appear in a typical "Lonesome Luke" comedy full of rough house and original stunts.

"Luke" and "Snub" as shipwrecked sailors find their way via a raft to the shore of an Oriental country. Here they are captured and brought before the Sultan. They find him surrounded by fair women whose charms are such as to make them forget completely their perilous plight. The Sultan claps them into jail from which with laughable simplicity they soon make their escape. In revenge they soon turn the tables on their captore and engineer a very complete little revolution.

Besides the fun that is in every scene the cast contains the usual Rolin beauty congress. The many exhibitors who play these comedies will find "Luke's Wild Women" a very popular number.

"BLOOD OF HIS FATHERS" STUDY IN HEREDITY.

The second Horsley production on Art Dramas Program, which is entitled "Blood of His Fathers," is said to be a study in heredity and to be filled with many gripping scenes. Crane Wilbur, the popular star who scored what was perhaps his greatest hit in "Eye of Envy," his first Art Drama, plays three distinct roles in his new production.

The story was written by J. Francis Dunbar, author of "Eye of Envy," and directed by Harrish Ingraham. In the supporting cast are such favorites as Jode Mullally, Julia Jackson, Ruth King, Ray Thomson, Gene Crosby and Riche Carpenter.

The story is told in a prologue and four acts. The prologue takes place during the Civil War, and in it Wilbur is a disreputable captain of guerrillas, who go about the country in the wake of the army, destroying and inflicting desecration on those in their path.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

THE VENTURERS (Broadway Star Feature).—A picture of two dead game sports with adventure in their blood. Matrimony was too tame for one of them, the younger. He knew just what was going to happen, and with a wife everything would be cut and dried. The old man gets the girl not because he didn't love adventure, but because he has three years the start on the other, and he knew more. It is a most entertaining and commendable picture in two reels. The reviewer enjoyed it.

THE DISCOUNTERS OF MONEY (Broadway Star Feature).—An O. Henry story in two parts. Catherine Charleton and Carleton King have the leading parts. Bobby Connelly and Aida Horton appear in a flash-back. This is a well-directed story. It is reviewed in this issue.

AN ORDER OF THE COURT (Kalem).—Further installment of the "New Adventures of Stingaree" is given in this episode, which is quite likable and exciting. For a longer notice see elsewhere in this issue. A two-reel picture.

AT THE SIGN OF THE KANGAROO (Kalem).—A two-reel installment of the "New Adventures of Stingaree," in which the chivalrous outlaw rescues a mounted policeman from the burning hotel, the Kangaroo. A longer review of this episode is printed on another page of this issue.

VERNON, THE BOUNTIFUL (Black Cat).—A sensible chorus girl refuses to marry a young spendthrift for his money. She marries him for spite, and makes him go to work. He enters partnership with his tailor, and runs up a phenomenal sales record the first day. Virginia Valli is excellent as the chorus girl. This is one of the better Black Cats.

THE LONG GREEN TRAIL (Black Cat).—A 25-minute story with Virginia Valli and Rodney LaRock. To save his chewing gum business, Julian Barton plans to compel his son to marry Laura Bagley, the daughter of his competitor. He hires a gangster to kidnap the two. Laura's maid is captured by mistake. The son likes her better than Laura, so he marries her. Then it turns out that the maid is really the heroine that a bunch of tramps are reading about in a continued story that breaks off just at this point. The ending is unsatisfactory. Virginia Valli is, as usual, beautiful to look upon after she lays aside the maid's dress.

THE LOVE OF MADGE O'MARA (Selig).—Madge is cashier in Fred's chop house. A student of sociology becomes interested in her. She saves him from a gang. But the "social chasm" separates them. Later he is sick, and she is the trained nurse. There are bad spots of overacting and general unreality. This is a one-reeler.

HER PERILOUS RIDE (Selig).—This one-reeler is built about a girl's ride on an ostrich. It is a South African story. Jahalli, a black bandit, sets fire to the house on the ostrich farm. Doris rides to Fort Congo for aid. The love story is rather simple.

Butterfly Pictures.

THE MIDNIGHT MAN, August 13.—A moderately strong subject in five reels, written by Bess Meredyth and produced by Elmer Clifton. Jack Mulhall is featured as the hero, and is supported by a cast including Ann Kroman, Al MacQuarrie and others. The story contains some fairly interesting situations, but is not strong in development. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Greater Vitagraph.

BOBBY PACIFIST, August 27.—This is not as good as the other reels with Bobby Connelly. He is smitten on the right cheek and is non-resistent, not a true pacifist. Aida Horton call him a 'fraid-cat. He confides in the sea captain, and imagines an episode in which he rescues Aida from kidnappers. After this imaginary episode Aida makes up, says she was only fooling, and gives him a lolly-pop.

MARY JANE'S PA, August 13.—An admirable adaptation in five reels of the famous "small town" play, by Edith Ellis. The story is well-rounded, full of humor and pathos, and will appeal to all audiences. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

BOBBY'S BRAVERY.—Mabel Ballin is Bobby's school teacher. She is in love with his big brother Steve. Bobby is full of Sir Galahad, and worships his teacher as the lady of his heart. So he organizes a band of knights, who attempt to kidnap Steve. When they fail they all sign a declaration to be bachelors all their lives. This picture will interest adults.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay

BILLY AND THE BIG STICK (Conquest Program No. 3—Edison), July 28.—This adaptation of one of the more popular of Richard Harding Davis' stories is well done. William Wadsworth is President Poussevain, the black chief executive of a West Indian republic. Raymond McKee is Billy Barlow, the head of the electric light plant in the island capital, who has trouble collecting his salary and is threatened with death when he gets too insistent. Yona Landowska is Claire, the daughter of the innkeeper, in love with Billy. Jessie Stevens is the mother of Claire, anxious to match her daughter with an ancient widower with three children. There is good comedy in the four-part piece, which is a typical Davis story of the Southern republic, with its tinsel trappings and burlesque soldiers.

CLIMBING MOUNT WASHINGTON (Conquest Program No. 3—Edison), July 28.—A fine scenic, showing how a party of ten attempted to climb New Hampshire's big hill handicapped by Christmas snows, and how five succeeded in doing so. It is an excellent illustration of the hardships encountered in winter mountain climbing, and will interest, too, for its physical daring and for the unusual scenery.

GATHERING BANANAS AND COCOANUTS (Edison).—On the same reel is an interesting scenic showing the gathering and shipping of bananas in Jamaica.

TWO KENTUCKY BOYS (Conquest Program No. 3—Edison), July 28.—As pointed out in a more extended review in last week's issue this two-part subject is worth while—an excellent subject for showing to young and old. It carries the atmosphere of the civil war, especially of a state divided in its sympathies between the North and South.

THE HALF-BACK (Conquest), August 4.—This is the three-reel dramatic feature of the fourth Conquest program, with Yale Boss in the leading part. "In Love's Laboratory," a comedy; and "Crystals in Formation," "Playing in Florida," and "A Joy Rider of the Ocean" are the other numbers on this entertaining program. It is reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

A MAN, A GIRL, AND A LION (Selig), August 6.—This is a good two-reel animal picture. It shows the capture of a lion in the jungle in a net suspended in a pit. The lion is taken to a circus. The story deals with jealousy in the behind-the-scenes life of the circus. This is an instructive picture. Kathlyn Williams is the girl.

THE LITTLE WHITE GIRL (Essanay), August 8.—A 25-minute episode in the "Do Children Count?" series, with Little Mary McAlister supported by John Cossar and Mabel Bardine. This is an excellent picture. It is reviewed in this issue.

THE BARKER (Selig), August 13.—A story of circus life in which Lene Fields appears in the leading role. Amy Dennis, James Harris, Frank Hamilton, William Fables and Pat O'Malley are in the support.

Mutual Film Corporation.

BAB THE FIXER (Horkheimer), August 13.—Jackie Saunders is featured in an ordinary five-reel comedy drama. The story tells how "Bab" fixes things in her family and finally fixes herself for life by marrying the man of her choice against her mother's strenuous opposition. The picture is reviewed at length in the review columns.

THE WIDOW'S MIGHT (LaSalle), August 14.—A one-reel comedy number, with little excuse for its existence. A husky loafer marries a widow for her money, and other occupants of the house try to get a share of the widow's money by making the husband insane. There are a scant few laughs in the number.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

SUE THE SLEEP-WALKER (Black Diamond).—Sue returns from college fresh from a course in prehistoric research, and has a nightmare. She is in pajamas through most of the reel. Comedy effects are secured at the beginning with a garden hose; at the end by the blowing of a safe. Both of these will get laughs. A second-story elopement by way of a ladder offers a display of white stockings. Chase scenes lead to the bedrooms of a hotel. Trick effects show the sleep-walker stepping off a pier onto the water, and off a roof onto the air. This is a good single reel slap-stick.

DOWN TO EARTH (Artcraft).—A high-class comedy, with Douglas Fairbanks in a delightful role. A story of plenty of zip, bound to be received with enthusiasm by any intelligent audience.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE SARDINE FISHERIES AT MONTEREY (Pathe), August 12.—An instructive educational feature showing the manner in which sardines are taken from the ocean and prepared for the market. Quite comprehensive and very interesting.

BRINGING UP FATHER (Pathe), August 12.—Animated drawings by George MacManus on same reel with above. Father attends a hypnotic exhibition, and while under the influence of the professor dreams that he himself is a hypnotist. Some amusing scenes result.

THE FATAL RING (Pathe), August 26.—Eighth episode of this serial, featuring Pearl White and a capable supporting company. In this number Pearl restores the violet diamond in order to save the life of Tom Carlton. Carslake sees the diamond hidden by one of the crooks and procures it. Pearl attempts to recover it, and when the instalment closes is trying to open a safe in which an explosive has been placed. A characteristic number which does not greatly advance the plot, but carries the interest in the usual way.

IRIS (Pathe-Hepworth), August 26.—A five-reel adaptation of the famous play by Sir Arthur Pinero. This is performed by a strong cast of English players headed by Alma Taylor. It opens slowly and works up gradually to a strong dramatic situation. A pleasing comedy-drama well above the average in artistic quality. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 83 (Universal, August 9).—Recruiting for Uncle Sam; Kilties in America; negroes parade of protest against race riots; Roosevelt addressing Moose convention, and many other interesting subjects are included in this number.

UNIVERSAL CURRENT EVENTS NO. 13, August 11.—An entertaining and diversified number, including, among many other subjects, views of Vermont's National Guard; girls of America and Russia in uniform, and various other war sidelights.

THE ISLAND OF DEATH (Universal Special), August 13.—No. 8 of "The Gray Ghost" series. This installment opens up a new attempt on the part of the Gray Ghost to get the two million dollar necklace. He invades the home of Arabin personally. Morn Light is attacked by a ruffian in the house of mystery, and saved by the intervention of Hildreth. The number is exciting and well constructed.

THE PEARL NECKLACE (Universal Special), Rel. Week of August 20.—No. 9 of "The Gray Ghost" series. This is a thrilling and genuinely exciting installment in which the master villain and his band daringly enter the home of Arabin, the jeweler, and attempt to make away with the necklace. Harry Carter is doing very interesting work in the leading role. The serial is building up and filling out in a powerful way. The number closes with some exciting occurrences in the house of mystery.

BEHIND THE MAP (Joker), Week of August 20.—William Franey is the school teacher of a village school. He gets tipsy, makes love to one of the scholars, who gets the town bully to chase him out of town. The spanking machine and other details are reminiscent of Al Leech and the three rosebuds, an old vaudeville sketch. It is only fairly entertaining.

MOVE OVER (Nestor), Week of Aug. 20.—A "hospital" comedy, by Fred A. Palmer, featuring Eddie Lyons, Edith Roberts and Lee Moran. The girl is a nurse and one of the young men a patient. He trades places with the other in order to go to a ballgame. There is a riot in the hospital which brings numerous laughs followed by a lively chase. A typical number of the type and will entertain the average audience.

MRS. MADAM MANAGER (Joker), Rel. Week of August 20.—A burlesque comedy subject, by Tom Gibson, featuring Gale Henry as proprietor and manager of a small town opera house. She sells and collects tickets, shifts scenes and does other things. Her husband leads the orchestra and Gale creates trouble when he flirts with a chorus girl. This contains some amusing and enjoyable small business.

A FIVE-FOOT RULER (Victor), Rel. Week of August 20.—A two-reel comedy number, by Bess Meredyth, featuring Carter and Flora DeHaven and M. K. Wilson. The hero, Jerry, saves the daughter of the governor of Boliguay, attending a girls' school, from a designing man. The scene then switches to the province of Boliguay, where the young man's father is a wealthy oil king. Jerry is in bad with his father, but wins the admiration of the governor and is placed in charge of the army. There are some good burlesque scenes strung along in the second reel, a number of which bring laughter. Of course the hero wins the girl and is restored to his father's favor. An entertaining subject of the lighter sort.

SQUARING IT (Bison), Rel. Week of August 20.—A three-reel subject by George E. Marshall, featuring Neal Hart, Joe Rickson, Janet Eastman and Fred Church. The former, as "Crimpy" Steele, saves a starving man and his wife and also defends the latter from a designing individual. The plot is slightly obvious, but the Western settings are pleasing and the story holds considerable entertainment.

STREET CARS AND CARBUNCLES (L-KO), Rel. Week of August 20.—A two-reel comic, featuring Bob McKenzie and others. The fun centers around an old horse car, and winds up with a chase, in which various styles of vehicles participate. The comedy is just fair and at no time becomes very funny. Some of the interior sets and costumes are dirty and unattractive. This always mars the humorous effect.

WHOLESOME FILMS BOOK DIRECT.

Direct dealing between the exhibitor and the producer is the basis of the new sales policy announced by Wholesome Films corporation. This plan will call for one big central exchange in Chicago with which the exhibitors will deal direct, thus eliminating branches and go-betweens, on a straight square deal basis.

"This plan we consider is one of the most progressive steps thus far taken in methods of film distribution," said M. J. Weisfeldt, manager of Wholesome Films corporation. "It is easy for any successful exhibitor to estimate the economic advantages of this direct sales policy by the saving on overhead expenses, such as branch manager, clerks, rentals, etc. We pay express charges both ways. We make only one requirement of the exhibitor aside, of course, from paying for his rentals, and that is to book sufficiently far in advance so that on-time delivery may be assured any exhibitor anywhere in the United States.

A Western Heads Big "U" List

Twenty-three Reels of Drama, Comedy and News Features For Week August 20.

"SQUARING IT," a colorful Bison drama of the far west, featuring Neal Hart and Janet Eastman, heads Universal's regular list of releases for the week of August 20. Monday is Butterfly Day, as usual, signalized by the release of "The Lair of the Wolf," in which Denna Drew, Joseph Girard and Gretchen Lederer have been provided with effective parts. "Squaring It" bears the release date of Tuesday, August 21. The play is undoubtedly the strongest in which Neal Hart has yet appeared. Written by George Hively and produced by George Marshall, it tells the story of an outlaw's efforts to play fair with a young married couple who befriended him in his hour of need.

Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts will be presented on the same date in the Nestor comedy entitled "Move Over." This is a typical Lyons and Moran celluloid farce and details some amazing events that take place in the private hospital where Eddie is convalescing from what he claims is overwork. F. A. Palmer is the author of the scenario, while Roy Clements is credited with the direction.

"Street Cars and Carbunkles," a two-reel L-KO Comedy headlining Bob Mackenzie, Eva Novak and Eddie Barry, is the feature for Wednesday, August 22. J. G. Blystone and Dick Smith, directors of the Potpourri of absurdities, have succeeded in putting together a comedy of errors that has at least a score of laughter-making devises in each reel. The commercial rivalry that exists between a street railway and a jitney bus line is the occasion for misadventures galore. In the end both concerns are so completely wrecked that neither can be called the winner. The eighty-sixth issue of the Animated Weekly will be released on the same date, featuring [illegible] events. Clear photography and breezy captions will add distinction to the subjects pictured, as usual.

Little Zoe Rae, widely known for her clever acting in numerous Butterfly and Universal screen plays, will be starred in "Heart of Gold," the feature released Thursday, August 23. A human interest drama of genuine appeal, the production was written by Charles A. Wilson, Jr., and Karl R. Coolidge, and directed by George Sargent. Zoe takes the part of a child of the tenements, who is the humanizing influence in the life of a miserly pawnbroker. The miniature star is capably supported by Walter Belasco, Seymour Hastings and Gertrude Astor. "Behind the Map," a Joker Comedy featuring William Franey, will be released on the same date. Tom Gibson and William Beaudine are responsible for the story and direction of this laughable commentary upon life in the little old red school house. Lillian Peacock and Milburn Moranti are prominent in Franey's support.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven are the stars of the "Five Foot Ruler," a two-reel Victor Comedy scheduled for release Friday, August 24. The setting pictured in the opening of this stirring tale is a co-educational college where Carter, the Beau Brummel of the institution, is expelled for coming to the rescue of Argo, a beautiful South American student, who is being showered with unwelcome attentions by her companion in a private room at the local cafe one night. Argo is sent back home, and when her rescuer is cast adrift by his rich father he naturally follows her to the land of steaming tamale. As a result patrons of Universal service are provided with much delightful foolery. Bess Meredyth and Male Havey wrote the scenario, while Carter De Haven put on the production. The thirty-third issue of the Universal Screen Magazine will be released on the same day.

Gale Henry and Milton Sims will be featured in "Mrs. Madam Manager," a Joker Comedy, to be shown Saturday, August 25. Tom Gibson and Allen Curtis are credited with story and production, respectively. A rural opera house is utilized to give a picturesque background to the tale of the joys and woes of a company of visiting burlesquers. Lillian Peacock and Charles Haeffli are prominent in the case. A Power's cartoon and a Ditmar's educational complete the list of releases for the week.

"The Pearl Necklace," the ninth—and by many considered the most thrilling of the episodes yet shown of the "The Gray Ghose," the mystery serial founded upon Arthur Somers Roche's Saturday Evening Post novel, will also be released for exhibition outside of Greater New York during the week of August 20.

COLONEL HEEZA LIAR COMES BACK.

Theater patrons will be glad to learn that their old friend Colonel Heeza Liar has at last been coaxed out of his temporary retirement and will appear in the eighty-first release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph, the "magazine on the screen." It seems that the Colonel, or at least his creator, J. R. Bray, has been kept so very busy in producing Pictograph subjects that for many months he has not found time to sit down at his drawing board, but he finally had to harken to the insistent demands of the Colonel's many friends, with the result that the animated cartoon telling of the adventures of the Colonel as a temperance lecturer resulted, and hereafter Colonel Heeza Liar will appear regularly as a part of this famous release.

State Rights Department

Conducted by BEN H. GRIMM

Lesser Organization Virtually Formed

Despite Promoter's Illness, State Rights Men Get Together—Definite Announcement Soon—Big Men Involved.

DESPITE the illness of Sol L. Lesser, of San Francisco, who is confined in Dr. Stern's Sanitarium, New York, with typhoid fever, the organization of state rights men planned and promoted by him is progressing so rapidly that information has been vouchsafed that the organization will have been definitely formed by Wednesday, August 15. This information comes from Leon D. Netter, one of Mr. Lesser's lieutenants, who has been actively engaged in the work of organization.

According to Mr. Netter, Mr. Lesser is expected to be back in harness in two weeks at the most. He states that for obvious reasons no definite announcement regarding the new organization can be made at the present time, except that everything is running smoothly and that Mr. Lesser's organization has for its membership many of the biggest men in the state rights field.

Several meetings have been held in the Hotel Astor during the week just passed, and while everyone concerned is more or less reticent it was learned that the new organization will operate in much the same manner as does the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. According to the Moving Picture World's informant it will be the object of the organization to buy negative rights from manufacturers on pictures that come up to the requirements of the organization's reviewing committee. There will be, it is said, something like sixteen members in the new organization covering every territory in the country. After a film has been favorably viewed and the rights purchased, it is reported, every member of the organization will be taxed his pro rata share of the purchase price.

The names of the men who have launched out in the Lesser organization have not yet been announced. It is known from previous reports, however, that the number includes many men powerful in their respective territories. Just who they are, Mr. Netter says, will not be divulged until all arrangements have been completed.

A. KAY COMPANY GETS TWO NEW SERIES.

The A. Kay Company, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, announces that arrangements have been completed whereby the concern becomes the world-wide distributors for two new series of one-reelers—The Walt Mason Comedies and "Polly and Her Pals." The former pictures are the product of the Filmcraft Corporation, of which R. V. Rothermel is president, and the latter will be produced by Lathrop Films, Inc.

The "Polly and Her Pals" pictures will be adapted from the cartoons of the same title by Cliff Sterrett, which are being syndicated in newspapers all over the country. Grace Darling will be the featured player in these subjects, which will be directed by H. Lee Clothworthy, who gained a high reputation for comedy direction first with Essanay and later with Thomas H. Ince.

There are three of the Walt Mason comedies already completed. These are "The Dipper," "Bunked and Paid For" and "Hash." In all there will be twelve releases.

WOLFBERG EXTENDS FIELD OF OPERATION.

Harris P. Wolfberg, of Pittsburgh, has extended his field of operation by taking in Missouri and Kansas for "The Deemster." Mr. Wolfberg had already bought the rights to the Hall Caine feature for Ohio, western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and through his purchase achieved such success that he decided to close up with W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, for the additional states.

Optimistic reports of conditions and prospects in the midwest are given out by Mr. Wolfberg, who goes on record with the statement that prospects were never better for features with some claim to distinction. So good are the prospects in his new territory that Mr. Wolfberg has already opened offices in St. Louis and Kansas City.

"The important thing for state rights operators to learn," said Mr. Wolfberg, "is co-operation with the exhibitor. My men must use every available means to boost business whenever and wherever one of my features is booked. Service, to my way of reasoning, is based upon results obtained through the combined efforts of the man who sells and the man who buys."

Lee Promoting State Rights Organization

Plant to Have Representation in Every Territory—Will Not Buy Negative Rights—Mayer and Crandall Members.

JOSEPH F. LEE, one of the best known state rights experts in the business at present, is actively engaged in promoting an organization of state rights men representing territories covering the United States. The organization planned and now forming differs in several respects from the First Natioal Exhibitors' Circuit and the organization promoted by Sol L. Lesser. Chief in its departures from the aims of the other two organizations, which are quite similar in object, is the proposed Lee organization's aim to permit its members to reject any films that the individual does not see fit to purchase for his individual territory.

Mr. Lee already has lined up a number of big men, among them being Louis B. Mayer for the New England territory, and Harry Crandall for the Washington territory. Mr. Lee states that the organization will have in the neighborhood of fifteen members. He adds that the organization will have a representative wherever the other organizations are represented.

The organization planned by Mr. Lee makes its chief claim for distinction in that it will not endeavor to buy the rights of a picture to the entire country. As Mr. Lee puts it:

"How many instances are there in which a given group of men feel the same way toward a picture? Not many. Take a group of five buyers and show them a picture. Most of the time you'll find that there are five different opinions of the picture. But even with a really good picture only two or three of the five will believe that the film will be a clean-up in their territory. The other three or two believe that the picture will fall flat in their territories. And then again still another buyer operating in the same territory as one of the five who turned down the picture believes that the film will be a winner for him. Under the plans of the other organization their members must pay their share of the purchase price whether they believe the picture will clean up for them or not. Under the plans of our organization that feature will be done away with—a member will not be asked to pay for a picture unless he feels that it will be a money-maker for him. Whether he wants the picture or not is up to him entirely.

"We will not buy the negative rights to pictures. We will work under a plan whereby our members get protection in their respective territories. We will operate in what our members and prospective members believe to be the most common-sense, square-deal manner.

"For instance, John Smith has produced 'On the Bridge at Midnight.' It is a good picture, but half the members of our organization, say, do not believe that they want the picture. All right, we'll go to Mr. Smith and offer him almost as much for the seven territories controlled by our seven members who want the picture as he would get for the negative rights. That gives Mr. Smith the opportunity to sell the balance of territory to his own profit. We can afford to pay almost as much for the seven territories as for the negative rights because our members are getting protection in their territories; we can afford, too, to pay almost the amount of the offer made for the negative rights because that offer is always made on the basis of a quick sale and little or no trouble to the manufacturer, and, therefore, is always lower than the feature really is worth. That stands to reason, because a man wouldn't buy a negative unless he knew he was going to make money selling territorial rights to it, and under our scheme it will be a blind manufacturer who can't see that he will make more money dealing our way.

"The new organization is well under way, and announcement of members will be made in the very near future. I am in a position to say that the organization will be represented in every territory represented by any other organization."

"GOD'S MAN" SOLD FOR WEST VIRGINIA AND WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA.

Representing the Supreme Photo-Play Productions, of Pittsburgh, General Manager Harry F. Greele, after a special trip to New York, has completed a deal with the Frohman Amusement Corporation whereby his corporation has acquired the exclusive booking privileges to the latest Frohman success. "God's Man," starring H. B. Warner, for the territory of western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

"God's man," under the direction of the Supreme Photo-Play Productions, will have its premiere at a leading Pittsburgh theater and at Wheeling, W. Va., simultaneously.

PATCH OPENS OFFICES IN NEW YORK.

The Fort Pitt Theater Corporation of Pittsburgh, of which William Moore Patch is president and managing director, has opened a suite of offices on the nineteenth floor of the Times Building, Broadway and Forty-second street, in the heart of New York's film district. Mr. Patch has leased the entire floor and will handle the official war films of the Italian Government, called "The Italian Battlefront," now running at the Forty-fourth Street theater, from these offices.

The Fort Pitt Theater Corporation owns the Pitt theater, in Pittsburgh, one of the most successful picture houses in America. For over two years Mr. Patch has conducted a high-class policy with only two performances daily, and prices ranging from 25 cents to $1,50.

In addition to the Italian war pictures the Fort Pitt Theater Corporation is negotiating for the rights of several other big pictures for the United States and Canada.

A. KAY STARTS LION. COMEDY CAMPAIGN.

The announcement that the A. Kay Company had entered into an agreement with Harold J. Binney, president and director-general of Masterpictures, for the world rights to the "Make 'Em Roar" Lion Comedies, is followed by the information that a world-wide exploitation campaign has been launched. The A. Kay Company already has circularized every important exchange in the country, and a number of letters have been received with inquiry relative to the disposition of state rights territory.

The A. Kay Company was selected by Mr. Binney as the best medium of world-wide distribution of his Lion Comedies. Mr. Binney claims that a concern which lends its efforts solely to the marketing of one particular kind of pictures will make more of a success in handling his product than a concern which handles features and short subjects at the same time.

Masterpictures has arranged with the A. Kay Company for a weekly release of the Lion Comedies covering a period of one year.

COL. LEVY BUYS THREE BIG FEATURES.

Col. Fred Levy, president of the Big Feature Rights Corporation, of Louisville, Ky., has been in New York for more than a week on a big shopping tour. Col. Levy has purchased "The Deemster" for Kentucky and Tennessee, and "One Law for Both" and "Babbling Tongues" for Kentucky, Tennessee and Indiana. It is reported that Col. Levy consummated the "Deemster" deal with Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, in less than fifteen minutes. From the offices of Ivan Film Productions, Inc., comes the information that in addition to the two pictures he has alread purchased, Col. Levy has arranged for the purchase of Ivan's next seven-reel production.

Col. Levy is a member of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. It is his custom to show each of the pictures that he distributes in his territory for a week's run in the Strand and Mary Anderson theaters—two of Kentucky's finest houses

NEW ENGLAND BUYER IN TOWN.

H. G. Segal, general manager of the Globe Feature Film Corporation, of Boston, arrived in New York Monday, August 13. Mr. Segal is stopping at the Hotel Astor, and is looking over the market for meritorious productions available for the New England territory. He plans to remain in town for a week at least.

ZAMBRENO GETS EDWARD WARREN PRODUCTION

Frank Zambreno, of Unity Photoplays Company, Chicago. has purchased Edward Warren's production, "Souls Redeemed" ("The Warfare of the Flesh"), for Illinois, and is preparing a big campaign throughout his territory.

Edward Warren also reports the sale of "The Warfare of the Flesh" for Brazil and for British India.

KING BEES SUCCESSFUL IN MIDDLE WEST.

R. H. Cropper, general manager of the Standard Film Corporation, which has branch offices in St. Louis, Kansas City Chicago, Minneapolis and Omaha, and which controls the Billy West Comedies for that section, gives the following reason for the success of the comedies in that territory:

Nat. H. Spitzer, also manager of the King-Bee company, is a firm believer in advertising, and has organized a territory-wide newspaper campaign, such that every town is flooded with Billy West publicity. Seven million subscribers are reading about Billy West every day, and the papers selected for this campaign are selected for their circulation and prestige.

FOUR STATES CLOSED FOR "SHOULD SHE OBEY?"

Renowned Pictures Corporation announces that "Should She Obey?" has been purchased in the following territories: Illinois, H. E. Rice, Jr., Tower Building, Chicago; Indiana, Greiver & Herz, Consumers' Building, Chicago; Dominion of Canada, Famous Players Film Service; Toronto and New York, M. H. Hoffman, Inc., 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

"In Treason's Grasp" has been purchased for Greater New York by Exclusive Features, Inc., 729 Seventh avenue.

Motoy Doll Actors Versatile

President of the Peter Pan Corporation Refutes Expression That Doll Comedies Must Necessarily Be Similar.

H. C. Allen, president of the Peter Pan Film Corporation, which makes Motoy Comedies, takes emphatic exception to the objection raised in some quarters to the effect that owing to the type of the animated doll releases the comedies necessarily must become similar. He says that the field is not limited, and that it possesses rare possibilities for humor.

In support of this claim he outlined the plots of several of the recent releases, showing that in spite of using the same dolls, which after all will become as well-known as real actors and actresses, the pictures are entirely unlike.

"Take, for instance," said Mr. Allen, "'In the Jungle.' There we find Willie and Jane eloping from the nursery via a balloon, and landing in a jungle. After various adventures with lions, crocodiles, monkeys and savages they finally get the balloon started, and sail safely back to the nursery.

"Then look at 'The Midnight Frolic.' Here we have a revel of the dolls on the nursery floor after their little owners have gone to sleep. Teddy, the bear, installs himself as cameraman, and Willie and Jane play a love scene, which is broken up by Jimmy, who insists on imitating Charlie Chaplin. His comedy aspirations are finally squelched by Willie, who is a regular hero.

"In 'Dolly Doings,' Jimmy's antics with a needle and thread form the theme of the plot. He steals the other fellow's girl, but at last receives the just deserts of his mischief by in[illegible]

"'Out in the Rain' shows the dollies out of doors. They go auto riding and are caught in the rain. They take refuge in a convenient dog house, and wait for the shower to pass. There they are found later by their little owners.

"Jimmy is the principal mischief maker of all the doll actors. In 'Jimmy Gets the Pennant,' he takes part in a baseball game, and after valiantly cheering his side on to victory finally takes the bat, knocks a home run and breaks a neighbor's window

"An angry house-owner and a policeman try to arrest him, but for once he escapes the retribution of his misdeeds.

"Now it doesn't seem to me that any one of these resembles another. They are just as different from one another as are any releases, featuring the same actors. Nor is there any prospect of our running out of ideas."

WASHINGTON MEN BUY "REDEMPTION."

Acting for the Exhibitors' Film Exchange, of Washington, D. C., A. Dresner and Harry Crandall have purchased "Redemption" for the District of Columbia, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia. Julius Steger's production, in which Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, are featured, was sold the Washington men through the efforts of David Bernstein and Joseph F. Lee, New York representative of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange

Mr. Dresner says that he believes "Redemption" will break all records in his territory. It will open at the Acedamy theater, Baltimore, with a symphony orchestra and special music etc. It will have a run there of four weeks. After the Academy showing the picture will go on tour in the territory.

BUD FISHER FINISHES TOUR OF EXCHANGES.

Bud Fisher and "Ty" Cobb.

Bud Fisher, originator of the Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons, has returned to New York from the West, where he has been making an extensive tour of the exchanges handling his comedies. Mixing business with pleasure, Mr. Fisher did much shooting and fishing during his trip, and spent a most enjoyable week-end with his friend, "Ty" Cobb, the famous baseball player. The accompanying photograph shows the two cronies in the field.

During his absence from New York, Mr. Fisher also absorbed fresh suggestions for cartoons, and says that he is full of ideas at the present time.

"Thinking up ideas for humorous cartoons is a very serious business," he says. "In fact, it's the most difficult job I have. I simply try to keep myself posted on the principal topics of the day and treat them in a universal way, keeping in mind that the laugh must always be most prominent and at the same time free from malice and unpleasantness.

"I believe people want good, wholesome humor, to remove the bad taste so often left in their mouths by suggestive pictures, put on for moral education. And it is the short, light comedy which does the business. The day for the sex picture is gone. The whole game is getting cleaner and going after finer and less morbid entertainment."

Philosophy of State Rights Operating

Analytical Study and Other Common-Sense Reasoning Applied to Pictures and to Market Assure Results.

By Robert W. Priest.

MORE loose reasoning perhaps characterizes what is written about motion pictures in general and the state rights branch of the business in particular than any other subject of current interest excepting, of course, the war. Literally, the fool rushes in where the angel fears to tread. In such a case it argues considerable temerity on the part of anybody who, like myself, has an executive interest in the field, to enter the discussion, but I think I can say something on the matter that has not been said before, which, if carefully pondered, may have an aspect of practical value. So I'll run the risk of "being hoist with my own petard" and called the names I am calling other people.

The simplicity of the state rights plan of marketing pictures is seemingly so obvious to the smallest capacity that at the present time there is a bewildering list of these productions to select from. But there is no mechanical method known of producing "winners." You cannot reduce the matter to an automatic formula. Motion pictures are essentially abstract conceptions, not concrete manufactures. It is usually very much a case of trial and error, as opposed to mathematical precision, when you come to filming and assembling your scenes. The finished result is a complex conglomerate or personal equation which may be an artistic and financial success, or a dire failure on being shown to the public for the first time or thereafter. To this general rule, however, there are exceptions which I will subsequently cite.

But even so, you may roughly classify the state rights pictures. Yet more precisely, by the nature of things, they arrange themselves in some such order as the following:

(1) Features desirable in themselves.

(2) Features desirable in themselves and for their results.

(3) Features desirable for their results only.

If the unbiased student of the matter will consult recent records, he will, I think, agree with me that this method of classification is permissible. To the first class belong machine-made program features; to the third, sex and problem films and empirical junk—i.e., 90 per cent. of the whole. Now, when a buyer obtains a feature of the second class, he invariably secures prestige and profit as the result of his judicious handling of it.

Such a picture as "The Deemster" properly takes its place in the second class, I believe. As nearly as possible the production was a concrete one, in contradistinction to an empirical one. In other words, I believe its success was made a practical certainty by a few simple calculations or factors almost invariably omitted by ignorant quacks.

Let us consider some of the reasons why "The Deemster" was a success: Than Mr. Hall Caine, no modern author is better known, and the manner and original presentation of the production could not humanly be improved on. Its publicity value and box office magnetism were universally recognized. The moment "The Deemster" was offered to the public the price fixed itself. In fairness to my contemporaries in the business it should be said that this is what usually happens when features of its class are exploited.

It follows then that from the available list of state rights features a man of average intelligence can select productions that are bound to yield favorable returns. This is reducing state rights exploitation to a scientific basis. In other words, you may make financial success fairly certain.

The success of the territorial exploitation of the picture by state rights buyers is also as reasonably certain as the primary distributions, although this is not a subject that is within my province to discuss. What I am mainly concerned with on the present occasion is to make it clear that the proper production and exploitation of state rights features by responsible companies or individuals is virtually unattended by risk, and that it is up to the buyer who obtains a franchise to profit by the data for making money out of the picture which is usually in possession of the producing company.

Do we not, therefore, in these latter conditions, approach near to the ideal of state rights exploitation in the motion picture field? The history of the business shows that no program has been attended by continuous and invariable success, but that individual productions upon which time and care have been expended have redounded to the credit and profit of all concerned. "The Fall of Troy," released in 1910, is one of the first classic examples of the truth of the latter contention.

One of the advantages of dignified open market (or state rights) film manufacture is that it is inimical to the sweat shop methods of movie making, under which true art is unable to manifest itself.

For it is gradually coming to be recognized that the more artistic and truer to nature your big feature is made, the greater its chances of financial success.

CUMMINS LEAVES FOR CANADA.

Samuel Cummins, film broker, of the Longacre Bldg., New York, leaves for Canada this week to close several deals now pending on films for that territory. He will also look after a new company now being formed for export and import films.

"Lorelei of the Sea" Completed

Marine Film Company's First Production Ready for Screening—Released on State Rights—Directed by Henry Otto.

THE Marine Film Company's initial feature production, "Lorelei of the Sea," has been completed in California, and M. Philip Hansen, general manager of the company, is en route to New York with a print. The picture will be distributed on state rights. Mr. Hansen will stop at the Hotel Astor, and immediately on his arrival in New York will arrange for private showings.

"Lorelei of the Sea" features Tyrone Power, and the supporting cast includes Frances Burham, Jay Belasco, Winnifred Greenwood, John Oaker and Gypsy Abbott. Most of the scenes were taken on the Santa Barbara Islands, California, where the company employed a large number of diving girls for some of the artistic scenes which abound throughout the picture. Henry Otto, who produced "Undine" for Universal, is the director. The story was written by Richard Willis.

Mr. Hansen gave a private showing of the film this week in Los Angeles to the press and local theater managers, and the picture was praised unstintedly by those present. Apart from the general interest of the story, there are some remarkable scenes of pelicans, seals and seagulls which add interest to the feature. Tyrone Power gives a strong performance in this film and again proves what an exceptionally good screen appearance he possesses. Mr. Power will have the curious experience of seeing himself on the screen in two new features at the same time, for he is also starred in the ten-reel picture "The Planter," produced by the Nevada Film Company, to be released within a short time.

DETROIT FIRM BUYS "SPOILERS" FOR MICHIGAN.

The Barnett Film Attractions, Peter Smith Building, Detroit, has purchased the Michigan rights to "The Spoilers." This firm already has "Joan the Woman" and "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea." "The Spoilers" started an indefinite run at the Detroit Opera House, July 25. At the same time "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" completed a three-weeks" engagement there.

GETS WESTERN CANADIAN RIGHTS TO "NE'ER DO WELL."

R. J. Dawson, of the Kitsilano theater, Vancouver, has secured the Western Canadian rights of the Rex Beach production, "The Ne'er-do-well." Con Jones booked it for the Orpheum, where it is now running to big business. In a very short space of time Mr. Dawson has booked this production solid for several weeks to come.

FOREIGN RIGHTS TO "SUBMARINE EYE" SOLD.

The Williamson Brothers' "The Submarine Eye" has been sold for South Africa, France, Switzerland, Italy, the Balkan States and Canada. The Williamsons announce that they have received offers from virtually every territory in Europe and South America.

GINSBERG GETS LION COMEDIES FOR NEW YORK.

Henry Ginsberg, manager of the Short Features Exchange, Godfrey Building, New York, announces that he has consummated a deal with the A. Kay Company whereby he has secured the New York rights to the Lion Comedies. The Short Features Exchange, which specializes in the distribution of short subjects of merit, has been handling the product of the A. Kay Company for New York ever since the organization of that company.

The Lion Comedies, which are of slapstick nature, were screened for Mr. Ginsberg early last week. One of the officials of the A. Kay Company who was with Mr. Ginsberg during the screening of the comedies said that the latter was very enthusiastic about the pictures, and that he was sure that they would meet with success.

NOT IN THE SCENARIO.

Billy West, the star of King-Bee Comedies, was racing in his car to the Jacksonville studio the other day, and Ethlyn Gibson, his leading lady, also was racing to the studio in her car when she suddenly was halted by a policeman. Billy came up as Miss Gibson was arguing about her speed with the policeman and swore that if Miss Gibson was taken to the lock-up he would have to be taken along with her.

He was.

Both Billy and Miss Gibson were placed in the same cell. The judge was away on a fishing trip. News of the predicament reached Mrs. West, who is known professionally as Ellen Cassidy. Mrs. West demanded that Billy be released. She insisted that unless the comedian was released immediately she be put in the same cell.

She was.

We have been unable to learn just how much it cost Nat Spitzer, general manager of the company, to get his players out of the cooler.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

DONNA DREW STAR IN "THE LAIR OF THE WOLF."

Donna Drew heads the cast of "The Lair of the Wolf," the Butterfly feature for August 20. Prominent in her support are Gretchen Lederer, Joseph Girard, Val Paul and Charles Hill Mailes. This will be Miss Drew's first appearance as a star but her work is said to hold forth remarkable promise. She aroused much interest by her handling of the character of Naidine in a former Butterfly picture, "The Flame of Youth."

Scene from "The Lair of the Wolf" (Butterfly).

In "The Lair of the Wolf" Donna Drew takes the part of an incorrigibly romantic young girl who runs away from a commonplace home to see the world and live the life of freedom common to her dime novel heroes. Her eccentric old father, who nurses a hatred for one Cathcart, a wealthy but brutal neighbor, has given his daughter a boy's name, Steve, and has brought her up with the idea of some day assisting in the downfall of Cathcart.

Meanwhile Cathcart has married Margaret Dennis, a beautiful widow, and brought her to live at his country place which he calls "The Pines," although to the neighbors it is known by the more appropriate phrase, "The House of Gloom." Mrs. Cathcart's son, Jim Dennis, has barely reached his majority. He is employed in Cathcart's office. Learning that his mother is being ill treated by the manufacturer, he travels out to "The House of Gloom," determined to see that life is made easier for his mother. Before his mission is fulfilled, Jim runs into a barn, where Steve, disguised as a boy, has arrived before him. Jim turns in and sleeps beside his companion, not knowing that it is a charming young girl instead of a roughly clad boy who shares the hay-mow with him.

The next day the news comes out that Cathcart has been murdered. Circumstantial evidence points toward Jim Dennis. But at the eleventh hour the real solution of the mystery is brought about. Steve plays an important part in the denouement, which comes as a real surprise.

FOX SUNSHINE COMEDIES.

William Fox has announced that he will release during the coming year between twenty and twenty-six Sunshine comedies. The first of this series will be "His Smashing Career" and "A Milk-Fed Vamp," with the screen's supreme funmakers in the leading roles.

These pictures will be made under the supervision of Henry Lehrman, who is in charge of the Sunshine brand. Mr. Fox believes that in his coming comedy productions he will strike a new and better note in fun in the films.

Mr. Lehrman is one of the hardest workers in motion pictures. While he is making a comedy he generally forgets to eat. As one of his colleagues says, "He lives on laughs."

During a brief period of illness Lehrman had a screen arranged in his hospital room and a projection machine mounted behind his bed. Then he would lie propped up for hours, watching the work done by the directors who work under his supervision.

INTERESTING SELIG RELEASES.

For the week beginning Monday, August 13, the Selig company announces some interesting releases. For example, on Monday, August 13, "The Sole Survivor," a two-reel drama of Central American jungles, is released. "The Sole Survivor" was written by James Oliver Curwood, and features winning Bessie Eyton, supported by an all-star cast. "Her Heart's Desire" is the title of the one-reel drama released by Selig in General Film service on Saturday, August 18. Bessie Eyton is again featured in this beautiful production, one of the few one-reel film dramas directed by Colin Campbell. "Between Man and Beast" is the title of the Selig two-reel jungle drama released by Selig in General Film service on Monday, August 20. Again is pretty Bessie Eyton exploited in a drama of thrills. One sensational episode is where a gigantic ape captures and cares for a little child. "Her Salvation" is the title of the Selig one-reel release for Saturday, August 25, in which Bessie Eyton is again starred in a drama having to do with the submerged tenth.

MARY GARDEN TO ARRIVE SEPTEMBER 1.

Mary Garden will arrive at "an Atlantic port" the first week in September and immediately begin work before the camera for her first motion picture, "Thais," for Goldwyn. This information was received in New York by wireless on Saturday, August 4, in the last private message given transmission before the British government discontinued the Marconi company's trans-Atlantic service.

In France this summer Miss Garden has been the guest on numerous occasions of Anatole France, the celebrated author of "Thais," who has suggested no less than a hundred photographic developments of his famed story that had to be ignored or touched lightly in the story.

"THE DISCOUNTERS OF MONEY" (General Film).

In his brilliant story, "The Discounters of Money," O. Henry, the great American wizard of human moods, sneers pointedly at the "money-caliphs of the present day going about Bagdad-on-the-Subway trying to relieve the wants of the people." They imagine there are no sorrows that dough cannot heal and thus are handicapped. The screen production of this story, the current Broadway Star Feature release through General Film shows how young Howard Pilkins, millionaire, reached the heart of his beloved through human qualities taught him by two Babes Drawn from the Wood found shivering on a bench in Madison Square in the early dawn.

"The Discounters of Money" is the nineteenth of the two-reel O. Henry pictures. It features Carleton King, who has appeared in several former O. Henry pictures, as the hero Pilkins, and Miss Catherine Charlton as the heroine, Alice Von der Ruysling of Gramercy Park. Two other roles of interest are those of Marcus Clayton and Miss Eva Bedford of Virginia, stranded in New York. The parts respectively are taken by Webster Campbell and Lucille Heyer. The picture was directed by Martin Justice.

K-E-S-E Program

Releases Announced for the Fall and Early Winter Months. —Include Many Five-Reelers—Also Conquest Programs.

KLEINE-EDISON-SELIG-ESSANAY announce the completion of their program until well into the winter. The schedule of releases as arranged now follows: August 27, "The Lady of the Photograph," Edison, featuring Shirley Mason; Sept. 3, "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," Essanay, presenting Taylor Holmes; Sept. 10, "Pants," Essanay, in which charming little Mary McAlister will be starred; Sept. 17, title not yet given out; Sept. 24, "Men of the Desert," Essanay, featuring Jack Gardner; Oct. 1, title not yet announced; Oct. 8 "A Fool for Luck," Essanay, presenting Taylor Holmes; Oct. 15, "The Fibbers," Essanay, featuring Bryant Washburn; Oct. 22, title not yet announced; Oct. 29, novelty film, title to be announced later, Essanay, Marguerite Clayton; Nov. 4, title not yet decided upon; Nov. 11, "Two Bit Seats," Essanay, featuring Taylor Holmes.

In addition to the above releases, George Kleine has announced the following releases of the Edison Conquest Programs:

August 11, Conquest Program No. 5—"The Little Chevalier, featuring Shirley Mason, four reels; "Birds of a Far Off Sea," 500 ft.; "A Vanishing Race," 500 ft.; "Soldiers of the Sea." 1,000 ft.; "Gold and Diamond Mines of South Africa," 500 ft.; "The Dinosaur and the Baboon," 500 ft.

August 18, Conquest Program No. 6—"The Customary Two Weeks," featuring Kathryn Adams, Albert Ellis, Herbert Evans and Joseph Burke, four reels; "The Story of Plymouth Rock,' 1,000 ft.; "The Grand Canyon of Arizona," 500 ft.; "The Four R's," 500 ft.; "Nature's Perfect Thread-Spinner," 500 ft.; "The Magic of Spring," 500 ft.

August 25, Conquest Program No. 7—"T. Haviland Hicks, Freshman," 3 reels; "Gallagher," 2 reels; "Turning Out Silver Bullets," 1 reel; "Young Salts" and "The Holy Land," combined in 1 reel.

September 1, Conquest Program No. 8—"The Princess' Necklace," featuring Katherine Townsend and Walter McDonald 4 reels; "The Puzzling Billboard," 1 reel; "The Brook, Woodcraft for Boys," and "Shipping Live Fish in Sealed Bottles,' combined in 1 reel; "The Blind Fiddler," 1 reel.

Some of the country's most noted authors are contributing stories to be filmed in these Conquest Programs. Mrs. M. E H. Davis wrote "The Little Chevalier"; "The Customary Two Weeks" is from the pen of Freeman Tilden; "Gallagher" was written by Richard Harding Davis; "The Princess' Necklace" was written by Clara Freeman Alger.

Mr. Kleine's organization reports brisk inquiries and much business on Conquest Pictures which are produced by the Thomas A. Edison studios.

Many theaters throughout the country have set aside one day each week for the Conquest Program, which is composed of seven reels. In referring to these programs Mr. Kleine's Publicity Department describes them as "Films for the Whole Family." As the titles indicate, they are made up of dramas, comedies, scenic, travelogue, legendry, cartoons, scientific and educational.

SELIG PHYSICAL CULTURE PICTURES POPULAR.

According to reports from the K-E-S-E branch exchanges the country over, the Selig Athletic and Physical Culture films, ten in all, are proving more popular every day. Word of mouth advertising has accomplished wonders for this series, for those who have seen one of the pictures tell others of it and the attendance increases as the films are presented. Negotiations are now being made with the Selig company for the sale of the territorial rights to Australia and Japan.

The Selig Athletic and Physical Culture series presents leaders in all lines of legitimate sport. The most skilled boxers, the champion wrestlers, the most expert players of tennis, the most daring swimmers, in fact, leaders in all lines of athletic endeavor are shown in the Selig series, which consists of productions each two reels long, but presenting diversified scenes.

It has been discovered that the Selig Athletic series cultivates a desire in the hearts of the boys and girls to emulate the skill displayed by their respective favorites, and thus they have an incentive to keep in good physical condition. The pictures are careful to inculcate the lessons that only by correct living can young people hope for athletic supremacy.

Negotiations are now being made with the Selig Polyscope company for the sale of territorial rights in Australia and Japan for the Selig Athletic and Physical Culture series.

PARAMOUNT'S NEW SYSTEM A SUCCESS.

With the passing of the date set for the actual installation of the selective star series booking system, August 5, Paramount announces unqualified success of the plan. In discussing the situation as it stands after only a few days of operation, Al. Lichtman, general sales manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, declared that the plan had worked out even more successfully than the heads of the organization had hoped.

Week's Work at Fox Studios

Casts for Virginia Pearson and Valeska Suratt Pictures Complete.

The casts for the new pictures starring Virginia Pearson and Valeska Suratt have been practically completed at William Fox's Fort Lee studios during the last week. In Miss Pearson's support will appear Claire Whitney, Eric Mayne, Matilda Brundage, John Goldsworthy, Robert Elliott, Martin Faust, William Kennedy, Dan Sullivan and William Burton.

Miss Suratt's company will consist of John Webb Dillion, Edward Martindel, Robert Cummings and Charles Craig. Mr. Martindel had a brilliant stage record prior to his entry into films, as he had important roles with Mrs. Patrick Campbell and Fritzi Scheff for several seasons.

By a transfer in directors, Miss Pearson's picture will be made under the direction of William Nigh, who screened Miss Suratt's last two features. Miss Suratt, in turn, will be the star of the Carl Harbaugh company. Mr. Harbaugh recently completed "When False Tongues Speak," in which Miss Pearson has the stellar part.

R. A. Walsh's next drama in which Miriam Cooper is the featured player, has been titled "Betrayed," by William Fox. The principals of the company besides Miss Cooper are Hobart Bosworth, James Marcus, Montague Blue and Wheeler Oakman.

"Durand of the Bad Lands," Dustin Farnum's drama of the West, will be released by William Fox on August 13. This will mark "Dusty's" debut on the screen as a Fox player.

Mr. Farnum has been busy for almost a year enacting the leading roles in a series of pictures for Fox Film Corporation.

An unusually fine cast was assembled for "Durand of the Bad Lands." Included among the company were Winifred Kingston, Babe Cressman and Tom Mix.

A beautiful reproduction of a little Dutch village has been built at William Fox's studios in the East for use in June Caprice's picture, "Every Girl's Dream." The town is complete from cobblestones to windmill. The film is now scheduled tentatively for release on Aug. 27.

To "The Honor System," R. A. Walsh's great cinemelodrama, will go the honor of being the first release of William Fox's newly-created Standard Pictures. August 26 has been set as the date when this reel masterpiece will be available for showings throughout the country.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CHANGES FIRST PLAY.

Herman Sudermann's immortal "Magda," played in every language and the favorite dramatic vehicle of such superstars as Bernhardt and Duse, will be the first of the new series of Clara Kimball Young photoplays to be made under the popular star's own personal direction by her own personally directed company. "The Marionettes" had been announced as the initial production under the new plan, but it has been necessary to supersede it with "Magda" because of a question which has arisen as to the screen rights of the play.

Harry I. Garson, under whose personal management Miss Young is now operating, purchased "The Marionettes" rights from Edgar Selden, who represents the French Authors' Society, and with her cast practically selected, costumes purchased and a number of sets made, a week's "shooting" had been done when notification was received from the Charles Frohman Estate that the screen rights to "The Marionettes" belonged to them by virtue of a previous purchase through Sanger & Jordan. Under the circumstances the question of just who owns "The Marionettes" for photoplay purposes is very much in doubt, but because of the efforts she is already making to establish her rights in the premises, Miss Young feels reasonably sure that she will be able to use "The Marionettes" as one of her forthcoming releases.

THE ACTIVITIES OF PARALTA.

Activity at the Paralta offices is attracting much attention in the inside circles of motion picture production and rumor has it that three new Paralta producing companies are being organized by Carl Anderson and his associates which will give his company the control of a large number of star productions a year.

When the Paralta company took over the Clune studios in Hollywood, instead of providing J. Warren Kerrigan and Bessie Barriscale with separate establishments, as was at first planned, it was done because the establishment is sufficiently large to house at least five companies and give each practically separate accommodations.

The new glass-covered stage, 50 by 150 feet, the great open air stages, 80 by 200 feet, and the 18 acres of field space for practical sets afford ample opportunity for the making of several big pictures at one time and it seems evident that Paralta intends to take full advantage of every opportunity to make its big studios as efficient as possible.

UNIVERSAL TO ISSUE NEW BRANDS.

The Universal Film Manufacturing company wishes to announce to the trade the fact that it will shortly issue three new brands of pictures under the names of Golden Rod, Premier and Primrose. Including the Star Featurette, the Universal Current Events and the Butterfly pictures, this will make six new brands that the Universal has put on the market since the first of the year.

George Ade Fables for General

Important New Product Starts September 1—Four-Reel Falcon Features Also Beginning—New O. Henry Subjects Current.

THE essence of Americanism in literature is now controlled in film form by the General Film Company with the Ade Fables and the O. Henry stories. The sensational success of the O. Henry stories on the screen is recent film history, while the former picturization of George Ade Fables, in 1916, made a tremendous success. The new series of George Ade comedies from Essanay is being given a most expert production to bring into visual form the keen, wholesome humor of the author with its native quaintness and brilliancy of delineation. General Film announces the first release for September 1 will be "The Fable of the Twelve-Cylinder Speed of the Leisure Class."

It may be stated that two more new O. Henry releases are now ready, bringing the list of the two-reel O. Henry to a total of twenty. The new ones are "Discounters of Money" and "The Furnished Room." Upon the completion of the two-reel stories, a notable list of four-reel O. Henry stories and also a group of one-reel subjects from the same author will be offered. Comedy-dramas and dramas will generally alternate.

A Louis Joseph Vance story, "The Mainspring," which was published in Popular Magazine, is the first of the Falcon Features, four-reel productions, which are the first announcements of General Film releases of that length. "The Mainspring," featuring Henry King, will be followed by "The Martinache Marriage," by Beatrix Demarest Lloyd, featuring Margaret Landis and Philo McCullough. The third Falcon Feature is to be "The Stolen Play," a remarkable application of the dramatic possibilities of hypnotism. The picture features Ruth Roland and William Conklin. All of these Falcon features were supervised by H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer.

The great dramatic impression made by the Kalem offering through General Film, "The Further Adventures of Stingaree," continues. This series stars True Boardman. His well-known and highly-admired role of Stingaree, a courtly Australian bushranger, is proving a money-maker wherever it is shown. Although each story is separate, the cumulative interest in the series is noteworthy. Possibly, however, this is not so surprising when it is remembered that each story was specially written for the screen by the author, E. W. Hornung, who is also the creator of "Raffles." The series is now reaching the eleventh adventure, "The Sign of the Kangaroo."

Some splendid Selig wild animal dramas have been coming out on the General Film schedule also. "A Man, a Girl and a Lion," with Thomas Santschi and Bessie Eyton, and "Her Perilous Ride" with Bessie Eyton, are now followed with "The Sole Survivor" and "Her Heart's Desire." These are dramatic subjects, two reels and one reel, respectively. The Selig World Library, the weekly one-reel educational, is keeping up to the standard and has reached its fourteenth consecutive number.

The Sparkle, Jaxon and Ray comedies are all in their second series, the Sparkle and Jaxon subjects being available in groups of six, an arrangement that has proved very popular with exhibitors.

Megrue Seeking First Hand Information

Goldwyn Author Will Visit Film Men and Exhibitors in West and Northwest to Learn What's What Picturewise.

ROI COOPER MEGRUE, playwright, co-author with Irvin S. Cobb of Maxine Elliott's first Goldwyn picture, "Fighting Odds," and member of the Goldwyn advisory board, is to make a tour combining business with pleasure.

Mr. Megrue and his mother left last week on their annual vacation, and by now they are beginning to enter the big cities of the Canadian West. In the Canadian Rockies and our own Northwest the author of many successful plays had felt certain that he could evade all forms of work for sixty days.

Instead Mr. Megrue will labor unceasingly, for he has been assigned by Goldwyn to meet the managers of all the Goldwyn offices in Western Canada and also those in Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver, Minneapolis and elsewhere in that territory. Through these managers the playwright will meet the owners of motion picture theaters in cities and towns of all sizes.

This is the first time in the history of the industry that one of the big figures in dramatic authorship has ever been sent directly to the men who exhibit motion pictures to the public to ask these influential showmen their opinion as to what the public desires on the screen.

Mr. Cobb smiles broadly when he thinks of the work ahead of his literary partner, and plans a north woods fishing trip in a region where there are few, if any, screen theaters.

As Mr. Megrue and his mother will be in the Northwest on and after October 7, the date when "Fighting Odds" is released, big exhibitors unquestionably will see to having him make personal appearances in conjunction with the presentation of Miss Elliott's picture.

Among the cities in the Megrue itinerary are Calgary, Winnipeg, Banff, Edmonton, Vancouver and Victoria, in Canada, and many of the larger cities in the western half of this country.

Marie Dressler to Make "The Scrublady"

Two-Part Comedy Will Carry Story of Munitions Factory and Is Said to Have Real Plot.

THE Dressler Producing Corporation is completing its first comedy, soon to be released through the Goldwyn Distributing corporation, to be called "The Scrublady." Marie Dressler herself will head the cast of every picture, of course. In "The Scrublady," written and directed by Vincent Bryan, Miss Dressler has full opportunity to be as funny as she can. But she has not hesitated to surround herself with men and women of proved comedy reputation, and has permitted Mr. Bryan to give them situations and action offering full play for their ability.

In her new picture Miss Dressler is a scrubwoman in a munitions factory. The two-reel comedy has a real plot which, for obvious reasons, may not be divulged. The leading woman in the support is Miss Florence Hamilton, a brunette "discovery" of Miss Dressler's. Also in the cast is Raymonde Cacho, before the war a moving picture comedian in Paris. He served in the early part of the conflict, but was wounded in a battle along the Meuse.

Other players are Fred Hallen of the team of Hallen and Hart, who is making his first appearance in films, and Miss Harriet Ross. Miss Dressler's scenario writer and director, Mr. Bryan, won his spurs with Charlie Chaplin. Her chief cameraman, Duke Zalibra, also comes from the Chaplin studio.

AUG. 17 MARKS RELEASE OF "THE MAINSPRING."

After inspecting the six-sheet, three-sheet and one-sheet posters for "The Mainspring" and approving them, General Film officials found the lithographic work under such good headway that all the district offices over the country would receive their paper in good time for the beginning of the Falcon Features as a weekly four-reel feature release. Consequently August 17 was confirmed as the initial date of distribution, beginning with "The Mainspring."

"A TRIP TO CHINATOWN" (Selig).

"A Trip To Chinatown," one of Charles Hoyt's cleverest comedies, is the Selig comedy release in K-E-S-E service on Monday, August 20. The all-star cast, which has aided so materially in making the previous Selig Hoyt comedies so successful, contribute to the gayety of this two-reel comedy. J. A. Richmond directed the comedy and in the cast can be named William Fables, James Harris, Amy Leah Dennis, Fanny Cohen, Frank Hamilton and A. Francis Lenz.

I. Noah Heap, after giving a number of the race track patrons some very poor tips, is chased by the copper, Welland Strong, who is ever on his trail. Weary and discouraged, Noah wanders in a "Chink" laundry and induces the owners to give him a smoke. After a couple of good, healthy drags at the pipe he is off for a wonderful dream. He finds himself in a palace, surrounded by beautiful girls and the Princess, who immediately falls desperately in love with him. He is even provided with a private slave, who proves to be none other than the despised copper, Welland Strong. Noah forces the copper to battle with a gladiator, a lion, which in turn prove easy prey for the cop. The Princess then transfers her affections to Welland Strong. Noah, chased by the guards, takes refuge beneath some skins. While the guards are poking the skins with their spears, I. Noah Heap comes to life to discover the old "Chink" poking him with a clothes-stick and demanding his money for the smoke. Noah is thrown into the street again and rolls into the waiting arms of the cop and is again marched off to jail.

Scene from "A Trip to Chinatown" (Selig).

The Selig Company promises an unusual number of elaborate Oriental sets, a lot of vivacious damsels, and a succession of side-splitting episodes.

How Goldwyn Plan Worked Out

Company Now Has Nine Completed Productions With Three on the Way—Booking Only on Examination.

GOLDWYN Pictures Corporation's revolutionary sales policy, announced when the company was formed last winter, the essence of the policy being that Goldwyn desired all prospective exhibitor customers to see the Goldwyn Pictures before signing contracts, has received a splendid indorsement from motion picture theater owners of the United States.

Last February Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, determined to market the Goldwyn Pictures under a system that comprised the following ideas:

1. That no exhibitor would be asked to take the word of Goldwyn's owners with regard to Goldwyn Pictures.
2. That Goldwyn would make not less than twelve finished productions in advance of its first release on September 9, 1917.
3. That Goldwyn always would keep from six to eight months ahead of its releases, thereby eliminating the possibility of ever marketing any hastily made pictures.
4. And above all else, that all Goldwyn Pictures would be sold only after submitting them for examination and inspection to the men who were being solicited to rent them.

Ten months of work has resulted in the completion of nine Goldwyn productions of extreme excellence and quality—productions that through advance showings have received the indorsement of the ablest and most careful critics in the larger American cities. Three additional Goldwyn Pictures are under way, which means that the company has lived up to its promises of last winter.

Trade showings have been held and are being held in the Goldwyn branches in all parts of the United States and Canada and exhibitors large and small are seeing months in advance the pictures they have the opportunity to rent for their houses. In other words, they are seeing the merchandise and buying it if they like it and leaving it alone if they do not.

"THE COUNTESS CHARMING" (Paramount).

In his forthcoming Paramount picture, his first venture into filmland, Julian Eltinge, manikin of twentieth century female charm, packs a real wallop in his right jab. Eltinge is a husky youth, so leathery that his female impersonations offer the strongest contrast between the man and the part he assumes. His stock in trade is his ability to transform himself from the robust male to the personable female with the minimum of effort and the maximum of deceptiveness. Added to that, Eltinge has an ability at dramatic portrayal that is a considerable asset. And added to that he is able to turn from the grace and delicacy of what used to be termed the weaker sex to the scientific right hand body punch of the mere male.

Mr. Eltinge plays a double role, naturally, in his first Paramount picture. From the virile young lover, cast out of society because of an unintended offense, he assumes the role of a bogus countess and gets into considerable hot water and many lavish clothes. One of the situations, as the countess, demands a fight with the police and a detective.

Scene from "The Countess Charming" (Paramount).

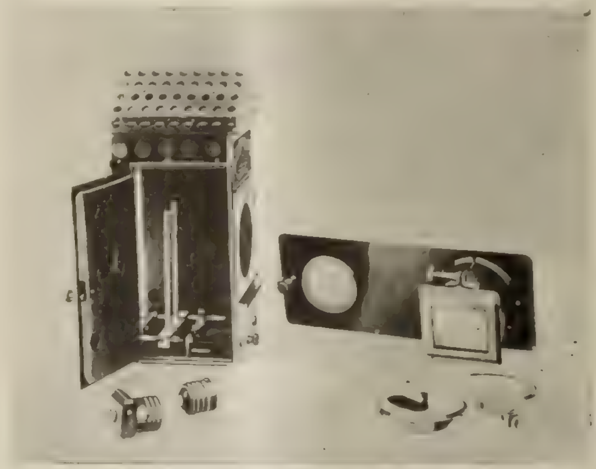
The detective happens to be Billy Elmer. Mr. Elmer is not a giant, but he commands a physique that brooks little interference. Part of that physique comes from intensive training and conservation of natural resources. The Countess Charming, whose real name is Bill Dalton, lands with her right on the point of the detective's jaw. No perfect lady would take advantage of the result of that blow. The countess calls it a day's work and walks off the scene.

Mazda Lamps Now Ready for Market

Use of Sheck Adapter Will Convert Any Projection Machine for Picture Use.

MAZDA incandescent lamps for motion picture projection are no longer an experiment, but a proved and established success, according to advices received from the Mazda Lamp Laboratories and from the Argus Lamp and Appliance Company, Cleveland.

This latter company has correlated the development of Mazda motion picture projector lamps by perfecting the Sheck Universal Adapter, which will immediately convert any type of motion picture projection machine with carbon arc to the use of the new lamp. The announcement of the company includes the fact that these adapters and lamps are now ready for the market.



The Oscar Sheck Universal Adapter.

The adapter now being exploited is the invention of Oscar M. Sheck, who has been for the past year working hand in hand with engineers of the company.

Mr. Sheck, in addition to his engineering activities, finds time to discharge the duties of one of the general organizers of the National Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Operators. He is personally known to thousands of operators throughout the United States and Canada, all of whom will be greatly interested to learn of the Sheck Appliance.

The claim is made for the new lamp that it will give a better light; that it will completely eliminate flicker and screen shadows; that it will eliminate eyestrain by removing the harsh qualities now present in carbon illumination, and that it will further recommend itself to exhibitors for the reason that the consumption of electric current will be substantially reduced.

The Argus Company has designed a special adapter with a universal application which may be attached to any of the present carbon lamp housings without cutting or marring the housing in any way, or even disturbing the carbon arc equipment.

H. H. Cudmore, general manager of the Argus Company, is personally directing the distribution of the Sheck Universal Adapters.

"We are of the opinion," said Mr. Cudmore, "that the development of this new lamp and the coincident invention of the adapter will revolutionize the entire field of motion picture projection. We have had lamps running in prominent theaters in Cleveland for more than a year, and the proprietors of these theaters are most enthusiastic advocates of the new projection."

"Since our preliminary announcements have been made, the Argus Lamp Company has provided extensive manufacturing facilities, a new factory modern in every respect now being constructed in East Cleveland, and we hope to be able to keep pace with our orders so that shipments may be made with little or no delay."

ANOTHER EXPLOSION.

Since it has become a habit to hold the war responsible for most anything nowadays, you might conclude that an "onsteen centimeter shell" had struck the Simplex plant lately, for machines have been scattered so far and wide that even the antipodes didn't escape. Just recently Simplexes were shot out to Australia, China, England, France, Japan, Norway, the Philippines and South America (we put 'em in alphabetical order so you won't get mixed).

Fact is, that over at the Simplex factory a visitor might think the boys had been to hear Billy Sunday, for if you listen closely you can hear them hum "from Greenland's icy mountains to India's coral strand," etc., etc.

K-E-S-E Patrons Want Scenics

Essanay Will Supply the Demand in a New Series of One-Reel Subjects.

AN INNOVATION in Essanay's portion of the K-E-S-E program in the future will be a series of one-reel educational subjects to be entitled "The Wonders of Nature and Science."

For several months branch managers of the K-E-S-E service and Essanay officials have been conducting an exhaustive investigation into the present-day demands of exhibitors for program material. The inquiry has covered the entire country, inclding the small exhibitor as well as the large. And the general public attitude has been sounded out as well to determine the opinion of the people on how much of a show should be given for the admission price. In almost every instance there was a demand for one-reel scenics to fill out the program.

The forthcoming Essanay series is the result of this investigation. The units will be released one each week and can be used with any program. There will be ten pictures in the series, and these will be divided between the two subjects, the wonders of nature and the wonders of science.

The first half will present some of the scenic beauties of Canada which never before have been seen on the screen. Views of the Canadian Rockies and their majestic splendor will comprise one unit, the four others will include scenes in old Quebec, showing the quaint old French dwellings and streets and the unique characteristics of its people; Nova Scotia, made famous by the poet Longfellow in his "Evangeline"; British Columbia and its wilderness of fir-clad mountain and everlasting snows; and views of the Upper Winnipeg River, one of the most picturesque streams in the world.

Even more wonderful than these are the wonders of science which the latter half of the series will reveal. Each of these five units is devoted to the intricacies of one of the nation's big industries, from beginning to end. The science of medicine and surgery, one of these units, shows from whence the ingredients of various medicines well known to the public are obtained, how they are prepared, and their uses. The surgical division of this reel shows the operating rooms of great hospitals and explains the uses of the delicate instruments with which human lives are saved. The world's greatest industry, steel, is the subject of another unit. Huge steel mills are shown in intimate glimpses, together with realistic scenes of ore mining and the preparations of the finished product. Other great industries are depicted in the succeeding units in their entirety.

The release of this series will come within a short time. The Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay service already is booking the film.

VICTOR MOORE IN "SUMMER BOARDING."

Victor Moore will release on August 13 his latest comedy called "Summer Boarding." It is a continuation of his "family series," written by Thos. J. Gray.

Vic reads an ad in the Summer Resort Column of a newspaper advertising "Restful Villa" at Bullem-in-the-Pines. The place, so the ad reads, has everything your heart would desire, and wanting to get away from the heat of the city, Vic decides here's his chance, and packs his family up and off they go. They soon arrive at Bullem-in-the-Pines and are met at the station by a hackman whom Vic describes as "Rip Van Winkle." After many hardships in the hack they manage to reach Restful Villa. The place is everything that your heart would NOT desire, and from this moment on Vic's troubles begin. The things that happen to him and his family help to make great laughing situations which end up in Vic and his family trying to escape from the Villa, by climbing down out of the window. They manage to make a "get away" and arrive home all in, resolving that so far as summer boarding is concerned, "never again." If you like "Bungalowing" and "Commuting," you will certainly like "Summer Boarding."

Scene from "Summer Boarding" (Klever).

This comedy is one of the fastest Moore has made, and he is supported by a cast of thirty.

OLD NASHVILLE IN "THE CONQUEROR."

In "The Conqueror," the titanic American drama produced for William Fox by R. A. Walsh, with William Farnum in the stellar role, and which shortly will be seen in a Broadway theater, there exists a curious coincidence.

Henry Christeen Warnack, who wrote "The Conqueror," based his story on the historic and exciting career of General Sam Houston, known to every American as one of the most romantic and heroic figures of early border days. Mr. Warnack specified that Nashville, Tenn.—the Nashville of 1830—where Sam Houston came finally into his own, should be pictured. Old histories immediately were searched for a picture of some Nashville street of the period. Such a picture was found—a street redolent with atmosphere. The street "set" was taken from that picture.

Scene from "The Conqueror" (Fox).

Technical Director George Grenier and his art director, Charles Odd, copied that street faithfully and to the last detail. Then carpenters swarmed into action; the houses, the court house, the law offices rose into being. And when Mr. Warnack, who is a well-known newspaperman, first laid eye upon that set he gasped in amazement. Then he rubbed his eyes and pinched himself.

"On that corner," he managed to gasp, finally, "I was born! Right in that little old house. My father was born there, too. In that building directly across the street my grandfather had his counsellor-at-law office. On that balcony he welcomed Sam Houston many a time."

Mr. Warnack then sat down and wrote a letter home. Shortly there reached him a bundle of photos and old-time wood cuts of the house in which he was born. And that house corresponded in every detail with the one built for and photographed in "The Conqueror."

"The Conqueror" is the first of the William Fox Standard pictures of which William Farnum is the star. It is said to faithfully depict a cross section cut out of American history in the making, with all the romance, love, life and fight of early days in Tennessee and along the Texas border. And Mr. Fox has issued orders that "The Conqueror" will not be sold until it has first been seen by the exhibitor.

NEW SERIES OF GEORGE ADE FABLES.

Essanay announces that, commencing September 1, a new series of George Ade Fables in Slang will be issued on the General Film program. This is another step towards the recently published policy of this company to confine a greater part of its output to subjects of a comedy nature.

The first series, issued about two years ago, were only one reel in length, but proved so popular that this famous author has been induced to write another series. Owing to the wealth of humorous material in the present stories it has been decided to make them up in two-reel lengths. The reception with which these pictures dealing with the peculiarities of our traits and characteristics has met assures this new series of a welcome in every theater. Especial attention has been given to the sub-titles and, as this was one of the strongest features of the former productions, there is no doubt that it will appeal even more forcibly since the public has grown to appreciate the value of cleverly-phrased interpolations.

The first subject is entitled "The Fable of the Twelve Cylinder Speed of the Leisure Class." George Bean and Frankie Raymond play the leading parts. The story, as the title implies, deals with the strenuous life led by those who attempt to live the easy life. A number of attractive bathing beach scenes will be shown, also the author's idea of night life in a metropolis, with its dancing cabarets and other forms of strenuous amusement. It will be released September 1.

Kalem Enlarges Laboratory

Will Handle Large Volume of Outside Work in Addition to Their Own Product.

THE Kalem Company has celebrated their tenth successful year by enlarging the laboratory at their Twenty-third street factory and installing additional equipment which gives them four times their former facilities.

With their increased capacity Kalem has entered the market to handle a limited amount of laboratory work for other producers, including the developing of negatives and printing and developing positives.

"In enlarging our plant to take care of our constantly growing business we installed extensive equipment which our factory experts have been working on for years," said William Wright, secretary-treasurer of the Kalem Company. "The trade has declared that our photography and laboratory work is par excellence, and there is good reason back of this reputation. One of the members of the firm always has directly supervised this important branch of picture-making and as the factory is conducted in conjunction with our executive offices this supervision is both active and constructive. The new equipment which quadrupled our laboratory facilities has made it possible for us to handle a limited amount of work for other concerns while turning out our own product.

"We are not embarking in commercial work as the term usually is understood," added Mr. Wright. "Already we have contracted to handle the printing and developing for concerns who desired to obtain the Kalem standard, and we can handle a number of additional contracts. We are anxious to hear from producers who demand the best in laboratory work, as the Kalem standard is sufficient guarantee that they will be satisfied. Furthermore, with this large equipment we can quote attractive prices. In fact, I know our prices cannot be equaled, in view of the artistic work done by our long experienced experts."

NEW STORY FOR BUSHMAN AND BAYNE.

Metro Pictures Corporation has purchased, through Robert H. Davis, editor of the All-Story Weekly, the motion picture rights to an untitled, unpublished story of unusual power by Max Brand, for the use of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, Metro stars. The seven-act production de luxe to be made from the story, and the story itself, will be released simultaneously, on the co-operative basis already introduced in "Lady Barnacle" and other Metro productions. Produced under the supervision of Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Quality studio, it will be released as a special attraction de luxe November 1.

Charles Grabin will direct this feature production, which promises to be one of the most notable ever put out under the Metro banner. Work will begin at once, the two stars having completed "The Compact," a seven-act production, under the direction of Edwin Carewe.

HART TO MAKE "THE NARROW TRAIL."

The first Hart production to be offered by Artcraft will bear the name of "The Narrow Trail." Advance announcements state it is replete with both the thrills and romance which have distinguished the plays of the famous western star.

Lambert Hillyer, well known as an author and for some time attached in this capacity to the Ince forces, has been made a director for the Hart productions, and is now with Hart and a large company somewhere in the most mountainous region of California, where stage coaches are careening over precipitous trails and daring feats of horsemanship galore are taking place. The interiors of the play are being made at the Biograph studios in Los Angeles. Sylvia Bremer will be the leading woman in this picture.

PARAMOUNT EXPANDING SERVICE DEPARTMENT

With the beginning of Paramount's new star series booking policy, that organization announces that its "Exhibitors' Service Department for Paramount Pictures and Artcraft Pictures" is now at the service of all exhibitors. The purpose and aim of the department is, as heretofore, to help exhibitors in advertising, exploiting and exhibiting Paramount and Artcraft productions.

Paramount takes the attitude that the motion picture has not fulfilled its complete function until it is shown to the public. The company has already expended nearly $3,000,000 in national exploitation and advertising to create on the part of the public a demand for Paramount stars, photoplays and trade mark.

PICTURES FOR THE INSANE.

The Manhattan State Hospital on Wards Island, N. Y., which houses over five thousand of the state's insane, have installed a Simplex projector which will be used every Thursday evening for their amusement. Dr. M. B. Heyman, the superintendent, recently gave an exhibition at which two thousand patients were in attendance. Installations of this kind call attention to the splendid work that the motion picture is doing among the unfortunate and of which the public hears so little of.

Pathe Program Interesting

Week of August 26 Offers Many Excellent Subjects for Summer Weather.

PEARL WHITE in "The Fatal Ring," "Iris," called by many Sir Arthur Pinero's greatest play, a fine Combitone scenic, an International cartoon and scenic, and two numbers of the Hearst-Pathe News, comprise the Pathe program for the week of August 26.

Pearl White, Pathe's "peerless, fearless girl," stars in the eighth episode of "The Fatal Ring," entitled "The Switch in the Safe."

In "Iris" appears Alma Taylor, a beautiful English player, who enjoys the distinction of having received from Sir Arthur Pinero, the author of the play, a letter stating that he has seen the picture and considers her ideal in her part. As Iris she plays the part of a wealthy widow who has many suitors.

A particularly beautiful number of the Combitone is listed on this program under the title of "Know America, Near Pike's Peak, Colo." Many magnificent scenes among the mountains are shown, and as usual they are finely tinted.

An International Scenic split with a laughable animated cartoon by one of the famous Hearst cartoonists, and the Hearst-Pathe News numbers 70 and 71 finish out the program.

GEORGE COHAN SHOWS WELL AS A "SCRAPPER."

George M. Cohan, in "Seven Keys to Baldpate," released August 26, is Artcraft's second August offering, following Douglas Fairbanks in "Down to Earth," released August 12. "Seven Keys to Baldpate" is the second production in which Cohan has appeared, the first having been "Broadway Jones." Cohan dramatized the noted Earl Derr Biggers novel for its Broadway run on the speaking stage several seasons ago.

In the "Seven Keys" picture Cohan is reported to have added another to his already long list of accomplishments. He has a battle with all the other male characters in the production when Baldpate Inn is invaded. Cohan is supported by a strong cast, including Anna Q. Nilsson, Elda Furry, Frank Losee, Corene Uzzell, Purnell Pratt and Carlton Macy.

AMERICAN TROOPS LANDING IN FRANCE.

Following its custom of releasing all news of the world in its regular weekly news reel, the Gaumont Company this week is presenting in the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly No. 137 pictures of the landing of the expeditionary force in France. These are the first of these particular pictures to reach exhibitors and the screen through regular news channels. So anxious was the Gaumont Company to protect its Mutual exhibitors that the pictures were sent to Mutual branches immediately upon their arrival from France with instructions to issue them immediately to exhibitors. This was done so promptly that the Gaumont Company has been highly gratified by the telegrams it has received praising its news initiative.

Mutual Weekly No. 137 is completed by American pictures of peace and war and French pictures of the Parisian celebration of the fall of the Bastile. "Somewhere in America" Indian adobe huts are being used to house soldiers, according to the pictures, and from an American port coast artillery men are seen departing for target practice. War has tied up the merchant ships of the Netherlands, and sailors from these vessels at the port of New York are seen holding an impromptu regatta upon the Hudson River. The recent hot wave is chronicled by pictures of city firemen turning the hose upon the children of the tenement districts, much to the delectation of the youngsters.

Triangle Bill for August 18

Thirty-five Thousand Dollar Dutch Village Built for "Wooden Shoes"—"They're Off," Racing Play, Other Feaure for Week.

TRIANGLE'S $35,000 Dutch village, which was recently erected on the ranch grounds of the California studio, will make its appearance in "Wooden Shoes," a Triangle feature starring Bessie Barriscale, to be released the week of August 19, on the same program with "They're Off," a racing play

As the sprightly young Pampy, flower vender in the Dutch village, Miss Barriscale has one of the roles which she invests with the peculiar Barriscale vivacity and pertness. Her brown eyes, light golden curls and well-rounded figure inspires an American painter, visiting the dyke land, to employ her as a model for the Dutch subjects which he is painting. Later when her grandfather dies, she goes as an immigrant to America and there again meets the artist.

The quaint life of Holland has been accurately reproduced on this film. The village has the windmills, the canal streets and the tiled roofed houses typical of the low land country. Some remarkable Dutch types were selected from over two thousand extras that responded to the call for people of Holland lineage.

The wardrobe department was given a large order for Dutch costumes only a few weeks in advance of the production, but the entire outlay was prepared for the players the night before the first scene was filmed. Miss Barriscale wears the lace cap, short striped petticoat and wooden shoes of the Dutch maiden

The company of principals includes Jack Livingston, J. J. Dowling, Thomas S. Guise, Howard Hickman, Margaret Thompson, Gertrude Claire, J. Frank Burke, Don Likes, Will H. Bray and J. H. Gotch. Three hundred extras were engaged for the street scenes.

"They're Off," the other offering of the August 19 program, is of Southern locale, the action culminating in [illegible] horse scene with a girl riding the winner. A Triangle all-star cast, numbering Melbourne MacDowell, Walt Whitman, Rowland Lee, Enid Bennett and Samuel Lincoln, is featured

SELIG RELEASES ON GENERAL FILM PROGRAM.

William N. Selig announces the release in General Film service for the week beginning Monday, August 27 of "Pioneer Days" and "In After Years." "Pioneer Days," the Selig dramatic release for Monday, August 27, presents in a most graphic way the massacre of Fort Dearborn in 1812. The Selig company has been most careful to observe faithfully the historical detail in connection with the event, and a prominent cast of players enact the various roles. The cast includes Kathlyn Williams, Lafayette McKee, Charles Clary, William Stowell and others. This historical drama is not a reissue, so called, but a production never before released in any form.

"In After Years" gives Miss Eugenie Besserer an opportunity to prove her talents as a wonderful emotional actress. It is the drama of a woman whose youthful loveliness and charm begin to succumb to the ravages of time, and whose soul surmounts the petty jealousies and ambitions of so-called prestige to become interested in the shadowed lives of the great cities and unfortunate, so they can enjoy what the generosity of unselfish wealth can bring them. The emotions resulting from an aching heart of a woman who stands on the dividing line of forty years adds to the reputation of Miss Besserer.

EXCLUSIVE SELZNICK EXCHANGE FOR WASHINGTON, D. C.

Through Arthur S. Kane, the new general manager for Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises, Inc., a new exchange has been established at Washington, D. C., to handle only pictures released through the Selznick firm. This gives Selznick an exclusive Washington exchange for the first time. Mr. Kane has been in Washington for a stay of several days settling matters in connection with the opening of the new branch.

V. P. Whitaker, recently sales manager for Artcraft-Paramount pictures in Washington, will have charge of the new offices beginning August 13. Mr. Whitaker became sales manager for the Paramount exchange in Washington when that branch was first opened, but resigned and took a similar position with Artcraft Pictures at the opening of that concern's Washington office. When the Artcraft-Paramount interests were combined Mr. Whitaker was retained as sales manager for the new corporation. Prior to his entrance into the motion picture field Mr. Whitaker was engaged in the theatrical business in association with L. Lawrence Weber.

KIPLING'S "NAULAHKA" FOR PATHE.

George Fitzmaurice, of Astra, has begun work on Kipling's "Naulahka," which will be released by Pathe. In the cast are Antonio Moreno, Warner Oland and Helene Chadwick. Mr. Fitzmaurice will shortly announce his leading woman and promises that his announcement will be a "surprise." Some exterior scenes are already being taken in Pike County, Pa.

"A STORMY KNIGHT" (Bluebird).

The release for Sept. 10 on the Bluebird program marks the final appearance of Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon as joint stars. Mr. Farnum will in future appear as a lone star among Bluebirds and Miss Vernon will have as her screen-mate Herbert Rawlinson. The Farnum-Vernon combination has become very popular with "fans" through the half dozen appearances they have made as co-stars and their last appearance will make a note of interest in advertising "A Stormy Knight."

Scene from "A Stormy Knight" (Bluebird).

Jack Cunningham wrote the story of this newest Bluebird, while Waldemar Young prepared the scenario from which Elmer Clifton produced a fast-moving mystery-comedy with sensational trimmings and a "surprise" finish. "A Stormy Knight" has previously been referred to under its working title, "The Fourth Glove." Frank MacQuarrie, Jean Hersholt and Hayward Mack will have the chief supporting roles.

It might be well, in noting the screen separation of Mr. Farnum and Miss Vernon, to state that Joseph DeGrasse will direct Mr. Farnum in "The Maverick" as his first lone-star venture, work on that feature having just been completed. Miss Vernon and Mr. Rawlinson are also finishing their initial offering, "It's Up to You," under the direction of Elmer Clifton, the producer of "A Stormy Knight."

TESTS FOR AVIATORS IN ANIMATED WEEKLY.

The first pictures yet taken showing the actual course of physical examination to which recruits for the United States Aviation Corps are subjected make a very interesting part of the 84th issue of the Universal Animated Weekly just released.

Members of the army's medical and surgical staff are shown making tests of applicants to determine range and accuracy of vision, blood pressure and nerve stability. Unusual from every point of view are these studies, which should prove popular with every kind of American audience.

Several fine views are also given of General Pershing reviewing a number of fighting commands in France. These are official pictures and have been added to the archives of the French War Department. Other out of the ordinary military subjects show a detachment of French gas fighters setting off a fusillade of "the devil's breath" upon a German trench to give the enemy a taste of his own bitter medicine.

Bayonet drill by American troops at Fort McPherson, Georgia, adds a grimly realistic touch to the scenes of military camp life on this side of the water. By way of contrast some amusing pictures of the recent ball game staged between the members of Raymond Hitchcock's "Hitchy Koo" company and the Ziegfeld Follies to raise a tobacco fund for our troops adds a few timely chuckles to the reel.

VIVIAN MARTIN A FIGHTING OPTIMIST.

Vivian Martin's first star picture under the new Paramount plan gives her more opportunity than she has ever had to display those charms that have come to be associated with her name. It also provides more thrills and punch than any of the previous Vivian Martin releases.

The picture "Little Miss Optimist" was written especially for her by Gardner Hunting. Luckily the character is not one of the saccharine "glad" parts that have pollyanned across the stage of late. There is enough of shadow to form a big contrast and the story gives evidence of having something besides curls and a smile.

Tom Moore is leading man for Miss Martin. He recently scored successes with Mae Murray in "The Primrose Ring," and with Sessue Hayakawa in "The Jaguar's Claws."

GLADYS HULETTE IN "MISS NOBODY."

In "Miss Nobody," the Pathe Gold Rooster play for release on August 19, Miss Gladys Hulette is to be seen in a role which fits her admirably. Human interest is the dominant note in this play, which, like all those in which Miss Hulette has starred since she has been with Astra, was directed by William Parke.

Besides the excellent work of Miss Hulette in the title role the fine impersonations given by A. G. Andrews and Cesare Gravina are worthy of notice. As the elderly, big-hearted pawnbrokers, "Crespi and Malone," they draw to their parts a sympathy that is not often given to men in their profession, which is commonly supposed to be one in which the softer and kindlier feelings do not often prevail. The charming Joyce Fair and William Parke, Jr., also have important parts.

Perhaps the tendency of the time is toward those plays which tend to uplift and cheer. Undoubtedly the war has much to do with this tendency. When mothers are sending their sons away to the front, when families are losing daily by enlistment and draft young men who will shortly be a part of the vast army sent by this country to lands far away, those who are left behind will naturally wish to see pictures with a sunny theme. At any rate, the various Pathe exchanges report a constantly increasing demand for these Gladys Hulette pictures, which are all of that sort.

SEVEN-REEL SUPER-FEATURE FOR NAZIMOVA.

Mme. Alla Nazimova, the celebrated dramatic star who recently signed a contract with Metro Pictures Corporation to appear in special productions de luxe, will commence work Monday, September 17, according to the announcement made by Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Super-Feature studio.

Mme. Nazimova's first Metro picture will be a seven-act special production de luxe called "A Rose-Bush of a Thousand Years," written by Mabel Wagnalls, daughter of A. W. Wagnalls, president of the well known publishing house of Funk & Wagnalls. George D. Baker is the director chosen to produce Mme. Nazimova's first picture for the Metro Pictures Corporation.

"The Rose-Bush of a Thousand Years" was published originally in Current Opinion. It has been adapted for the screen by Ethel Browning Miller.

SCREEN DANCE LESSONS FOR MAE MURRAY.

Although Mae Murray may not be presented as a Bluebird star for several weeks to come, owing to arrangements that have already been made for the regular program features, she will be introduced to "fans" who attend "Bluebird Day" performances throughout the country in a novel manner, when plans now maturing are in operation.

It is the purpose of Bluebird to have Miss Murray screen several of her original ballroom dances, these short-measure films to be added to the regular program subjects. Charts will be prepared to show various position of Miss Murray's feet in completing the dange-figures, and explanations of the movements will be added that the lesson may be clear and lucid These charts will be supplied to exhibitors for free distribution to patrons.

BLACKTON PICKS CAST FOR FIRST PICTURE.

J. Stuart Blackton has announced the cast for his first feature production to be released through Paramount. Mr. Blackton's first production will be an adaptation of Sir Gilbert Parker's famous novel, "The World for Sale," a tale of the great Northwest written two years before the war. Work on the production has been begun somewhere in New Jersey for the exterior scenes, and Mr. Blackton's big studio in Brooklyn is now ready for the beginning of the interior scenes.

Heading the cast in the part of Ingelby is Conway Tearle, and in the part of Fleda Drude is Anna Little. Supporting them as Jethro Fawe is Norbert Wicki, a young Australian who spent twelve years on the European stage playing Ibsen and Shakespeare.

EGYPTIAN SETTING FOR TRIANGLE PLAY, "IDOLATERS."

After a brief excursion in the rough-hewn dance halls of the early west, as "Golden Rule Kate," she wears the coarse garb of a dance hall girl, Louise Glaum, returns to the most luxurious setting ever fitted up at the Triangle studio, and one which the star, herself, designed.

This imposing "sêt" represents the bedroom of the siren in "Idolaters." It is of Egyptian design with a huge canopied bed heavily carved, over which hang cloth of gold draperies The presiding feature of the room is a huge image of the sphinx, its face illumined in a weird light cast from a reflector in the floor. On either side of it are tall peacock feather fans and incense burners of hammered copper. All these are reflected in the waters of a bathing pool, around the edge of which float wax white lilies growing in tiny cups. This bath is depressed in the marble floor at the center of the room.

In keeping with the general scheme of apartment decoration, Miss Glaum has designed some remarkable costumes, suggesting those seen in paintings of the Egyptian court where Cleopatra was enthroned.

The production was directed by Walter Edwards. George Webb has the leading male role and Hugo B. Koch was engaged for another important part.

Kellermann Film Makers Help Hospital

Fox Picture Company at Bar Harbor—Seats on the Shore at a Premium and Proceeds Go to Hospital—Nymphs and Water Sirens at Play in the Waves.

From John P. Flanagan, 147 Park View Avenue, Bangor, Me.

BAR HARBOR, ME.—Never before have the grim, rocky shores of Mount Desert entertained more charming visitors than the graceful and comely nymph-ladies and sirens with Annette Kellermann in her moving picture scenes, now being taken here by the Fox company. So great has been the demand to secure beachside seats to witness the staging of the film that it has been decided to charge the rusticators and villagers 50 cents each to see the rehearsals and give the proceeds to the Bar Harbor Hospital. Even this is not keeping them away, and the spectators consider an hour at the Kellermann show one of the best features of their vacation.

Up to now people have been discouraged from watching the picturing of the scenes, but now they are invited to come and help a worthy cause thereby. A member of the company will explain the work as it proceeds. The unusual interest in the work of the company and the fact that Miss Kellermann is the star of the production assures large crowds for every day that weather conditions permit of work being done.

At first fog and rain prevented work but hot weather came, and many of the swimmers became so badly sunburned that they were unable to proceed for several days after.

Miss Kellermann has taken the Robertoff cottage on the Ocean drive for the remainder of her stay here, and has moved in with her servants.

Clara Gets Record Salmon at Kineo.

Kineo, Me.—Clara Kimball Young, the famous star of the "Easiest Way" and other notable film plays, was among the fortunate anglers at Moosehead Lake this week, the salmon being attracted by her beauty, according to reports. Miss Young caught a splendid six-pound salmon in Duck Cove after a 25-minute battle. This was the record for the week and her first salmon. Miss Young, who made the journey from New York to Moosehead with her father and mother, has been camping on the shore of Moosehead Lake near Tomhegan Stream, and visited Kineo during her stay.

Daniel Maher at Bangor.

Brunswick, Me.—Daniel Maher of Bangor, motion picture operator, has been busy at Camp Chamberlain, headquarters of the newly-organized regiment of Maine Heavy Artillery, for several days, and within a short time it is expected that pictures illustrating the early days of the regiment will be shown on the screens of the theaters of Maine.

Newark N. J. News Letter

By Jacob J. Kalter, Newark, N. J.

NEWARK, N. J.—At the regular weekly meeting of the local "Four-Minute Men," reports of co-operation and aid on the part of moving picture exhibitors were made. The Newark organization is rated as one of the best in the country, and William McCormick Blair, chairman of the National Asociation of Four-Minute Men, congratulated the local body for its most efficient organization.

Among the theaters that have thus far co-operated with the Four-Minute Men are: Strand, Paramount, Proctor's Palace, Crawford, Playhouse, Clintonia, American, Keeney's, Playhouse Garden, Lyceum, Fox's Terminal, Eliot, U. S. City, Park, Scenario, Royal, Fox's Carlton, Eliot Annex, Scenario Roof Garden, Bellevue, Grand Palace, Colonial and Grand Palace Garden

Mr. and Mrs. Gainsborg Return.

Newark, N. J.—Mr. and Mrs. Lee Gainsborg have returned from their honeymoon. The accompanying cut shows the newlyweds in a vehicle, which the writer will call a jinrikisha. Mr. Gainsborg is back and ready to do some "tall" booking. He is the former manager of the local Universal exchange, and more recently he has been booking big state rights productions.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee Gainsborg.

Lyric, Newark, to Open.

Newark, N. J.—The Lyric theater, 211 Market street, closed during the summer months for complete renovation, will be opened August 25. The Lyric is under the management of Dr. Tunison.

Benefits at "Lincoln Cycle."

Newark, N. J.—When the Lincoln pictures, featuring Benjamin Chapin, were shown last week at the Broad Street theater children from the various orphan asylums and the city playgrounds attended free. The performances were given by courtesy of Manager M. S. Schlesinger for the benefit of the Armenian-Syrian Relief Fund. Mr. Chapin attended the performance Saturday evening and made a short but interesting little address.

Irvington Defense League Benefit.

Irvington, N. J.—A benefit for the Home Defense League was given last week at the Liberty theater. The feature was "The Duchess of Doubt." The members of the body attended in their new uniforms.

H. Heidelberger at Civilization.

Newark, N. J.—A new acquisition, and a most valuable one, too, to the film managers of Newark is Herman Heidelberger, who has come here to assume charge of the Civilization Film Corporation, Strand theater building.

It is certainly refreshing to meet an exchange manager of Mr. Heidelberger's type, with his advanced methods, his radical but not ultra radical ideas, and his clean-cut, conscientious way of doing business. In a conversation with the correspondent of the Moving Picture World Mr. Heidelberger said: "The cause of the failure of unsuccessful film salesmen is that they believe their part of the work is completed when the contract is signed. In fact, that is just when it begins. A good film man will see that the show arrives on time, that plenty of advertising is sent and sent in time to be adequately used, and finally he will see that the exhibitor is satisfied. It's the repeaters who count."

Mr. Heidelberger, although a newcomer to our community, needs no introduction to the film fraternity at large. He was with the Mutual. His last previous connection was with the Frank Hall Productions, Inc., of New York, as special representative.

Lakewood Theater Closed.

Lakewood, N. J.—The Lakewood theater here has closed until early in September The house is undergoing considerable repairs. Lakewood is a favorite winter resort, and consequently it is much livelier and active during the winter than now.

Knickerbocker Company Incorporated.

Atlantic City, N. J.—The Knickerbocker Amusement Company filed articles of incorporation July 26 at Trenton. The registered agent is Max Meinnan, at 190 S. Carolina avenue. The concern is authorized to conduct amusement enterprises, is capitalized at $25,000, and the incorporators are: Herbert J. Koehler, Charles Bridge and Edwin G. Bleakly.

Picture Shows Every Night at New Soldiers and Sailors Club.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Under the auspices of the Union League, a moving picture show will be conducted for the benefit of soldiers and sailors in the old Beth Eden Baptist Church, Broad and Spruce streets, which is to be equipped by the league as a club house for men in the service. The church has been unoccupied for several years, and is at present in a dilapidated condition. It was offered to the league by its owner, William Bruant, who is in charge of the renovation. When improvements are completed there will be a comfortable auditorium to seat 800, where picture shows will be held nightly, shower baths, recreation and reading rooms and other conveniences for the comfort and pleasure of enlisted men. It is to be known as Union League Annex.

IOWA NOTES.

For Iowa letter see page 1260

White's theater.

New Film Supply House in Waterloo.

Waterloo, Ia.—Charles Nobotny, son-in-law of W. L. Myers of the Plaza in Waterloo, has opened a supply and equipment house in Waterloo under the name of the Grayson Supply and Equipment company, handling various kinds of supplies for the exhibitors. Mr. Nobotny is the operator at the Plaza and is a splendid fellow, who knows the mechanical end of motion picture exhibiting from the ground up.

A. H. Blank Visits New York.

Des Moines, Ia.—A. H. Blank leaves for New York on the 20th, where he will attend a meeting of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. While in New York Mr. Blank will look for the state rights market with a view to purchasing some new features for Iowa and this territory.

News Briefs From All Over Iowa.

Des Moines, Ia.—M. J. Frisch, district booker of the local Pathe office, is on his vacation. He took his contract blanks along with him and when he comes back it is likely that all around Lake Okoboji they will be running Pathe features, serials and comedies.

Newton, Ia.—H. G. Beanblossom of the Star in Newton was in Des Moines last week. He called at the Mid-West office and at the American Seating company, next door, where he is arranging the details for a plan of enlarging his house to the extent of one hundred seats. He reports that his competitor, F. P. Lewis of the Lyric, has taken in a partner, a Mr. Hickey of that city.

Waterloo, Ia.—Frank Bryant of the Plaza in Waterloo visited Des Moines last week. Mr. Bryant's brother, J. E. Bryant of the Plaza theater in Sioux City, has arranged for the Goldwyn pictures. He will show each Goldwyn subject for three days.

Estherville, Ia.—F. H. Graaf of Estherville was in Des Moines. Mr. Graaf will open his new Grand in September. It will be recalled that the old Grand burned to the ground late last winter. The new Grand will seat 800 people and is said to be the finest theater in this section of the country. It is absolutely up to date in every respect. Mr. Graaf has arranged for twenty pictures from the Mid-West offices for the new theater.

Des Moines, Ia.—The Mid-West Photoplay corporation of this city is not complaining of the hot weather slump. They report that business is very good and that the prospects for fall bookings are lots better.

PACIFIC COAST NEWS.

I. H. Lichtenstein Makes Coast Trip.

San Francisco, Cal.—I. H. Lichtenstein of the Western Poster company returned recently from a two weeks' trip along the coast south of this city and found that the moving picture houses were all enjoying a good business for this season of the year, with exhibitors preparing for a record-breaking fall and winter. He spent four days at Salinas during Rodeo Week, where O. V. Traggard showed "America's Peril" to crowded houses at White's theater.

Film Star in Stock Company.

San Francisco, Cal.—Cleo Madison, well known for her work in moving pictures, is now a member of the Wigwam Stock company and appeared recently at the Wigwam theater in "Common Clay."

Manteca, Cal.—Stark & Hodges have disposed of their house to Fay & Tipton, who have named it the Mission theater.

San Francisco to See Fine New Theaters

The New California Theater Will Attract Wide Attention by Its Beauty—Some Other Big Houses Also Are Being Built.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Considerable theater building is under way in this city and a number of new motion picture houses will be opened to the public before the first of the year. The new houses are all of large size and their furnishings and equipment will represent the very latest ideas along this line.

The largest, and by far the most costly, of the new houses is the California theater at Fourth and Market streets, which will not only be the finest moving picture house in the West, but one of the most beautiful to be found anywhere. Work on this is progressing very favorably, the exterior being about ready for the finishing touches, with work well under way on the interior. When completed this theater will represent an investment of $1,750,000, and innovations are promised that will prove a revelation to the general public and exhibitors alike. It will be ready for occupancy before the holiday season, and considerable of the service to be used has already been arranged for. The opening will be an event that will mark a new era in the presentation of moving pictures in California, and the house will be a fitting tribute to the genius of Eugene Roth, whose management of the Portola theater has made him a national figure.

Another new theater on Market street to be opened in the fall is the one being erected by Mr. Gibbs on property adjoining the Rialto theater, just above Seventh street. This house will be a very handsome one and will have a seating capacity of more than one thousand. The class of service to be used here has not been decided upon.

In the Fillmore district a moving picture theater with a seating capacity of more than two thousand is being erected for the Kahn & Greenfield circuit to take the place of the New Fillmore theater opened a couple of years ago. This concern is also enlarging the New Mission theater on Mission street, and when this work is completed the house will have a seating capacity of about [illegible]

Old House Has New Name.

San Francisco, Cal.—Sam Gordon, the veteran exhibitor who recently took over the Market Street theater, on Market street, near Mason, has changed the name of this to the Alhambra and has had new electric signs prepared to assist in making the change known to the public. The name chosen is not entirely a new one to the local theatergoing public, there having been an Alhambra theater in the days before the great fire of 1906. Mr. Gordon has made many changes in policy since taking over this house and is now showing some of the massive productions offered during the winter at some of the legitimate show houses. He is making quite a success of his new venture, which is receiving most of his attention.

Ben Brodsky Returns to Orient.

San Francisco, Cal.—Ben Brodsky, "the Film King of the Orient," sailed for Japan late in July, taking with him a large quantity of film purchased while on his recent trip to New York. He plans to tour Japan in the near future and make moving pictures on the order of those secured in China some time ago, with the idea of using some of the scenes for stories to be worked out later in this country. Upon his return he promises to present a Japanese comedian built along the lines of Fatty Arbuckle and possessed of a style similar to that of Charlie Chaplin. He has disposed of his interests in a number of theaters in China and will devote his attention to the producing and distributing end of the business for a time. Mr. Brodsky relates that when he first opened his moving picture houses in China he had to pay the natives to go in, and that it was necessary at first to make them stand or otherwise they would go to sleep and not leave the theater until they were hungry. He states that in Japan kissing and love making scenes on the film are not understood and are usually eliminated.

Consolidated Branching Out.

San Francisco, Cal.—Marion H. Kohn of the Consolidated Film corporation returned in July from a trip to the Northwest. While away he completed arrangements for the opening of an exchange in a building being erected on Third avenue, Seattle, and investigated the proposition of establishing a sub-office at Portland. The Consolidated has arranged to handle the A. Kay releases, including the Terry burlesques and Terry human interest films. A projection room has been fitted upon the mezzanine floor of its local quarters on Golden Gate avenue, this being equipped with an Animatograph, which is also handled by this concern.

Honolulu Exhibitor in Town.

San Francisco, Cal.—Joe Cohen, president of the Consolidated Amusement company of Honolulu, arrived here recently to get a taste of the cool San Francisco weather and to secure a number of feature films. While business on the islands is keeping up fairly well, the lack of tourist patronage is being noticed, travel having been sadly interfered with by the war and the fear of submarines. Mr. Cohen expects to be here for about three months.

Santa Clara Valley Has Studio.

San Jose, Cal.—The H. D. Film company, headed by H. E. Dierker, formerly of Los Angeles, has established a studio at Congress Springs, near here, and has completed its first comedy release. The picture has been made with local talent and is to be shown at the local T. and D. theater.

E. V. Clover Has An Assistant.

San Jose, Cal.—E. V. Clover, manager of the T. and D. theater, has secured the services of an assistant in the person of Herman Kersten, formerly with the Victory theater. Mr. Kersten is doing the publicity work for the house, being familiar with this branch of the business.

Film Man in Municipal Orchestra.

San Francisco, Cal.—Sam Davis of Davis Bros., who control several large feature productions, is a member of the San Francisco Municipal orchestra, which gives concerts monthly in the Exposition auditorium. He also plays at times in theater orchestras.

Here and There Among the Theaters.

Burlingame, Cal.—Work is to be started within thirty days on a moving picture theater to be erected by W. P. Archibold.

Tulare, Cal.—The Lyric theater has been purchased from L. W. Willis by K. L. Galyon.

Oakland, Cal.—Manager Ralph Clarke of the T. and D. theater did some effective publicity work prior to the presentation of Mary Pickford in the "Little American." A large picture of little Mary was unveiled in front of the curtain, with the American eagle projected above, followed by the unfurling of the American flag.

Berkeley, Cal.—C. H. Mehrten, formerly owner of the Varsity theater, has removed to Napa county, having retired from the moving picture business after having been identified with it for about fourteen years.

Film Affairs in Baltimore Last Week

Madeline Hurlock, of Universal City, Is Heroine of Real War Romance and Comes from Coast to Baltimore to Wed Soldier—Other Notes of Interest.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Ter., Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE, M.D—G. Horton Gaffney, proprietor of the new Pickwick theater, 115 North Howard street, is very optimistic regarding the outlook for the coming fall and winter season at his playhouse, for he has just had a $6,000 photoplayer organ installed. Mr. Gaffney is using the Paramount service and says that it has made such a hit with his patrons that he has been obliged to enlarge his bookings and include the entire program.

H. C. Wales Goes to Washington Universal.

Baltimore, Md.—H. C. Wales, who for some months has managed the affairs of the General Film exchange in this city, has returned to the Capital City to act in the capacity of manager for the Universal exchange. The Baltimore boys wish him good luck.

Railroad Film Shown by Hippodrome.

Baltimore, Md.—George A. McDermitt, manager of Loew's Hippodrome theater in this city, had an eye to business when he arranged for the screening of the patriotic picture, "When the Call Came," which was taken on the trains of the B. & O. between Chicago and Washington, and arranged through the Chicago Herald's "Know America." Wide publicity was given the matter through the railroad employees.

Madeline Hurlock Heroine in Real Romance.

Baltimore, Md.—Maryland is quite a place for romance and Baltimore is the big center, so probably that is the reason why Madeline Hurlock, the charming star of the Universal company, probably was obliged to race all the way here from Los Angeles to marry. You see, she met Sergt. Jack McGovern, who is now acting as quartermaster's sergeant at Camp Meade, when he was in California last summer with the Thirteenth U. S. Cavalry. It was a great love match from the very beginning. So very recently valiant Sergt. McGovern got information that he is likely to be sent to France, so he wired for Miss Hurlock, and she arrived in Baltimore on Saturday night. She was met by Sergt. McGovern and some friends, and they immediately went to Ellicott City and were married.

Censors Make More Arrests.

Baltimore, Md.—Since the recent outbreak of actual censorship in Baltimore the censor board has been getting in some realities in the matter of arrests. Arthur D. Gans, manager of the American Standard Film Exchange, is one of the latest victims, having been arrested on the complaint of Mrs. Thomas B. Harrison of the censor board, and fined $25 and costs for showing "Sentimental Charley" with some ordered eliminations not made. Miss Grace Turnbull, who gained notoriety by her attack on the censor board, seems now to be working with Mrs. Harrison in making complaints and having arrests made, for it seems to be on her information that Guy L. Wonders, manager of the Wilson theater, 418 East Baltimore street, and treasurer of the new American League, was arrested and fined $26.70 on a charge of failing to eliminate certain portions of "The Atonement," which were ordered to be clipped by the censor board. The statements of Miss Turnbull and Mrs. Harrison were corroborated by other witnesses, including Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Smock, Lawrence Turnbull and S. A. Haslup.

Lexington Theater Closes at Five P. M.

Baltimore, Md.—Mrs. I. Putts, proprietor of the Lexington theater, 314 West Lexington street, has arranged to close her playhouse every evening at 5 p. m. during the latter part of August and the first 15 days in September. This theater is located in the heart of the shopping district.

Baltimore Business Notes.

Baltimore, Md.—It is understood that J. J. Valentini, manager of the Harford theater, 2620 Harford avenue, is now renovating his playhouse from top to cellar, and when reopened in September it will present a clean, beautiful appearance to its patrons.

News of the ordinance which will probably be introduced again in the Baltimore city council for several projected new theaters, which were held over from the last session, is now awaited with interest, as this body of city officials reconvened on Monday evening, August 6.

Harry Cohen, special representative of the Metro out of the Washington office, visited Baltimore last week to look over the situation.

Bernard Depkin, Jr., supervising manager of the Parkway interests, is now on vacation, taking a tour in his machine.

Arthur Barron, manager of the McHenry, has just returned from a delightful vacation and the jinx didn't get him this time.

Moving pictures of Marshal Joffre's reception in Baltimore and the opening of Ellicott driveway with others made a hit at the community concert, which was held at Frederick avenue and Hollins street on Tuesday evening, July 24. Fifteen thousand attended and Mayor Preston was the guest of honor.

Annapolis, Md.—During the week of August 6 two prominent exhibitors of this city visited Baltimore and called on their many friends in the exchanges in that city. J. Custi, manager of the Lyric here, which has a seating capacity of 282, states that his patrons have been very pleased with Helen Holmes in "The Railroad Raiders," and he intends booking the later series of this popular star. Just at present Mr. Custi has closed the Lyric for a week in order to give his theater a thorough renovating and overhauling preparatory to the fall opening. J. F. Ebling, manager of the Palace theater here, also went to Baltimore to look over the situation. The Palace has a seating capacity of 300.

Maritime Provinces News.

Trade and Personal Notes of Interest.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—For "The Fatal Ring," the new Pathe serial which is booked at the Imperial, Halifax, J. G. B. Metzler is preparing a special advertising campaign in which is included the offering of several signet rings.

J. M. Franklin, who booked the Universal serial, "The Grey Ghost," to begin at the Strand in September, is also planning some special advertising. Whether he will provide gray ghosts or not is not known at present.

J. M. Franklin of Halifax and A. E. Wall of the N. S. Board of Censors passed through St. John on their return from a visit to the great city of New York, where, from all accounts, they spent a busy and pleasant few days. Among others who entertained them were the officials at the head office of the Universal company, and the Canadians speak in the highest praise of their reception and the hospitality shown them.

To introduce the O. Henry stories (General Film Co.), W. H. Golding of the Imperial theater is offering a fine set of O. Henry's works for the best 300-word appreciation of O. Henry's place in literature. The series will be shown soon. Mr. Golding wrote a personal letter to the newspapers, addressed to booklovers, explaining the contest, which is open to the general public. The books are a $21.00 red leather set.

A. B. Farmer of the Star theater, St. John, says: "You have to hand it to Pathe for serials." "Patria" is drawing crowds for him.

Jas. F. Cripps of the Bijou Dream, Digby, N. S., has a new little daughter at his home.

J. H. Bustin of the Imperial theater, Windsor, N. S., has just installed a new Power's 6B machine and is going to install a special motor to run it. Mr. Bustin says that the extreme heat and a circus in town did not improve his business any. Still, he has bought a new 45 roadster, so business cannot be too bad, after all.

The Universal serial, "The Red Ace," is to be released in this territory very shortly, as well as the Alice Howell comedies.

Messrs. McAffee and Corkery of the Vogue theater, Woodstock, N. B., were in St. John recently arranging for fall service.

In Wisconsin.

Milwaukee, Wis.—"The Birth of a Nation" began its eighteenth week at the Davidson theater.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The Orpheum theater held over "The Flame of the Yukon" for a third week.

Among Dakota Exhibitors.

Jamestown, N. D.—Manager Kavanaugh of the Opera House having taken a five year lease has been making plans for a new front, redecorating the interior and the substitution of a six-piece orchestra for the mechanical organ.

New Leipzig, N. D.—The Commercial club has made a free moving picture to 600 farmers and their families a regular feature of the Saturday market days.

Aberdeen, S. D.—The Orpheum theater livened up summer business by running Aberdeen pictures for two days.

North Carolina News Letter.

Paramount Films Now Come from Washington.

WILMINGTON, N. C.—Mr. Randell, representing the Famous Players exchange, is now calling on the trade in this territory in the interest of Paramount's new Star Series plan of booking their output of features. With the coming of the new booking plan, North Carolina territory, formerly served by the Southern Paramount of Atlanta, reverts to the Washington exchange, although it has not been made public through what deal the Paramount people succeeded in depriving the Lynch interests of a valuable slice of their exclusive territory. It would tend to the conclusion that Paramount is again handling the Atlanta exchange, and that the Lynch-Tandy interests are out of Paramount, although nothing of confirmation can be had along this subject.

G. F. Daniels Now Keys Roadman.

Wilmington, N. C.—G. F. Daniels, formerly manager of the Piedmont theater, Greensboro, North Carolina, was in Wilmington this week calling on the managers in the interest of K-E-S-E Washington exchange, having recently accepted a position with them, succeeding Mr. Young in this territory. Mr. Daniels is a theater manager of long experience and enjoys a wide acquaintance among the theater owners of the Carolinas, and will undoubtedly make a valuable man for the Keys organization.

J. D. Huckabee Reopens His Strand.

Durham, N. C.—J. D. Huckabee has reopened his Strand theater here after extensive alterations and improvements both outside and interior.

Arnold Huff Said to Own Broadway Theater.

High Point, N. C.—It is reported that Arnold Huff, formerly owner of the Isis theater at Greensboro, has purchased the Broadway theater here and will make extensive improvements before opening this fall with big super-productions.

Wilmington, N. C.—R. V. Anderson, manager of the Charlotte Pathe exchange branch, spent a part of the week in Wilmington and at Wrightsville Beach, returning from Clinton, where on last Saturday he attended a meeting of the Farmers' Institute, and made an address on motion pictures.

S. A. Lambert Gives Benefit at the Dixie.

Fayetteville, N. C.—Manager S. A. Lambert of the Dixie theater of Fayetteville opened his theater on Sunday, June 24, for the benefit of the Red Cross and treated the public to a sacred concert. This is the first Sunday concert in a picture theater in this city and it was a decided success. Quite a sum was realized. The concert was participated in by four of Fayetteville's most cultured and charming young singers—Miss Anna Theresa McMilland, Miss Mary Williams, Miss Margaret Cotton and Miss Louine Watson—with Mrs. Lambert and Miss Margaret Jennings as accompanists for the singers, and Levin's orchestra furnishing excellent instrumental music.

Mr. Lambert showed his liberality of spirit in giving a benefit at considerable expense to himself, but he showed his aptitude in the advertising line in the "call" to patriotism which he displayed in front of his theater. He put out a bugle, to sound the bugle call to duty; a pair of army shoes and a Red Cross contribution box, with the legend over all: "If you can't fill these (the army shoes) do your bit and help fill this (the contribution box). Both are calling, which will you answer?" Red, white and blue ribbons ran from the shoes and the Red Cross box to the bugle.

Philadelphia Auditorium Takes on Beauty

In Spite of Labor's Shortage and the Soaring Prices of Materials, Market Street Amusement Company's Theater Completes Its Improvements.

By F. V. Armato, 144 N. Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—General Manager Frank W. Buhler of the Central Market Street Amusement Company is to be congratulated upon the completion of extention alterations at the Auditorium theater despite the scarcity of labor and the high cost of materials. All evidences of gingerbread and gaudy decorations have been removed from this theater and in its place there are graceful architectural lines substituted.

Handsome glass and mahogany doors lead to the neat and large lobby, making an inviting approach to the auditorium. A gold fibre screen has been installed by Lewis J. Swaab and two large organ chambers have been especially constructed to receive a magnificent Kimball organ. The interior decorations have been tastefully done in French grey and buff and the ventilation has been considerably improved. A ladies' retiring room and a gents' smoking room have also been included in the new changes. Even the heating system has been altered to meet the new conditions. Handsome new ceiling lights decorate the upper part of the auditorium and give a soft and indirect illumination. In front of the theater a canary opalescent sign with red letters has been built in the wall across the entire width of the house, making this one of the largest signs of its kind in the city.

Horticultural Hall to Be a Film Theater.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The final settlement in the purchase of Horticultural hall, on the southwest corner of Broad and Manning streets, next to the Academy of Music, by a theatrical syndicate composed of David Berg and Philip [illegible], of this city, was consummated yesterday by a formal transfer of the property and recording of the title deed. The theater, according to the plans, will be located in the new building, with an entrance between two stores on Broad street. It is to be leased, according to its promoters, to a New York theatrical syndicate for the exclusive production of their films and specialties. The front of the structure on Broad street, according to the plans, will be seven stories in height and will be used as an office building from the second floor up. Contract for the work has been awarded to the Margolies Constructing Co. of New York. Herbert J. Krapp, also of New York, is the architect. It is expected that the new building will be completed by the middle of February.

Notable Features Shown Last Week.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Notable features to be presented for the first time at the local theaters during the week of August 6 were Herbert Brenon's "Lone Wolf," starring Hazel Dawn, which played the entire week at the Stanley.

"Skinners Baby," a K-E-S-E release, featuring Bryant Washburn, and Enid Bennett and Margery Wilson, in "The Mother Instinct," a Triangle release, will share the honors at the Arcadia during the week.

At the Victoria, Virginia Pearson in "The Wrath of Love," a Wm. Fox release, and "Miss Robinson Crusoe," a Metro feature, starring Emmy Whelen, will divide honors this week.

Mary Miles Minter will be seen in "Somewhere in America," a Mutual release, at the Regent for a limited engagement.

At the Strand "The Bar Sinister" will be the attraction for the first half of the week and "Youth," starring Carlyle Blackwell, during the latter half.

Philadelphia Y. M. C. A. Has Motion Picture Committee.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Young Men's Christian Association, through its secretary, announced the formation of a committee on motion pictures. The committee is to investigate the photoplay situation in the city and to provide suitable films for community centers, schools and churches. It was said also that it intended to inform parents and teachers concerning the standards of the motion picture business. Members of the committee included the Rev. John J. Wheeler, chairman; Mrs. David Lewis, Theadora Earl Jennings, Catharine Bragy, the Rev. Carl E. Grammer, Dr. H. T. Henry, Mrs. Louis C. Madeira, Ellis P. Obenholtzer, Professor A. L. Suhrie, Mrs. Edward Niver, Mrs. Edwin C. Biddle and Mrs. J. Howard Rever.

Nat Silver Now Managing the Imperial.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Nat Silver, formerly of the Stanley theater, is now managing the handsome up-to-date and well-ventilated theater, the Imperial. During his short managerial career he has shown wonderful results and business ability by maintaining a cool and thoroughly clean auditorium in every particular and is presenting an exceptionally attractive program. In addition, the music which is supplied by the piano and the organ is meeting all the requirements almost perfectly.

American Legion in "For the Freedom of the World."

Betzwood, Pa.—Captain Edwin Bower Hesser's great film story of the American Legion of the Canadian Legion, which was given the tentative title of "For Liberty" while it was in the process of production, is to be released to the public under the more expressive name "For the Freedom of the World."

"For the Freedom of the World" will probably be hailed as the most notable film produced. Most of its realistic portrayals of modern warfare were photographed in Canadian training camps, where trench operations are carried out in every detail for the instruction of the men. A great sham battle near Valley Forge was also made, and the scenes photographed will virtually complete the filming.

It was directed by Romaine Fielding for the S. M. Film Producing Company, who also acts an important role as a co-star, with E. K. Lincoln and Barbara Castleton.

Will Build Rialto Without Counting Cost

Washington Exhibitor, Tom Moore, Has Materials Ready and Though Labor Is Problematical He Needs New Theater to Show Film Contracted For.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—It is understood that all activities incident to the erection of a vaudeville theater for Tom Moore, owner of a chain of motion picture houses in the District of Columbia, have been stopped because of existing war conditions, and the probability is that the work on the new Rialto would not be carried ahead were it not for the fact that all contracts have been entered into and a considerable part of the material purchased.

The principal trouble is that it is impossible to get labor, for the men who would in normal times engage in this construction work have entered the employ of the government or have gone to work in the munitions plants, thus creating a shortage of labor locally. Then again, the government is contracting for large quantities of steel, so that it is a hard matter to get building materials. The steel for the Rialto, however, was purchased three months ago and is now lying in the yards ready for shipping orders from the builders. Mr. Moore, when he went into this big deal, tied up a large number of big pictures. He must now have this large new house in which to play them, and that is another of the reasons why he is going ahead with the building of the Rialto, irrespective of the cost. In fact, there is no way of knowing just what the construction of this theater will amount to, as far as labor is concerned. As for materials, all contracts have been let with the exception of that for an organ, and it is understood that there will be no increase in the price of that.

The general contract has been awarded to the Michael A. Weller company, of this city. This firm has guaranteed to finish the building in four months. They would have started earlier, but were delayed by the house wreckers, who were held up on account of continued rainy weather. The contract of the latter contained a clause that the buildings then on the site should be demolished within 25 working days. This was not done because of adverse conditions.

George Schneider, general manager for Tom Moore, is overseeing the construction of the new theater. He did similar work when the Garden theater in Baltimore was being erected, and he was made manager of this house, retaining that position for about two years, or until he entered the employ of Mr. Moore. Prior to his service with the Garden theater he was manager of the New theater in that city. Before joining the New he was a producer of vaudeville acts in his own name and has been connected with the theatrical business for the past eighteen years. In addition to his work in supervising the building of the Rialto, Mr. Schneider is manager of the Strand, and during the vacation period of Arthur Robb, manager of the Garden theater, is keeping his eye out on that house also.

Who the Paramount-Artcraft Traveling Men Are.

Washington, D. C.—Since the merger of Paramount and Artcraft in this territory there has come a new lineup in the sales department of the Washington office. Manager Barron was introduced to the trade in this section in an announcement of the change appearing in the Moving Picture World. Some of the salesmen are well known here, while others come from other sections. W. A. Busch, who will cover Maryland and Northern Virginia, formerly handled Baltimore for the K-E-S-E exchange. F. McShane, who will cover the balance of Virginia, is new to most of the exhibitors, for this is his first work as a film salesman. Mr. McShane, however, has had previous experience in the business, for he had been employed as booker by Artcraft.

Henry Randel will be the "Tar Heel" representative of Paramount-Artcraft, for he has been assigned to look after the North Carolina business. He will be nearer home, for he comes to this territory from Atlanta, where he was connected with the World Film for some time. The other member of this galaxy of stars is O. D. Weems, well known to the trade in Washington and Baltimore. He was the manager of the Baltimore branch of the Mutual's Washington exchange. Mr. Weems now is the Baltimore representative of Paramount-Artcraft.

J. L. Brown Promoted to Assistant Manager.

J. L. Brown, who for some time has been in charge of the bookkeeping department at the Famous Players', following the Paramount-Artcraft merger, has been promoted to the position of assistant manager of the exchange. In addition to assuming charge of the exchange in the absence of Manager Barron, he will continue in command of the bookkeeping department.

Mr. Brown is an expert accountant, as well as having a considerable knowledge of the motion picture film business. During his employment at the Famous Players' exchange he has come in close contact with the sales and other distributing departments, while prior to that he was a successful exhibitor, operating theaters in West Virginia.

Cool Vacation Notes.

Washington, D. C.—It is fine to be able to take a vacation when the mercury in the corner thermometer registers 102 in the shade, while your disposition mounts even higher but all of the exchange managers are not as lucky as L. M. Day, president of the Metro Film Service, who is just back from Saratoga Springs, N. Y., and Sidney B. Lust, who took a run down to Ocean City, Md., to get rid of the heat and the cares and worries of the film business. Rudolph Berger, of the K-E-S-E exchange, goes to his home in Pennsylvania this week for a short rest and for the purpose of undergoing the physical examination for the new National Army.

H. C. Wales at the Desk in Universal Office.

Washington, D. C.—H. C. Wales is back in the fold again and will hereafter greet his old friends from behind the desk in the front office of the Universal exchange on Ninth street, northwest. The boys are all glad to have him back again and are extending greetings to him. As is generally known, prior to his leaving Washington for other fields, Mr. Wales was the popular manager of the World Film office here.

C. R. Milliman Has Important Job.

Washington, D. C.—C. R. Milliman, former manager of the Universal office, recently tendered his services to the Government, and these were accepted, so that now it's "Captain" or something or other Milliman, instead of just plain "Mister," for he is an inspector of aeroplanes. In addition to this duty, he has been doing special duty for the Government, accompanying the Italian Mission, which is making the rounds of the big cities of the country, on its western tour. Mr. Milliman is an old-timer with airships, for he got into the exhibiting end of the flying business with the pioneers in the field. Great opportunities are now open to him, for airships are becoming the big things in the war, and his connection with the supply division offers very acceptable possibilities.

Vivian Whitaker to Open Selznick Office

New Washington, D. C., Branch Will Probably Be Called the Selected Film Corporation—Sydney Lust Has Been Handling Selznick Films.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Another surprise was sprung in the Washington motion picture field when it was learned that Vivian Whitaker, sales manager assigned to the Washington branch of the Paramount Pictures corporation, is negotiating for a lease to a downtown property that will be suitable for an office from which will be handled the pictures marketed by Lewis J. Selznick, Inc., under the new arrangements which Mr. Selznick has made with Adolph Zukor, of Paramount, Famous Players and Artcraft.

Word has reached Washington that Mr. Zukor has secured something more than 50 per cent. of the stock of the Selznick corporation. Mr. Selznick will continue as president, but the system of distributing the pictures will be changed considerably. Arthur S. Kane, general sales manager for Artcraft on the Pacific coast, is understood to have been brought here for the purpose of handling the Selznick and Brenon productions. Mr. Kane has been assisting Al Lichtman, general sales manager for both Paramount and Artcraft. Both of these gentlemen are well acquainted with Mr. Whitaker who, until the time of the merger, was manager of the Artcraft offices in Washington. Naturally, when the change came, they selected him to handle the new proposition in this territory, he being very familiar with it.

Mr. Whitaker entered the film game several years ago as an assistant to George M. Mann, then manager of the Paramount exchange. When the Artcraft Pictures corporation decided to enter this territory Mr. Whitaker was selected as manager to open the Washington office. He held this position until the merger of the Paramount and Artcraft companies, when he became sales manager of the joint offices. He now resigns this latter position to open the new Selznick office, probably under the name of the Selected Film corporation. He will handle the territory, which will include, in addition to the District of Columbia, North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland and a part of West Virginia.

The Washington Selznick business has been handled by Sidney B. Lust, Inc., on a partnership basis. When asked by the Moving Picture World correspondent for a statement, Mr. Lust declared that he could say nothing at this time other than that negotiations were pending between himself and Mr. Selznick for the sale of his interest in the Selznick business of the Washington exchange. At this time the sale has not been consummated.

Cleveland News Letter.

From M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, O.

Standard Film of Cleveland Gets Art Dramas.

CLEVELAND, O.—Announcement was made August 6 that the Art Dramas distribution will be handled, starting September 1, by the Standard Film Service of Cleveland, Cincinnati and Detroit.

Abe Warner, well-known film man, who has represented Selznick ever since the Ohio offices were opened, has bought the Art Dramas releases for Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky, and he will have offices with the Standard after the middle of August, looking after the distribution of the Art Dramas.

The first release under this arrangement will be "Pride and the Devil." There will be a five-reel feature every week thereafter.

This places the Standard Film Service in a unique position among the big film companies of the United States owned by individuals. It is perhaps the largest buying company, using about 35 reels a week.

Just last week announcement was made that they would release the Christie and Tweedledum comedies. They also handle Mutt and Jeff, Motoy, Ditmar's, Billy West, Hans and Fritz and other cartoons, Jungle comedies, patriotic pictures and B. S. Moss productions.

The Standard started a few years ago with a single feature and one little room. In a few weeks they were releasing features regularly and had three rooms.

F. P. Woda Buys Savoy Theater.

Cleveland, O.—Frank P. Woda, formerly owner of the Orpheum theater, Cleveland, has bought the Savoy, a 1,000-seat house at St. Clair avenue and E. 103d street.

Mr. Woda plans several improvements, especially as regards the lobby and front and will run only the highest class pictures the coming season.

Local Notes on Theaters and Films.

Cleveland, O.—The Alhambra theater, Cleveland, one of the city's largest first-run houses, is closed for three weeks while a force of workmen are redecorating and making alterations.

The carpets and other furnishings are being given a thorough overhauling, while the log seats are being moved from the middle of the theater to the rear.

A fine new stage setting also has been purchased, and the Alhambra will open almost like a new house August 19.

Cleveland, O.—"One Touch of Nature," the K-E-S-E release featuring John J. McGraw, received considerable publicity in Cleveland because of the fact that it was directed by Edward H. Griffith, who until two years ago was a Cleveland newspaper man. It was shown four days, first run, at the Mall Duplex theater.

Baltimore, Md.—It is understood that the Operators' Union, Local 181, has been hit pretty hard by the draft and that 10 men have been called on the first quota.

Miss M. E. Heath, assistant treasurer of the New Theater company, Baltimore, is now doing very well after her recent operation at the hospital. At one time she was on the point of death, but recovered.

Col. Jacob W. Hook, vice-president of the Southern Amusement company, operating the McHenry theater, Baltimore, is now taking a three weeks' vacation, and will visit Atlantic City and Asbury Park.

Frederick C. Schanberger, manager of the Maryland theater, Baltimore, celebrated his birthday on Thursday, August 9, with his family at Atlantic City.

John T. and Charles E. Ford, co-proprietors of Ford's opera house, Baltimore, have arranged for the showing of Howe's Travelogues during the week of August 20.

Sophia K. Levine, the charming and popular treasurer of the Mutual exchange in Baltimore, is now on her vacation and is taking an extended trip through the Northern states and Canada.

On Thursday, July 26, Harry A. Henkel, manager of the New Academy of Music, returned from his vacation at Atlantic City, and while there had a talk with Samuel F. Nixon, managing director of the Academy, and he seems very optimistic as to the theatrical outlook for the coming season.

Film Doings in Nashville Last Week

Crescent Amusement Contracts for Goldwyn for Its Fifth Avenue Theater—Theater Consolidation in Dyersburg—New Chattanooga Theater—Notes.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—President Tony Sudekum of the Crescent Amusement company has closed a contract with Goldwyn for showing its feature releases at the Fifth Avenue theater, the principal Nashville house controlled by the company. This service will begin the early part of September, and will be the first of the Goldwyn pictures in this city, beginning with "Polly of the Circus," "Baby Mine," "The Spreading Dawn" and "Fighting Odds."

Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford pictures made under the Artcraft banner will also be shown at the Fifth Avenue theater, and in connection with the existing program service of Paramount, K-E-S-E, etc., forms one of the strongest booking arrangements of any moving picture house in the South.

The Elite theater, a Fifth avenue house operated by the Crescent Amusement company, is closed for a number of days while extensive repairs are under way. Fresh paint, new fixtures, repairs to the seats, floors and electrical apparatus, together with artistic decorations both inside and out, will make this popular theater one of the handsomest on picture row. The Elite maintains one of the few five-cent programs in Nashville, and has its steady share of patronage from the public. The theater was one of the first to be built here under the improved style of architecture.

Dyersburg Theaters Consolidate.

Dyersburg, Tenn.—C. L. Enochs has been appointed manager of both the Vaudette and New Frances theaters of this town, following the recent consolidation of these two moving picture houses. Mr. Enochs was formerly manager and proprietor of the Vaudette, but is now in active charge of both theaters. The orchestras of both the New Frances and Vaudette theaters have been released, and music is being supplied by electrical instruments at both places.

Competition at Martin, Tenn.

Martin, Tenn.—The moving picture situation here seems to have developed into a real fight again. For some time there has been only one show running the Lillian theater, but Mr. Ryan, owner of the Lyric, has let this house out to a local man, who, it is reported, will receive free rent, lights, etc., and competition promises to be very lively from now on, the outcome of which remains to be seen.

Chattanooga Metro Activities.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Arthur S. Dickinson, manager of Southern Metro at this point, attended the meeting of all Metro exchange managers in Chicago during the week of the convention.

All employees of the Southern Metro Pictures corporation enjoyed themselves with their annual outing last Sunday, August 5, with swimming, fishing, baseball and other sports. There was plenty to eat, and everyone voted it "the best yet."

C. E. Buchanan of Metro's Atlanta office was a recent visitor to the Chattanooga Metro exchange.

Wilder Theater Soon Ready.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—When the large theater at Wilder Park station is completed Fort Oglethorpe will boast three theaters. The picture house on the Lafayette road, near Oglethorpe headquarters, is now running full blast, and the one recently built at Lytle is open every evening. The latter has several times donated its Sunday profits to the Red Cross. The large new Wilder house has a seating capacity of 3,500, and will cater largely to the soldiers in camp. The car line has just been completed out as far as this theater from Chattanooga. Fort Oglethorpe, just over the state line, is located on the northern border of Georgia.

Knoxville Bijou Being Remodeled.

Knoxville, Tenn.—The Bijou theater is closed at present undergoing a thorough overhauling, and will remain closed for a period of three weeks. Manager Don P. Trent states that many needed improvements will be effected and the house thoroughly renovated for its opening about August 20. The Bijou is one of Knoxville's leading uptown houses.

Leon Cole Takes a Bride.

Nashville, Tenn.—Prof. Leon Cole, musical director at the Strand theater, was married Monday, August 6, to Miss Margaret Katherine Young of Nashville. Mr. and Mrs. Cole have the best wishes of many friends both in and out of the profession for future happiness.

Tennessee News Briefs.

Nashville, Tenn.—Manager Carson Bradford of the Strand spent last week in Atlanta and Chattanooga looking over the field, and incidentally lining up some big ones for fall. Mr. Bradford will, within a few days, be ready to start repairs on the Strand, which have been contemplated for some time.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—The Alcazar has booked the Fairbanks pictures made by Artcraft. "Wild and Woolly," one of the first, was shown for three days to crowded houses; prices, 15 cents matinee, 20 cents night.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—E. J. Sparks, manager of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, was a recent visitor in Chattanooga, when he went over the fall and winter plans for his company and arranged bookings for their several houses throughout the South.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—H. B. Freeman, manager of the Edenland theater, Franklin, was in the city a couple of weeks ago. Mr. Freeman is known among Chattanooga exchange men as the "Big Boy," and they look forward with interest to his visits.

Birmingham Majestic Changes.

Birmingham, Ala.—The Majestic theater, operating a moving picture and vaudeville show on a ten-cent basis, has changed hands, and is now under the control of the Alcazar Amusement company of this city, which company has been operating here for some time. Mr. Jackson, former manager of the Alcazar, is in charge of the Majestic.

Queen Features Secure News Weekly.

Birmingham, Ala.—Manager Doc Graham of the Queen Feature service announces that his company has secured rights on the American War Weekly for the states of Alabama, Georgia and Florida, and that demands for this series have been very satisfactory to date. This exchange is also agent for the Gold King screen, in addition to numerous other state right features and Christie comedy service.

Louisville Exhibitors at Odds With Union

Disturbing Factor Seems to Be the Dissatisfaction of Some Operators With the Methods of the Musicians' Union—Trouble Starts at Ideal Theater.

Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Trouble has broken out in Louisville between the Louisville Photoplay Association and the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes, of which all of the local union machine operators are members. The trouble started when the Ideal theater, Twenty-third and Market streets, employed Gilbert Bowling, a union operator, to handle a machine in a house which has no other union employes in other departments. The Union ordered Bowling to quit his job, and Bowling refused. International Organizer John J. Barry, of the Alliance, was recently in Louisville and endeavored to get Bowling to give up his work unless union musicians, stage hands, etc., were employed in the picture theater. Bowling refused and was discharged from the Union. The Photoplay Association then endeavored to have the man reinstated, claiming that it was a raw deal.

Following a meeting of the local members of the Alliance, refusal to reinstate Bowling was voted upon, the position being taken that the operator had violated the regulations of the Union when he refused to respond to the strike call, and holding also that the owners of the photoplay houses have placed themselves in an anomalous position in demanding the reinstatement of the operator, and that the demand of the Photoplay Association be denied.

Members of the Photoplay Association then announced that Bowling would have to be reinstated within two weeks or the booths of all of the local theaters would become open booths, and union men would either have to agree to the new order of things or hunt other jobs, as the Union would no longer be recognized, and that Bowling would be backed to the limit.

Hope to Patch Up the Quarrel.

The union men now claim that Bowling can only be reinstated through the International's head office, and the appeal must come from Bowling himself. However, efforts are being made to effect a reconciliation, and it is understood that both sides have agreed to patch matters up until the General Executive Board can take action on the reinstatement.

For several years the Ideal theater has not employed union musicians, and as it is strictly a picture theater has had no use for stage hands. However, the Union recently ordered the theater to employ union men, and on its refusal ordered Bowling to strike. A large element in the Operators' Union are with the Photoplay Association and Bowling, taking the stand that the musicians have shown slight respect for their organization by accepting private wage agreements under the union scale and on the other hand it is argued that the demand for a union stage manager in a motion picture house is unjust in view of the fact that stage hands are not needed in picture theaters As a fact, the stage hands are endeavoring to force the picture theaters to create a few $18 a week jobs. At the present time some of the operators, who favor the contention of the Photoplay Association, have been talking of leaving the Alliance and forming a separate union.

Goes Deeper Than This One Case.

While the one case at the Ideal might not amount to much, members of the Photoplay Association figures that the Union will call men out of other houses which refuse to hire union stage hands, musicians, etc., and in some cases the operators would go. Therefore the Association is willing to make a test case of the matter at the start and thereby break up the trouble at the start. In Louisville every moving picture theater belongs to the Photoplay Association, which operates as a unit in all labor troubles.

For several years the Photoplay Association and the members of the Operators' Union have gotten along in fine shape, and the exhibitors have felt very friendly toward machine men. In fact, some of the exhibitors have favored the union, and have repeately said that with a good union, handled by sensible officers, it was better to have union men as differences could be settled with greater ease, and the union made its men come to bat. However, demands of the musicians and smaller fry have always been such that the theaters could not go them, this resulting in a number of the houses putting in mechanical orchestras and getting rid of musicians entirely.

Rift in the Musicians' Union Also.

Another interesting labor row is in connection with a suit filed by Ernest Natiello, a local band leader of prominence who for years has been prominent in the various amusement resorts of Louisville, against the Musicians' Union, Local No. 11, American Federation of Musicians, asking for an injunction to prevent the officers of the organization from suspending or expelling him from the local organization and from posting his name as a suspended or expelled member for failure to pay a $500 fine assessed against him by a committee known as the Traveling Band Committee, the action of which was sustained at a meeting of the Federation in May. Natiello was cited to appear before the committee for an alleged violation of the rules with reference to purchasing uniforms. Natiello alleges that he was not allowed to be present at the trial either in person or by representative, and that the hearing was contrary to the by-laws of the organization as the president was not present. Furthermore he has not been notified of just what the charge is other than it was a violation of section J article 14, of the by-laws. Judge Robinson, after hearing the case, granted a temporary restraining order pending the disposition of the case on its merits.

Hopkinsville Theater Closes for Improvements.

Hopkinsville, Ky.—The Princess theater has been closed by Manager Stockley, who reports that after thoroughly overhauling the house he will reopen it. In the meantime the feature programs have been transferred to the Rex theater, the latter's regular programs being discontinued, with the exception of the serials.

Bachmeyer Opens Exchange for Metro

Secures Space in the Film Exchange Building, Cincinnati, and Engages a Capable Force—P. K. Johnston and E. R. Custer, Roadmen.

From Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, O.—The newest Cincinnati film exchange is that which will handle Metro pictures, under charge of W. C. Bachmeyer, for several years in charge of the Famous Players exchange, and president of the Associated Film Exchanges of the Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Bachmeyer has secured highly desirable quarters on the seventh floor of the Film Exchange building at Seventh and Main street, occupying the whole floor, with about 4,500 square feet of space, and is getting things ready for active business.

The floor has been arranged to provide a large private office for Mr. Bachmeyer, a large general office, with abundant room for all of the routine business of the exchange, a reception room next to the elevator, fireproof shipping, storage and inspection rooms, all adjoining, and an advertising department 18 by 75 feet, with room for practically unlimited paper.

Mr. Bachmeyer has already formed a fine organization, those in the selling end with him including P. K. Johnston and E. R. Custer, both of whom were formerly with him at the Famous Players. They will handle territories with which they are familiar, Mr. Johnston, who was assistant manager with the Famous Players, having something of a roving commission, while Mr. Custer will travel in West Virginia and Kentucky. The territory which will be covered out of the Cincinnati office includes the southern part of Ohio, most of Kentucky and parts of West Virginia and Indiana.

Will Make the Strand More Roomy.

Cincinnati, O.—Another striking indication of the uninterrupted progress of moving pictures and of business in Cincinnati is the letting of plans for enlarging the Strand theater, on Walnut street, one of the most popular of the several downtown houses operated by Manager I. Libson. The work involves extensions to the balcony and gallery, and making the upper part of the building more accessible. It will be recalled that the Strand was originally the Gayety, a full-sized theater, so that the work of making it still more roomy indicates the success with which it has met in its career as a moving picture house.

H. G. Clarke of Chicago Gets Empress Theater.

Cincinnati, O.—It has been announced that the deal recently reported for the sale of the Empress theater, on Vine street, to a local syndicate, fell through, and that the house has been sold by the Bell Theatrical company to H. G. Clarke of Chicago for $86,500. The purchaser it is understood, assumed a mortgage of $60,000 on the building, paying the remainder of the price, $25,600, in cash. Bookings will continue to be handled by a Chicago vaudeville exchange, with adequate provision for pictures in connection with the popular-priced programs offered. It is not yet known whether George F. Fish will again be with the house as manager.

Elaborate Private Showing of "The Honor System."

Cincinnati, O.—J. A. Conant, in charge of the interests of Fox Standard Pictures in this section, held his first private exhibition on Wednesday, August 8, at the Hotel Sinton, where the great ballroom was utilized to take care of the good-sized audience which accepted Mr. Conant's invitation to see "The Honor System." Invitations were extended to members of the women's clubs and other civic organizations, as well as to city and police officials, and members of the Cincinnati baseball team, headed by Manager Christy Mathewson, with their wives, were also invited, as Mr. Conant is an ardent fan. Unfortunately a double-header on that afternoon prevented the ball players from attending, but many of their wives were among those present.

Manager Rudolph Knopfle, who has charge of the general work at the Fox offices, and Mr. Conant, handled the affair in the style of a real social event, serving refreshments and receiving in hospitable fashion. The film made a pronounced impression, bookings being heavy, Mr. Conant reports. A private showing of "Jack and the Beanstalk," the first of the elaborate series of child pictures on the Fox schedule, is to be held at the Hotel Gibson on August 22.

"The Slacker" Pleases Cincinnatians.

Cincinnati, O.—The Walnut theater had the good fortune recently to land one of the most timely of recent releases in "The Slacker," the Metro feature with Emily Stevens in the leading part, and good houses were the reward of the management. The picture ran an entire week at 15 and 25 cents, and the applause of the crowds testified to their approval of the moral of the picture. There was special interest in the treatment of the attitude of German-Americans toward the war in the picture, on account of the large number of Cincinnatians of German descent, and apparently the loyalty shown by the youg German-American who enlisted was taken as typical.

Woman's City Club Committee on Films Gets Busy.

Cincinnati, O.—The committee on moving pictures of the Woman's City Club of Cincinnati has just been reorganized, and has signalized its new life by the announcement of a vigorous attack on pictures considered unfit to be seen by children. The committee intends to make a special effort to secure the holding of children's matinees at the downtown houses, for children from large institutions as well as for others. Members of the committee will also make a special study of the preparation of programs from the exhibitor's standpoint, and of advertising, in order to ascertain, if possible, how to frame offerings so as to secure business, and at the same time to show pictures of the highest dramatic, literary and educational value; from which it can be inferred that the committee has quite a job laid out for itself.

I. Frankel Will Add Seats.

Cincinnati, O.—Good business and the need for more room with which to take care of it have led I. Frankel to make arrangements to add 200 more seats to his house on Freeman avenue. Plans have been prepared for that purpose and work will start as soon as contracts can be let.

NOTES FROM DETROIT.

Hal Smith Takes Foursquare Appointment.

Detroit, Mich.—Hal Smith, for the past year in charge of the Drury Lane theater in Detroit, left this week for Cincinnati, where he will be in charge of the office to be opened there for M. H. Hoffman Foursquare pictures. The appointment was made by George W. Weeks, division manager, who has charge of Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky and Indiana. Mr. Smith is the second Michigander to go to the Ohio territory for Mr. Weeks, the appointment of D. Leo Dennison at Cleveland being made a few weeks ago. Mr. Dennison is now looking around for suitable office space.

State Right Film for Week at Drury Lane.

Detroit, Mich.—The Drury Lane theater, Detroit, has adopted a new policy—that of showing state rights pictures for a full week. The first to be shown under this policy is "A Mormon Maid," owned in Michigan by the State Film Co. Following this other big features are to be shown. Mr. Weeks, managing director, is convinced that the Drury Lane is an ideal spot for big features and longer runs, and is going to experiment during the next few months and work out the new policy.

Detroit's Regent Leased to C. H. Miles

$60,000 a Year Rental and a Fifteen Year Lease Are Terms on Which 3,000-Seat House Changes Hands—Shows Vaudeville and Films.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—C. H. Miles, now operating the Orpheum vaudeville and picture theater in Detroit, and the Miles and the Grand theaters in Cleveland, has leased the Regent theater, Woodward and Boulevard, Detroit, from William F. Klatt. The terms call for a lease of 15 years, starting August 27, and the rental is at the rate of $60,000 per year. The Regent is Detroit's largest playhouse, seating more than 3,000 people, mostly all on the first floor. It opened last winter and has been devoted exclusively to motion pictures. Mr Miles takes possession on August 27 and will make a few necessary changes prior to reopening the house on Labor Day, with a combination policy of seven acts of vaudeville and pictures, two shows daily, except on Sundays and holidays, when there will be one in the afternoon and two at night. Prices will be 15 to 50 cents. The Orpheum theater, which is located right downtown, will have no change of policy, but will continue with a continuous policy of vaudeville and pictures.

Mr. Klatt still retains the Rosedale and Gratiot theaters, and is reported as being in negotiation for other property on which he will erect another large photoplay theater, although in another part of town.

The location of the Regent should be an excellent one for the new Miles policy, as it is right in the heart of a half million amusement-loving people, and being at the very junction of heavy traffic

Geo. W. Trendle Gives Up Law for Film Business.

Detroit, Mich.—George W. Trendle, active with the various John H. Kunsky enterprises, is giving up entirely his personal law practice and hereafter will devote his entire time to the Kunsky enterprises, looking after the legal work, as well as the endless amount of detail matters, thus relieving John H. Kunsky of all except the real executive work and matters of utmost importance. Mr Trendle is secretary of all the Kunsky enterprises, is on the board of directors and has a substantial interest in the new Madison and Adams theaters. The salary he will receive alone from Mr. Kunsky is said to be around five figures.

When John H. Kunsky conceived the idea of the Columbia theater along in 1908, Mr. Trendle was selected to work out the matter of incorporation, division of stock, etc. Mr. Kunsky took over the Caille interests and each year has become a greater factor in the field. In all of his transactions he had the legal advice and assistance of Mr. Trendle, who was careful to make no mis-steps.

A better man than George Trendle could not have been secured by Mr. Kunsky because of the former's varied experience in the very lines that are necessary to understand and handle.

Mr. Trendle has an office adjoining that of Mr. Kunsky on the fifth floor of the Madison theater building.

The Kunsky enterprises comprise 10 theaters in Detroit, three exchanges, as well as electrical and sign shops. Also the Madison theater building, five stories high, which represents a value of several million dollars.

Film Colony Summering at Pine Lake.

Pine Lake, Mich.—There is quite a film colony at Pine Lake, about 35 miles from Detroit by street car. The colony consists of J. O. Brooks, Madison Film company; M. H. Starr, Pathe; Harry Guest, publicity manager for Kunsky enterprises; Art Blankmeyer, Tri-State Film company; L. G. Gardiner, Gardiner Theater Equipment company, and George N. Montgomery, Metro. All have summer cottages here, but they go to Detroit every day and attend to their business.

A. J. Kleist, Jr., to Be An Aviator.

Pontiac, Mich.—A. J. Kleist, Jr., of the Howland and New Eagle theaters, Pontiac, has enlisted in Camp Selfridge Aviation field at Mount Clemens. During his absence from Pontiac his affairs will be in the hands of Ray Carroll, associated with him for a long while as assistant and also as organist.

Mr. Kleist called at the World office last week and announced that he was going to build a new big theater in Pontiac, directly across from the present Oakland theater. It will seat 1,200 and be absolutely fireproof. Work will start in August on the foundation, and be completed by November 1, if plans do not miscarry.

Mr. Kleist is just past 23 years of age, operates two theaters and a number of other enterprises in Pontiac, so he deserves a lot of credit for the success he has made of the picture business.

A Successful Detroit Theater Manager.

Arthur D. Baehr.

Detroit, Mich.—Arthur D. Baehr, manager of the Crystal theater, Detroit, at 1499 Michigan avenue, is increasing the patronage of that playhouse every week. He keeps personally acquainted with most of his patrons, so that he is in a position to know what they most prefer.

The Crystal, owned by J. Cohen and William Burnstine, opened in January, 1916. It seats 600 and has room for about [illegible] standers. The interior decorations are of old rose, and the ventilation is both natural and artificial. The operator's booth is equipped with the latest mechanical devices, two Power's 6B machines and a generator. The throw from the projection booth to the gold fibre screen is about 90 feet. The floor is so bowled that the screen can be seen from every seat in the auditorium.

Music is furnished by a pipe organ. In addition there is an orchestra. The admission fee at the Crystal is 10 cents. The program is changed daily. Pictures of stars in the form of weekly souvenir programs, with the program printed on the back, are distributed. The credit for the Crystal's success goes to the constant and untiring efforts of Manager Baehr.

H. Wayne Pearson New Triangle Manager.

Detroit, Mich.—H. Wayne Pearson, the new Triangle manager in Detroit, was formerly with the National theater in Washington; with Cohan & Harris as roadman; the Shuberts for three seasons, and more recently with the D. W. Griffith film productions.

J. C. Fishman to Wed Miss Charnas.

Detroit, Mich.—J. C. Fishman of the Standard Film company is engaged to Miss Jean Charnas of Findlay, Ohio, who is a sister to Harry Charnas, president of the Standard at Cleveland, Ohio. The wedding will take place soon. Congratulations to the happy couple.

Sunday Show Charities in Indianapolis

Secretary Garde of the So-Called Bell Fund Makes a Report—$4,500 Was Collected and Distributed to Poor During Year—How It Is Collected.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Miss Henrietta E. Garde, secretary of the Bell charity fund, maintained by contributions from Indianapolis moving picture show owners who operate their places on Sundays, has made public a complete report of the work accomplished by the fund for the year ending July 1.

This fund was started several years ago by the owners of moving picture theaters in this city. The theaters were kept open on Sunday and no admissions were charged, but all persons who attended could, if they wished, make a donation for charity. In 1914, when Joseph E. Bell was elected mayor of the city, he granted permission to the exhibitors to operate their shows on Sunday, providing a certain per cent. of the receipts were given to charity. A committee, appointed by the mayor, met with the picture show owners and the following rates were agreed upon:

Houses having 400 seats or less, $2; houses having from 400 to 700 seats, $3; houses having more than 700 seats, $5. All of the downtown photoplay houses paid double the latter rate. The committee in charge of the fund established headquarters at 204 the Rauh building, and the Security Trust Company took charge of the fund.

The money collected in this manner has been used for immediate relief in deserving cases that have been investigated by charity workers, members of the committee or ones that have been reported from reliable sources. The secretary's report follows:

Number of families to which aid was given	925
Number of persons in the families	3,078
Number of baskets of groceries furnished, cost	$1,448.48
Fuel furnished, cost	600.02
Cost of rents, clothing, railroad fares, medicine, moving furniture, insurance, room and board	856.52
Money given Gardeners' Association	100.00
Money given to the Flower Mission	118.00
Donations	286.61
John Gentile, attorney's fees	80.00
Telephone	12.00
Office rent	77.50
Operating expenses	587.78
Total	$4,166.92

The members of the committee in charge of the fund are Bert McBride, treasurer (Security Trust Company); Hubert S. Riley, Leonard Quill, Herbert G. Spellman and Henrietta Garde, secretary. Mr. Spellman is the chairman of the committee.

Members of the committee have been assisted materially in their work by A. C. Zaring, president of the Indianapolis Exhibitors' Association; Lavina Dickey and Mary Mays, of the Flower Mission; Mrs. K. M. Stuckey, 1516 North New Jersey street, an independent charity worker; Mrs. Margaret Burckle, of the city dispensary; Dr. A. L. Marshall, 520 Hume-Mansur building; Mrs. Harriet Clark, Citizens' Humane Society; Mrs. W. P. Meyer, Cold Water road; George Thompson, 441 East South street, an attorney and independent charity worker; Mrs. Lyman Ellingswood, president of the Mothers' Aid Society; Mrs. Maud Moudy, 547 East Thirty-first street, principal of school No. 16, and Mrs. Olga Shellschmidt, school teacher, 2402 Bellefontaine street.

Bedford Opera House Reopens With "The Whip."

Bedford, Ind.—The Bedford Theater Company, which recently purchased the Bedford opera house, has announced that the theater will be opened the second week in August. The first big production will be "The Whip," the regular admission price being 10 cents.

The theater has been thoroughly remodeled and redecorated, all exits cleared and made safe, and other necssary changes made for the convenience and comfort of the patrons. A new fireproof booth for the motion picture machine also has been installed. The theater now has a seating capacity of 800.

Montpelier Changes Hands Again.

Montpelier, Ind.—The Star theater here is now owned by C. F. Gray of Bluffton, Ind., who formerly owned and operated the Star theater in that town. Mr. Gray traded for the house Thursday, August 2, making the deal with George Bretzinger, who traded for the show a week ago with Edward Abshire. Mr. Bretzinger intended to operate the show, but a nephew, whom he was expecting to manage it for him, could not accept, so he made the deal with Mr. Gray. Mr. Gray has announced that he hopes to have the place open to the public within a week or ten days. He intends to make several changes in the interior of the house.

Max Barnett Takes Indiana Theater.

South Bend, Ind.—The Indiana theater on South Michigan street has been leased by Max Barnett of Chicago, Ill., who will show feature pictures. The lease was obtained from Ira Ciralski, the owner, and the work of making improvements will start at once.

Mr. Barnett has had experience in Chicago as a photoplay exhibitor and promises first-class programs, in addition to a seven-piece orchestra which is to be installed. The new name of the house has not been decided upon and it is possible that it will still be known as the Indiana.

Evansville's New Grand Renovated.

Evansville, Ind.—Scenic artists and carpenters are busy at work on the stage of the new Grand theater, getting it ready for autumn, when it will be opened with vaudeville and motion pictures. Otto Meyer, the manager, has not announced the opening date, but in former years the house was opened on the last Sunday in August, making the probable date for the opening this year Sunday, August 26. The proposed improvements that were considered last spring before the house closed for the season have been abandoned.

Charles F. Woods Dies.

Princton, Ind.—Word has been received here of the death of Charles F. Woods, formerly proprietor of a motion picture theater here, who died last week at Tulsa, Okla., where he moved about a year ago. The funeral was held in Tulsa last Wednesday. Mr. Woods, who was well known among the exhibitors in the southern part of the state, is survived by the widow and five daughters.

Pretty West Lafayette Theater Sold.

West Lafayette, Ind.—The Strand theater, owned by Frank Patterson and Charles Rhodes, has been sold to Clarence Rawles and Clyde Ramey. The new owners are now busy renovating the house and expect to have it ready to open in about a week. During the remainder of the summer season the shows will be given only on Monday, Wednesday and Friday nights. The Strand is one of the prettiest photoplay houses in this section of the state. It is equipped with two projecting machines, a mirror screen and pipe organ, and has a seating capacity of 450 people.

Notes From Theaters in Indiana.

North Manchester, Ind.—W. J. Sirk of this place has bought the Crystal theater at South Whitley from Mrs. Sadie Henry, who operated the house last fall. Mrs Henry later leased it to Charles Copeland and he has been operating it since then. He announced recently that he intends to open up a new theater here some time next fall.

Muncie, Ind.—The lighting system at the Orpheum theater on East Main street was put out of commission last Sunday as a result of a small fire at the place late Saturday night. Firemen were of the opinion that the fire started from an exposed electric wire in the ceiling. The interior of the theater was damaged only slightly.

Lafayette, Ind.—Gottlob Hausman, proprietor of the Victoria theater, has been confined to his home on South Fourth street for the last few days suffering from leakage of the heart. Physicians who are attending him say his condition is not serious.

What Fire Precautions Have You Taken?

Georgia State Fire Inspector Sends a Series of Questions to Managers of Factories and Exchanges—Fires Are Unpatriotic.

By Alfred M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, GA.—The abolition of careless management will eliminate two-thirds of the fires in a community, according to W. R. Joyner, state fire inspector, who has issued a series of questions directed at factory owners, moving picture exchanges and public buildings.

In times like these anything that might mean the destruction of food and property is unpatriotic, he declares, and he, therefore, urges upon all factory owners and moving picture exchanges the closest, most scrupulous attention to details of which they are capable in the matter of fire protection.

His list of questions follows:

Do you know that two-thirds of our fires are caused by carelessness?

Have you taken every precaution to safeguard your property against fires?

Are your employees organized into an efficient fire-fighting unit?

Where is your nearest firm alarm box?

Whose business is it to turn in an alarm—by day? by night?

Do you admit strangers to your plant?

Have you a night watchman?

Are your chemical fire extinguishers charged and operative? How long since you looked them over?

Are your elevator shafts, areas, spaces under stairways and benches and dark corners clear of rubbish, oily waste and [illegible]?

Have you metal containers for rubbish? Are these emptied in a safe place daily?

Is your standpipe and hose equipment in order? Are the nozzles in place?

Is your water supply effective, or are the pipes half filled with mud?

Have you mops, oil rags or waste standing in exposed places?

Do you prohibit smoking in your plant?

Is some one of your employees responsible to you for the care and absolute cleanliness of your plant?

Do you know that this employee is giving strict attention to his duties?

If you cannot answer each of these questions satisfactorily, you may be unintentionally playing into the hands of our enemies.

This is no time to procrastinate. Attend to these matters today. NOW.

What Sergeant Weston Thinks of the British War Films.

Atlanta, Ga.—Just to find out for himself if the British war pictures being shown at the Criterion during the week were really authentic, Sergeant G. N. Weston, sergeant-instructor at the Tech aviation school, visited the theater Tuesday and afterward declared they were the "real thing." "I was over that battlefield shown in these pictures during the battle of the Somme," declared Sergeant Weston Wednesday, "and the scenes caught by the cameraman are just as they happened. I was then a member of the Second Battalion of Canadian Infantry. These pictures are very interesting and brought to my mind one incident which comes within my knowledge of a man who was killed by the concussion of a German shell, although he was some yards from the point of explosion. Similar bursting shells are shown in these pictures.

"I remember on one occasion being located near a hill. It was on our right We moved out and on our return two weeks later this hill had been leveled

"That will give you an idea of the destructive quality of these shells. Good views of the tanks are shown and the work of handling men and supplies is depicted very interestingly in these films

Worth a Passing Glance.

Atlanta, Ga.—A. C. Thornton, manager of the Majestic theater, Columbus, Ga., was in Atlanta Tuesday and Wednesday. He reports business good and still improving.

Quite a number of employees of the exchanges in Atlanta are subject to the draft, and are patiently waiting to be called for physical examination.

The motion picture showing scenes of the Russian revolution crowded the Almo theater, Atlanta, this week. Practically every Russian in the city, of which there are many, visited the theater during the showing of the picture.

The Southern Paramount exchange branch here has discontinued the publication of the Weekly Review, so ably edited by Mrs. Grace Wyndon Vail.

Ralph DeBruler Now Manager of the Grand.

Macon, Ga.—Ralph DeBruler, formerly of Atlanta, where he managed the Strand and Rialto, now located in Macon, has been made manager of the Grand, in Macon, the home of the drama of that city, and, judging by his past, he will make a good one. Mr. DeBruler is now also managing four moving picture theaters in Macon, and doing big business, a great patronage coming from the troops of three states encamped there.

Twin City Theater Notes.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Lyric theater here will close Sunday, August 12, for one week while repairs are being made on the interior of the theater. Manager Hugh C Andress has announced that the theater will be reopened with Bille Burke in her first Famous Players feature.

St. Paul, Minn.—The New Garrick, formerly The Strand, will be opened to the public Sunday, August 12, according to an announcement from Ruben & Finkelstein headquarters, with Mary Pickford in "The Little American."

Minneapolis, Minn.—Following a $7,500 business at the Auditorium here, "The Battle of the Somme" was shown to overflow crowds at both the Lagoon and the Rialto theaters here last week.

M. Hoffman Joins Goldwyn Forces.

Minneapolis, Minn.—M. Hoffman, former manager of the McClure exchange here, has joined the sales force of the Goldwyn exchange and reports little trouble in getting contracts for forthcoming releases.

Mill City's Film Row Sees More Changes

Plenty of Action During Past Week Around Office Desks—C. G. Branham to Manage Strand—Metro Manager,, W. K. Howard, Leaves for War.

By John L. Johnston, 704 Film Exchange Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Minneapolis film row is up and going again and the past week has been full of action, and the coming week promises some more. It started off on Sunday (it always does) with the announcement that Charles G. Granham, whose smiling countenance is here reproduced had succeeded James A. Keough as manager of The Strand theater. "The Slacker" was shown to an enthusiastic audience of exhibitors and critics at the the Lyric on Wednesday. Charles H. Christie of the Christie studies was in the city Thursday, two resignations from film exchange were reported and an appointment of a new exchange manager was announced.

Charles G. Granham.

Regarding Mr. Branham, he is one of the best known theater men in this section, although he has been interested in motion pictures but two years. Mr. Branham started The Northwest Weekly, a news film, later taken in charge by W. A. Lochren, and known as the Lochren film. Mr. Branham became editor of "Amusements," a position he left to join The Strand as publicity man. Mr. Branham uses the "stunt" of advertising all future features and music by animated titles instead of slides and he has injected some "pep" into Richard Long's orchestra.

The New Garrick Will Charge 20 Cents.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager Lowell V. Calvert of the New Garrick, the Northwest's largest photoplay house, has announced that beginning Sunday, August 12, the admission price at the theater will be 20 cents. The New Garrick raised its admission from ten to fifteen cents January 1. The theater has been redecorated and first run Paramount and Artcraft releases have been contracted for. A splendid concert orchestra, for some time a magnetic power to the theater, has been enlarged to record proportions and, according to Mr. Calvert, the theater will display films in a manner that would do credit to Roxey Rothapfel's lil palace on Broadway.

Manager William K. Howard Leaves Metro for War.

Minneapolis, Minn.—William K. Howard 24-year-old manager of the local Metro exchange, has answered the call from Uncle Sam and he will drop the pen and take up the rifle Saturday, August 11 Mr. Howard's leaving causes many regrets from exhibitors, who admire him for his aggressive, straight forward business methods and now his display of true patriotism. Mr. Howard bade farewell to a large number of Twin City exhibitors at the special showing of "The Slacker" at the Lyric on Wednesday last and with Harry Cohen, New York representative for the Metro, he is now winding up his business affairs here. The possible successor to Mr. Howard has caused considerable comment, but it is believed George W. Malone will be the final selection. Mr. Malone has formerly been connected with the Pathe, Bluebird and Vitagraph exchanges here and has been actively engaged in film exploitation and exhibition since the industry was in its infancy. Mr. Malone is one of the best known roadmen in the entire West.

Some Mill City Exchange Notices.

Minneapolis, Minn.—W. C. Lestico, for over a year assistant to Manager Harry Graham of the K-E-S-E exchange, has resigned to accept a position as assistant to Jack Margoles of the United Theaters Co., here.

Albert Cassel, for about two years booker for the local Pathe exchange, has resigned. He has not announced his future plans, but in all probability he will join the ranks of some local exchange within a short time.

Newton Davis, manager of the local Bluebird exchange, has received authority to appoint the manager for the new Minneapolis branch exchange on the Longacre Distributing Co., handling Century comedies. Mr. Davis has announced that Lee A. Horn, of the Selznick exchange here, is his choice for the position. Mr. Horn is in Duluth, Minn., and it is not known whether he will accept the berth or not.

R. M. Karalis, formerly of the local Pathe exchange, has been added to the sales force of the local Metro office.

Manager J. George Feinberg, of the Theater Equipment Co., is now en route to the Pacific Coast, where he will look after several contracts now being handled by his firm in Oregon, Washington and Western Montana.

O. A. Peterson has purchased the repair department of the Northwestern Motion Picture Equipment company from James V. Bryson.

A. Aloysius Hixon, of the Elliott & Sherman exchange, has returned from a month's trip over the hot sands in the interests of "The Garden of Allah" and "The Birth of a Nation."

James V. Bryson has announced a special summer reduction in rental for his feature, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea."

E. R. Pearson, sales manager for the K-E-S-E organization, spent two days in Minneapolis last week on his way to the Pacific Coast.

Manager S. N. Robinson, of the Film Library & Exchange here, has secured the right to distribute Christie comedies in the state of Montana.

Manager Edward J. Frye, of the Excel Film Co., of Great Falls, Mont., is spending his vacation in Minneapolis, his former home. Mr. Frye reports film conditions in Montana discouraging. The extreme heat has caused a good percentage of Montana exhibitors to close their theaters for the summer, according to Mr. Frye.

Manager J. Earle Kemp has announced that his "Intollerance, No. 1," road show would open at St. Cloud, Minn., Sept. 2. T. A. Burke will be at the helm of this venture.

Manager Ralph Bradford, of the Goldwyn exchange, has arranged for a special showing of "Baby Mine" for exhibitors at the New Garrick theater, Minneapolis, Tuesday morning, August 7, at 10 o'clock Mr. Bradford has also received a print of "Fighing Odds" and will display this for the benefit of exhibitors shortly.

United Theater Equipment to Open Local Office.

Minneapolis, Minn.—It has been announced that the United Theater Equipment Corporation is soon to open a local Office. George A. Rodgers is slated to manage the new firm's local offices. The exact location for the new equipment company's headquarters has not been decided upon as yet.

Portland, Ore., Gets New Censor Board

Mayor Aims at More Representative Censorship—Former Secretary Remains—Three Members of the Old Body Are Reappointed as Viewers.

By Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theater, Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—The first move in years toward giving Portland exhibitors a fairer deal in municipal censorship was taken August 2, when Mayor Baker selected a new censor board to take the place of H. R. Albee's board, which resigned when Mayor Albee vacated his office. The new board is composed of J. Fred Larsen, Mrs. H. L. Vorse, Charles W. Meigham, W. P. Keady, Millie R. Trumbull, N. W. Pierong, Mrs. Henry Metzger, Rev. Oswald Taylor and Mrs. G. J. Frankel. Mr. Larsen, Mrs. Vorse and Rev. Taylor were members of the old board and are considered by the film fraternity to have been very fair in their decisions while they were members of that body. Mrs. Millie R. Trumbull is a local representative of the National Board of Review. C. W. Meigham is manager of the People's Amusement company and president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon, and N. W. Pierong is manager of the Strand theater.

The present secretary of the censor board is retained in office. Anticipating that there might be a change in the secretary's office, there were several applicants for this position who were disappointed by Mayor Baker's announcement of his policy with reference to this office.

In selecting the new censor board, the mayor consulted both exhibitors and exchange men. As stated in an interview with the mayor, reported in these columns when he first came into office, he says he intends to give the moving picture industry in Portland the fair deal to which it is entitled and at the same time safeguard the city against pictures which should not be shown.

Holds Trade Showing of "Honor System."

Portland, Ore.—Albert Eden, manager of the Fox Seattle office, held a trade showing August 3, at the Majestic theater, exhibiting "The Honor System." Mr. Eden arranged for a trade showing of this and other features simultaneously at three cities, Portland, Spokane and Seattle, personally supervising the Portland showing.

Mr. Eden has recently completed a trip through southern Oregon and reports that the Percy-Moran company is having splendid success with their new theater, the Rialto, at Medford.

F. W. Talbot Goes to Alaska.

Portland, Ore.—F. W. Talbot, who has been in the employ of Universal for some time, has gone to Alaska as special representative. He has with him "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," "Hell Morgan's Girl" and "Even As You and I," which he will play on percentage in the Alaska territory. He expects to be gone about three months and the town farthest north he will visit will be Fairbanks.

Sam Bernstein Sells Out.

Portland, Ore.—Sam Bernstein has sold the Gem theater in South Portland to F. P. Wittenberg, who now controls the Grant. The Gem and Grant are competing show houses and there has been much rivalry between them. Mr. Bernstein is seeking another location and it is expected he will not be out of the picture business for long.

Works Out a Regular Road Trip Scheaule

G. E. Jackson, of Portland Mutual Office, Will Travel His Territory at Regular Intervals—An Interesting Discussion of the Advantages.

PORTLAND, ORE.—George E. Jackson, travelling representative for Mutual, has worked out a schedule for his road trips which he plans to follow to the letter. It has been the custom with nearly all travelling film men in this territory to make trips at irreglar times as the business seems to warrant, and it has also been the custom of office managers to jump their road men off their regular schedule to suit their convenience. The result has been that no exhibitor knows exactly when a road man is going to call.

As explained by Mr. Jackson, the advantages to a permanently located film exchange of maintaining a regular schedule for its road men are many. For example, an exhibitor might hold off doing business with one of the many state rights men that wander through the country until he knew what the salesman for his favorite film company had to offer if he could be sure that the regular salesman would be around on time. Then again, exhibitors who only run their theaters at night might be on the lookout for a salesman if they knew he was due, thereby saving him the trouble of laying over in a town until evening when the show opens, as is often the case.

Mr. Jackson contends that there are many instances where the manager could himself go to a town to straighten out a tangle or solicit business, and do it more economically to the company than the usual custom of jumping road men out of their schedule.

Portland, Ore.—Jack Hovick, Jensen & Von Herberg publicity man, has assumed charge of the advertising at the Liberty since the return of G. F. Fullerton to Seattle. Mr. Hovick was in charge of the publicity at the Coliseum at Seattle before coming to Portland.

Mutual Local Office Makes Changes.

Portland, Ore.—The employees of the local office of the Mutual Film are having another shake-up and several new faces will be seen there soon. Fred Simonton resigned as manager July 28, and his successor had not been appointed at the time of this writing. Oscar Hanson, booker, is breaking in a new man on his job. George E. Jackson, travelling representative, and N. S. Dobbs, cashier, are temporarily in charge of the office. A. S. Kirkpatrick, from the Chicago Mutual executive office, is due in Portland about August 10 for a sales conference.

The new man who is now booking under Mr. Hanson's direction is F. Hamburger, former floor manager for Meier & Frank company, Portland's largest department store, which position he left to enter the film game.

Seattle Exchanges Annoyed by the Strike

With No Expressmen Working They Long for Better Organized Methods of Parcels Post Deliveries—Think It Would Pay Uncle Sam.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—Seattle's experience with the express driver's strike, which has now lasted three weeks, has caused the exchange managers of the city to cast about for a means of transportation of film which is not subject to moods and fancies. They have tried parcel post, but find it too slow, being subject to routine. If the postal department at Washington would institute a quick and efficient method of handling films it could divert into its own coffers millions of dollars that are today being paid to express companies—when their drivers are not working.

In each film center a parcel post wagon for delivering film exclusively might make three trips a day to the various exchanges, delivering and collecting. If, insead of taking the outgoing reels back to the post office, this wagon should take them immediately to the terminal station, where they could be put upon the first train to their destination, the delay would be avoided. Such a service might pick up trade from other lines of business.

Another objection which exchange men raise to the present system of parcel post is that transportation must be prepaid, while exhibitors are required by exchanges to pay the charges both ways. The post office might use the postage-due stamps on all outgoing films and collect from the exhibitor at the other end, as is done with first-class mail.

The average price paid an express company to transport a film to an exhibitor and back again to the exchange is seventy cents. There are twenty-five exchanges in Seattle, doing, of course, unequal volumes of business; but, considering the amount of business done by each, $250,000 per year is a conservative estimate of the amount paid to express companies for the transportation of film alone. This does not include the thousands of pounds of paper shipped from the home office of an exchange or producing organization to the various branches and then sent out again to the exhibitors.

Seattle's Industries Filmed for Exhibition.

Seattle, Wash.—At the Manufacturers' Exhibition, to be held in Seattle August 13-19, motion pictures of the various industries in the city and the vicinity will be shown by H. Sussman of the Peerless Film service. After the exhibition the pictures will be sent all over the Northwest.

Exchange Notes in Seattle.

Seattle, Wash.—H. H. Hurn, manager of the Seattle Triangle office, has just returned from a few days' visit to Salt Lake City. W. W. Hines, general sales manager of the Triangle Distributing corporation, called a meeting in that city of the branch managers from San Francisco, Los Angeles, Salt Lake and Seattle. Each manager reported excellent business, according to Mr. Hurn.

W. A. Simon of the Pallas Features was a visitor in Seattle last week.

L. J. Schlaifer of the L. J. Schlaifer Attractions has returned from a month's trip to Montana; and one of his partners, Melvin G. Winstock, took a quick trip to Butte last week.

A. W. Eden, Seattle Fox manager, has returned from New York, and W. A. Mead, who has had charge of the office during Mr. Eden's absence, will leave immediately for Montana.

J. S. Nelson, formerly road representative of Mutual out of Spokane, is now in charge of the booking department at the Seattle Metro office.

Visitors on Seattle's Film Row.

Seattle, Wash.—J. F. Goss, manager of the Orpheum theater, Ogden, Utah, spent several days in Seattle on his way home from New York and other large amusement centers. Other visitors on film row were: W. G. Ripley, Bijou, Aberdeen; H. T. Moore, Colonial, Tacoma; Carl McKee, Orpheum, Everett; J. D. Farrel, Colonial, Ellensburg; H. W. Woodin, operator, Apollo, Tacoma; W. E. Bowman, Rex, Olympia; O. L. Lee, Granite, Granite Falls.

IN TORONTO, ONTARIO.

Toronto, Ont.—Billy Allen has left Mutual's Montreal office to become a K-E-S-E roadman out of Toronto.

George Nicholas, manager of the Strand theater, Montreal, has returned to his post after a serious sickness.

Abe Fischer, formerly Montreal manager for the United Photoplays, Limited, has become sales manager for the Independent Film and Theater Supply Company at Montreal. Mr. Fischer is one of the best-known film men in Eastern Canada.

Vincent McCabe, formerly in the insurance business in North Bay, Ontario, has been visiting the Toronto Pathe office preparatory to taking charge of the Winnipeg Pathe branch.

Vancouver Operators Plead for More Wages

Meeting Held to Discuss Matter Shows Division of Opinion Among Exhibitors as to Possibilities—"Shorty" Speaks at Length.

By Charles Thomson, 645 Burrard St., Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—In consequence of the great increase in the cost of living, due to the war, the moving picture operators of Vancouver have made a request for an increase of pay. Men who have been receiving twenty dollars per week are asking for twenty-five, and the others in similar proportion. To thrash the matter out with the exhibitors a general meeting was called at which every union member and most of the local exhibitors were present.

W. P. DeWees of the Rex theater was in favor of granting the increase. He expressed the opinion that a good operator was well worth the sum asked, and as far as he was concerned he was prepared to pay twenty-five dollars whether it became the regular union rate or not. Other exhibitors, however, while admitting that the high cost of living should be met as far as possible with increased remuneration, said that they had to contend with the fact that, while the price of almost every commodity had jumped fully fifty per cent., the charge of admission to theaters still remained the same, and it was going to be difficult to pay increased salaries out of decreased revenues.

Hector Quagliotti made the suggestion that the matter be held over until the beginning of the fall season, when with better returns coming in, the exhibitors would be more ready to grant the increase. At this point the proceedings took an unexpected turn. An operator popularly known as "Shorty" took the floor and commenced to outline the union side of the argument. He delivered an oration that was as much a surprise to his comrades as it was to the exhibitors. Carried away by the force of his own eloquence, he forgot time and space and even his hearers. It was a great speech, no doubt, but never under any circumstances will the orator be described as "Shorty" again. Such a name is a gross libel. When he finally took his seat in the small hours of the morning, those who were still awake resolved to follow the suggestion to hold the whole matter over until the fall. A resolution was made to that effect, seconded by the snores of a sleeping exhibitor, and carried unanimously to an accompaniment of yawns. Then the proceedings terminated.

Marian Swayne Signs Contract With Dominion Film.

Vancouver, B. C.—Marian Swayne, co-star with Derwent Hall Caine in "The Deemster," has signed a contract with the Dominion Film Corporation. Miss Swayne is expected to arrive in Vancouver in the very near future, and together with other performers not yet announced, will commence work on the first production of this new organization. It is not the intention to wait until the studios are finally completed before actual operations begin. The finishing touches will be put on while the acting companies are at work.

Orpheum's Summer of Films Closes.

Vancouver, B. C.—The management of the Orpheum announces that its season of pictures will close in a few weeks to make ready for the forthcoming season of vaudeville. For the past two months this theater has been doing a wonderful business under the management of Con Jones, who has been donating the net profits to the Retured Soldiers' Club. Although Mr. Jones' entry into the motion picture field naturally aroused the ire of regular exhibitors, at the same time it must be admitted that from the point of view of the public he has certainly catered for them with a lavish hand. Practically every picture he has exhibited has been a "super-feature" of ten or twelve reels. These have included "Joan the Woman," "The Whip," "The Ne'er-Do-Well," "The Deemster" and "The Eyes of the World." Mr. Jones is now announcing a Mary Pickford week, during which the captivating Mary will be seen in a different production every day. The following are the plays in which she will appear: "Rags," "Fanchion the Cricket," "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," "Madame Butterfly," "Hulda from Holland" and 'Poor Little Peppino." This will be the first time such a thing has been attempted in this city.

Spokane News Letter.

By S. Clark Patchin, E. 1811 11th Ave., Spokane, Wash.

Canadian Sergeant Wells Gives Stirring Lecture.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Official Canadian war pictures shown at the Auditorium theater during the week of July 29 to Aug. 4, inclusive, together with a lecture by Sergeant F. F. "Doc" Wells, a returned soldier who is minus his left arm and was in prison in Germany, aided recruiting in Spokane and attracted much interest. Sergeant Wells gave some vivid illustrations of scenes he went through and told how he was bayoneted through the arm and side, the bayonet puncturing the lung, after he had fallen wounded, with three machine gun bullets and several pieces of shrapnel in him, before St. Julien. He feigned insanity to get exchanged as a prisoner of war. The pictures show big guns in action, a Zeppelin falling while bombarding London, having been brought down by an English aviator, and scenes in France and Belgium. The pictures were shown here under the auspices of the Canadian Club.

Ralph Ruffner Shows Off His New Organ.

Spokane, Wash.—Manager Ralph Ruffner gave a midnight organ recital to a few invited guests at the Liberty theater. The canvases that had been hiding the niches on each side of the big screen were lifted and the new additions to the Wurlitzer, Hope Jones unit orchestra were revealed to the visitors. A new harp effect has been added, which is known as the chrysoglott, and contains 49 notes. Searchlights were thrown over the theater to show how the janitor is able to see even a pin or a more minute particle in the darkest corner of the theater. The party was taken into the organ loft, and Mr. Ruffner played the instrument while they were there, to give them an idea of the volume of sound produced by a few touches of the keys. Oriental as well as other music was played for the benefit of the guests.

Spokane, Wash.—William E. MacClymont assumed the duties as director of music at the Clemmer July 29. Before coming West he had the post as musical director and organ soloist in the Vitagraph theater, New York City.

Spokane, Wash.—J. W. Allendar, manager of the Lyric theater, Spokane, has arranged to run Mary Pickford in "The Pride of the Clan" in Spokane August 7 to 9. He drew large audiences when he presented Clara Kimball Young in "The Common Law" July 31 to August 3.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Mid West Photo Play Sues Kansas Board

Brings Mandamus Proceedings to Force Censors to Approve of "The Easiest Way"—Asks $8,500 Damages for Rejection of the Picture.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, KAN.—The Kansas board of review is again being asked to show cause why it should reject a picture that has been approved in many other states and endorsed by many authorities on morals.

The Mid-West Photoplay corporation brought mandamus proceedings August 3 in the Wyandotte County District Court to compel the board to approve "The Easiest Way" and to pay the company $8,500 for its rejection of the picture.

"The Easiest Way" was examined by the board on July 2, and rejected. The company has sought to secure another review, but has been unsuccessful. It has offered to make specific changes and eliminations, and has urged on the board that with such eliminations there could not possibly be any objections. But there has been no response from the board in an order for another showing.

The picture must not be shown in Kansas, whatever eliminations are made, is the board's attitude. It is reported that the board does not approve the subject matter nor the title, the story, and the way it is handled. There is so much the matter with it that no fixing can make it acceptable.

The Mid-West Film corporation insists that the picture teaches a moral lesson and is proper in every respect.

It is recalled that the play, while on the stage, was given in Kansas City, Mo., at a leading theater, was largely attended and widely discussed, besides being given long articles in the newspapers. At that time many people came across the state line to see it, since Kansas City, Kansas, did not have a theater in which it could be played.

J. I. Dodson to Have Charge of Butterfly Features.

Kansas City, Mo.—J. Irwin Dodson, formerly manager of the Standard Film corporation at St. Louis, Mo., will have charge of the Butterfly features for the Universal Film and Supply company here. He will take his new position August 12. He has many friends in the territory, as he was formerly Missouri representative of the Universal previous to his work with the Standard.

C. A. Jones Will Now Cover Missouri.

Kansas City, Mo.—C. A. (Red) Jones, southern Kansas representative of the Universal Film and Supply company, has been transferred to the Missouri territory of that company. Mr. Jones has been making his headquarters and home in Hutchinson, Kan., and will move his family to Kansas City immediately. He will take charge of his new territory in the near future. His successor has not yet been appointed.

S. S. Schwartz Presented With Token.

S. S. Schwartz of the Kansas City Mid-West Photoplay corporation was presented with a gold-barrel Waterman fountain pen by the Kansas City force of that company. Mr. Schwartz left August 4 for Des Moines, Ia., where he will be in charge of the new shipping office established by that company in Des Moines. The new office will give a direct service to all exhibitors in Iowa and Nebraska. This will be effective August 6.

Standard Film to Distribute Christie Comedies

Kansas City, Mo.—The Standard Film corporation will distribute the Christie single-reel comedies on and after August 20. Beginning August 20 one of these comedies will be released each week. These pictures feature such stars as Billy Rhodes, Margaret Gibson and Harry Ham. L. D. (Pep) Balsley, manager of the Kansas City office, is an enthusiastic booster of comedies, and it is right in his line to boost comedies, as he had considerable experience with the Billy West King Bee comedies lately.

F. R. Martin Transferred to Kansas City.

Kansas City, Mo.—F. R. Martin, who has been traveling out of the Des Moines office of the Metro, has been transferred from that office to the Kansas City office of the company. He will travel in a Missouri and Kansas territory. Mr. Martin is old in the Metro service.

Quality Gets More Films.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Quality Film Service has taken over the Fine Arts features that have in the past been handled by the Unicorn. They have also taken over the serial, "The Crimson Stain Mystery," from Metro. This serial will be released September 1.

New Theaters and Changes in Kansas.

Stafford, Kan.—F. A. Hirsch has leased the Mystic motion picture theater to Rae Peacock, the lease to go into effect September 1.

Kingman, Kan.—A. R. Talbert has purchased the Star theater from C. E. Daney. Mr. Talbert has been operating his theater, the Orpheum, up to this time, but he now intends to close it and confine his efforts to the Star.

Fredonia, Kan.—The White Way theater has recently installed a Simplex motion picture machine.

Plainville, Kan.—Harry Keefer has bought out his former partner's interest in the Palace theater, Salina, Kan., and is planning some new improvements. One addition he intends to make immediately is a pipe organ.

Iola, Kan.—W. W. Weldon, manager of the Grand theater, has recently completed extensive improvements in the building. The additions include a private office, a ladies' rest room and a large space for the storage of baby carriages. The ventilating system has been improved.

Junction City, Kan.—The contract has been awarded for the foundation of the new Columbia theater at Tenth and Washington streets.

El Dorado, Kan.—Charles Parton has purchased the interest of his partner, E. D. Seaman, in the Royal theater. The building will be remodeled.

Junction City, Kan.—The Fogel Construction company of Kansas City has been awarded the contract for a new theater building for the Columbia Amusement and Theater company, of which M. M. B. Shamberg is the owner.

Among Exhibitors Through Missouri.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Warwick theater here has been sold to E. W. Werner and L. C. Walker by D. O. Rose.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Cozy theater here has been reopened under the management of S. Mayer, who is a new man for this theater.

Gallatin, Mo.—L. C. Bauer of the Isis theater has been negotiating for the sale of his theater here.

Greenfield, Mo.—Orville I. Engleman has purchased the Bijou theater.

Louisiana, Mo.—The Eagle theater, which has been closed for repairs, has opened under the management of Col Clarence Buell.

Theater Notes Here and There.

Cherokee, Ia.—John Williams has purchased the Happy Hour theater building.

Lynnville, Ia.—Arthur Mitchell's theater is nearing completion.

Storm Lake, Ia.—Edward Roberts has leased the Princess theater from Henry Dlugosch. J. I. Russell, proprietor of the Empire theater, will commence the remodeling of his theater at once.

Miami, Okla.—W. B. Smucker has let the contract for the erection of a theater building to L. R. Johnston, to cost $30,000.

Anaconda, Mont.—Improvements to cost $100,000 are being made on the Broadway theater.

Exchange Notes.

Kansas City, Mo.—Frank Kehring, traveling representative for the Goldwyn office here, has returned from a trip through Iowa and Nebraska. He brought back a good volume of business, which includes contracts from the Rialto theater at Lincoln, Neb.; the new Strand at Hastings, Neb.; the Plaza at Sioux City, Iowa; the Garden theater at Des Moines, Iowa, and the Strand at Omaha Neb.

G. E. Akers of the Kansas City Feature Film company has gone to St. Louis, Mo., from which place he will make an extended trip over the territory.

J. E. Storey, manager of the K-E-S-E service, left August 6 for Grand Island, Neb., to attend the convention of the Nebraska State Exhibitors' League.

"The Lone Wolf" has arrived at the office of the Mid-West and has successfully passed the Kansas State Board of Review and the Kansas City censorship board. The company is now preparing plans incidental to its release.

Des Moines Eager to See "Little American"

Artcraft Picture Makes Record Hit and Fills Garden Theater Many Times—Free Show Given to Soldiers—Advertising Used Abundantly.

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

DES MOINES, IA.—The Garden theater put "The Little American," with Mary Pickford, over big the last four days of last week, even running the big Artcraft over the next Sunday. Every performance was packed, even the first shows, beginning at eleven o'clock in the morning, were full houses, and at night the crowds were immense. On Saturday the opening time was advanced to ten o'clock to accommodate the people and the house was full at eleven-fifteen.

With the theater decorated in flags, pictures of Mary Pickford and American eagles, and everybody in the city talking about the picture because of the big advance advertising, it can be said that "The Little American" took better than any picture ever shown in the city. The Evening Tribune, the newspaper that carries the largest space to the motion pictures, made a feature story out of the review and gave the picture all kinds of free publicity. John J. Shipley, the publicity man for Blank, advertised the picture as absolutely anti-German, and made much of the Funkhouser trouble in Chicago.

When the military men of the city wanted to lease the Garden for an afternoon so that the boys in khaki might view the picture, A. H. Blank rented the Coliseum, put up a screen, donated a machine and an operator, and loaned the film for a three o'clock showing on Saturday afternoon. Everyone is more than enthusiastic over the picture.

Mary Pickford's popularity had been fast on the wane in Des Moines and the Garden people believe that this picture will do much toward bringing her value up again. Not because she is any more wonderful in this, but because the picture is so splendid that she will naturally be associated with the memory of "The Little American."

AN ORDER OF THE COURT (An Episode of THE FURTHER ADVENTURES OF STINGAREE Two Parts). The cast: Stingaree (True Boardman); Howie (Paul C. Hurst); Ray Duncan (Tom Walsh); Kate Duncan (Edythe Sterling); Mother Maloney (Mrs. Hattie Williams); Bill Clamp (Hal Clements). Directed by Paul C. Hurst.

In the town of Topanga, Australia, Ray Duncan is imprisoned on the charge of murdering John Bates, a miner. Ray tells his lawyer the story of his arrest. After leaving home to take up a position which his sister, Kate, had obtained for him, he lost his way and came upon a stream near which he found a miner lying dead, his hands still clutching a bag of gold. Found by the miner's side by a trooper of the mounted police, Ray was arrested and imprisoned for murder.

On the day before Ray's trial, Kate is the witness of an accident near her home. Bill Clamp, a tramp, falls down a ravine and is fatally injured. Before dying he signs a confession to the effect that he is the murderer of John Bates. He did not intend to kill the man but only to steal his money. He shows Kate a newspaper clipping to the effect that the trial of Ray Duncan for the murder of John Bates is to take place the following day at Topanga. Kate realizes the plight of her brother. Topanga is a hundred miles away, but she determines to carry the confession to the court and save her brother's life.

Stingaree, the gentleman bushranger, and his partner, Howie, are fleeing from the pursuing troopers, when Howie's horse is shot from under him. They escape, however, and the next day they set out to find Howie another horse. They see a figure on horseback riding madly toward them. This person is thrown from the horse when Stingaree and Howie jump out of the bushes in the path. Stingaree is astounded to find that the rider is a woman. It is Kate, on her way to Topanga to save her brother.

Stingaree carries Kate to the shack of his old friend, Mother Maloney. There Kate tells him her story, and pleads with him to take her place and ride to Topanga with the confession. Stingareo realizes the danger this will incur for him but, unable to refuse a woman, he and Howie mount, and ride to Topanga.

They arrive just as the judge is about to read the jury's verdict of guilty. They hold up the court and force the judge to read the confession. The troopers are about to take the bushrangers when the judge stops them, saying, "Stingaree has saved the life of an innocent man. He has earned the protection of this court'"

Ray is freed and reunited to Kate, and in gratitude to the bushrangers they send Kate's favorite horse to replace the one lost by Howie in the flight from the troopers.

AT THE SIGN OF THE KANGAROO (An Episode of THE FURTHER ADVENTURES OF STINGAREE—Two Parts).—The cast: Stingaree (True Boardman); Howie (Paul C. Hurst); Sergeant Keene (Barney Furey); Sergeant Fitzroy (Ray Hanford); Marion Fitzroy (Edythe Sterling). Directed by Paul C. Hurst.

Sergeant Keene of the New South Wales Mounted Police is chagrined at his failures to capture Stingaree and Howie, but finds a new hope in the report of one of his spies, who has located the camp of the outlaws. Sergeant Fitzroy and his wife arrive at the troopers' barracks, and Keene is shocked to learn that Fitzroy has been sent to replace him on account of his failure to capture Stingaree. He asks for another day, as his spy has located the bushrangers' camp, but Fitzroy refuses, and assumes command.

The following morning, when Fitzroy sets out to capture Stingaree, his wife, Marion, starts on a morning ride to explore the country. Lost in the bush country, she chances to see Stingaree and Howie. Adopting a ruse to detain them in the hope that her husband and the troopers will arrive, she leaves her horse and stumbles toward them in a pretended exhausted condition. She tells them a fictitious story of how she lost her horse, and Stingaree offers to take her to the Kangaroo Hotel, where she can obtain a fresh horse. When Marion apparently faints from exhaustion, Stingaree leaves her in Howie's care and leaves for the Kangaroo Hotel himself to get a horse for her.

Arriving at the hotel, Stingaree is forced to hide under blankets under a table when ex-Sergeant Keene arrives upon the scene. In order to be able to escape, Stingaree contrives to put some sleeping potion in Keene's drink, and when the former sergeant falls asleep the bushranger rides off with his horse.

Arriving at the camp with Keene's horse for Marion, Stingaree sees huge flames leaping skyward in the distance. It is the Kangaroo Hotel, and the fire is the result of a discarded lighted match by a half-drunken patron. Stingaree remembers that he has locked Keene in a room, and no one knows he is there. He rides back to the hotel to save the ex-sergeant's life. Howie rides after him, and Marion meets her husband and the troopers. She tells them that the bushrangers have gone to the Kangaroo Hotel, and they ride off in pursuit.

They reach the hotel just after Stingaree has saved Keene from the fire, and Keene, in gratitude, has hid the bushrangers in the stable to elude the troopers. Seeing the troopers and Marion, Stingaree recognizes the girl he had taken pity on and tried to help. Howie has the laugh on the gentleman bushranger, and when the troopers have ridden away the proprietor of the Kangaroo sends the bushrangers a couple of horses to ride back to their haunts in the bush country.

RAY COMEDY.

A BATH TUB MARRIAGE (One Reel).—Casey advertises his small country hotel for sale, and Mrs. Lotta Cush, a rich widow, stops there with a view to buying it. Casey, who [illegible] the dashing widow. A fat man decides to take a bath. He gets stuck in the only bath tub of the hotel, and Casey, after trying to get him out with pick and shovel, greases his shoulders, puts a life preserver on him, and drags him out. The widow asks for something to eat, and Casey starts out with an axe to kill the cow for beef, but changes his mind. She orders coffee, but there is something wrong with it. Casey pulls an old collar out of the coffee pot, and says that the coffee is all right now. The widow takes a bath and gets stuck in the tub. She cries for help, and Casey, who is showing a parson to his room, tells her through the door that he will help her out if she will marry him. She assents, and Casey has the parson marry them at once.

SPARKLE COMEDY.

THOSE TERRIBLE TELEGRAMS (One Reel).—Tom Winters and May Summers marry and remove to the city. They are joined later by Jerry Summers, who marries Miss June Fall a year later. On the wedding day Jerry joyfully telegraphs his mother that she has a new daughter. On the same day, Tom telegraphs his mother, announcing the arrival of a new baby. The telegrams arrive together, and are misdirected by the local operator. Mrs Winter receives Mrs. Summer's telegram, and vice versa. The horrified mothers at once set out for the city, where, after an amusing scene, everything is explained.

FALCON FEATURES.

THE MAINSPRING (Four Parts).—The cast: Ned Gillett (Henry King); Frances Hardor (Ethel Pepprell); J. J. O'Rourke (Charles Blaisdell); Bellamy Hardor (J. Cullin Landis); Peggy Manson (Arma Jacobsen); "Bellows" Jones (Bert Ensminger). Directed by Henry King.

Ned Gillett's father, head of a big trust company, kills himself when it is discovered that he has embezzled, and Ned, convinced that Frances Hardor, his sweetheart, would not marry the son of an embezzler, goes West without telling her. In the mountains he rescues Larence, an old miner, from Bellows Jones, a desperado. In revenge, Jones dislodges the old man's shack from its perch on the hillside. Ned escapes, but the miner is fatally injured. He tells Ned of the Mainspring, a mine in Calvert City which he had abandoned, intending to return when he could work it. On Ned's arrival in Calvert City he finds Jones selling abandoned mines to Easterners. Jones has a sucker in tow who proves to be the brother of his old sweetheart, Frances, who is with him. She meets Ned, but ignores him, and embarrassed at his presence, returns home.

Ned files his claim, and saves young Hardor from being swindled by Jones. They then become partners in the "Mainspring," which turns out well, but they have trouble with the miners, instigated by Jones. Frances and Peggy, Hardor's sweetheart, visit the mine and are caught in a fire started by tools of Jones. They are all rescued by Ned. The miners attack the office building. Ned is wounded during the fight, but Jones is killed. After his recovery Ned awakens to find Frances at his side. Mutual explanations heal the old estrangement, and both are happy.

JAXON COMEDY.

GETTING THE COIN (One Reel).—Pokes and Jabs are forcibly ejected from the Family Vaudeville theater after failing to make good, and find they have between them just eight cents. Jabs discovers a paid-up accident insurance policy in one of his pockets, and in order to collect tries in vain to get injured. Finally Pokes takes a chance. Jabs beats him with a coupling pin, swathes him in bandages, and carries him to the insurance office. He learns that the policy expired two weeks before. Pokes is badly damaged, and has to be taken to a hospital.

Prof. Bakem has a theory that by the application of intense heat inanimate bodies may be restored to life. He yearns for a subject to prove it. When the professor remarks that the man who secures him a subject shall claim the hand of his daughter, Percy starts on a hunt. He meets Jabs in front of the hospital, a bargain is struck, and they return to the ward for Pokes, but Pokes refuses to be baked. After a chase, Pokes jumps through a window and lands in the professor's baking pan, and is shoved into the oven. The heat is applied, but the theory is a failure, and the oven explodes. Pokes, after an aerial flight, lands beside Jabs, who is counting the coin Percy has paid him. They divide the money.

THE BAGGAGE MAN (One Reel).—Pokes and Jabs get work on a railroad, Jabs as chief baggage smasher and Pokes as assistant. Pokes does all the work, while Jabs gets the tips and honors. A messenger from a bank with a million dollars in his grip arrives at the station, followed by Lanky Luke, a crook, and also by a female detective to see that he is not molested. The detective's and messenger's grips get mixed, and when the detective goes to the waiting room to doll up she finds she has the wrong grip.

Meanwhile the crook, having knocked out the messenger and taken possession of the grip which he thinks contains the million, is waiting for the train, when the detective accosts him. After a fight, the detective is overpowered and placed on the railroad track. The train is approaching when Jabs, seeing the form on the track, summons Pokes to the rescue.

Pokes returns to the station with the fainting female in his arms and is met by Jabs, who relieves him of his burden and carries her into the station where he receives the hearty congratulations and applause of the crowd. Pokes gets down behind the ticket rail and murmurs: "What's the use of being a hero, anyway?"

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

DISCOUNTERS OF MONEY (Two Parts).—The cast: Howard Pilkins (Carleton King); Alice Von Der Ruysling (Catherine Charleton). Directed by Martin Justice.

Young Howard Pilkins has been left plenty of money. He believes that the U. S. Mint dispensed more relief to human ills than did the doctor or the preacher. In Alice Von Der Ruysling, whom he courted, he collided with an opposite belief. Since her earliest American ancestor bought half of Manhattan Island from the Indians for a pair of portieres and a quart of beads the blood of the family changed from red to a cool blue, and about all that was left of the property was pride, a crumbly brick house, and the first key ever made to Gramercy Park. So when Howard proposed one evening it sounded to her like a proposition to pay off the family debt.

But there was a dent in Alice's heart that had never grown over. It was made by a little toy kitten with candy inside, and the kitten had come from the infant hands of little Howard Pilkins. This was the only present that Howard had ever persuaded her to accept from him, but as she was only five at the time she did not blame herself.

Howard went away from her that evening with the melancholy promise tolling in his ears that on the morrow he would get his present back. But with inspired boldness he had claimed for himself another chance. Touching the Jacque in her hair he had said: "If at any time you feel you would like to reconsider your answer, send me a rose like that."

His heavy steps led him to that Mecca of the down-and-out—Madison Square. There, waiting for morning, sat a boy and girl whom no callous New Yorker would have suspected of being a Clayton of Roanoke County, Virginia, and a Bedford of Bedford County. These notable facts Howard discovered, and he sought to relieve the poverty of the pair unsuccessfully. Clayton might be penniless in a strange city, but he was a Southern gentleman, and money could not be accepted from a stranger, nor could a Cavalier and a Lady of Virginia occupy the same hotel before they were married.

By this time some trickles of white light were percolating through Howard's hair. He saw all at once that two and two made four. If he could do nothing more for these Babes in the Wood he would offer the young lady the hospitality of Miss Alice Von Der Ruysling's home. There was more magic in the plan than Howard dared to dream, for after Eva Bedford was comfortably housed under Alice's roof, and Howard and Marcus were back in Madison Square, and Howard opened the package Alice had handed him, he found the little toy kitten, and the rose.

Famous Exploit of Commodore Perry.—Mississippi Bay, Japan, named by Commodore Perry, who, in 1854, anchored there and opened negotiations which later opened all Japanese ports of commerce.

Cloth Weavers of Java.—The Javanese have developed a high degree of civilization through commercial contact with India. Cloth weaving. How the Javanese tie their turbans.

The Home of Thomas Jefferson.—Monticello, home of Thomas Jefferson, Charlottesville, Va. Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence and was third president of the United States.

A Japanese Seaweed Harvest.—Seaweeds grow especially in warm waters. Many species abound in gelatin, some are used as food for animals, some are burned for the chemical salts contained in the ashes.

The Picturesque Gulf of Castellammare.—Its climate, mineral springs and sea-baths attract many visitors. Road along Naples Bay. Sorrento, superbly situated on a precipitous bluff. Primitive methods of irrigation. Sunset on the Bay of Naples.

A MAN, A GIRL and A LION (Two Parts).—The cast: Jan Kail, a young farmer (Mr. Thomas Santschi); Gene Davis, who loves Jan (Miss Kathlyn Williams); John Davis, her father (Mr. Lafayette McKee); James Otto, the circus owner's son (Mr. Charles Clary). Written by James Oliver Curwood. Directed by F. J. Grandin.

James Otto, son of a circus owner, is about to enter the African jungle on a lion hunting expedition. John Davis and his daughter, Gene, conclude to go along. Otto, a scoundrel, makes love to Gene despite the fact that he knows she is betrothed to Jan Kail. Otto wins her love, and her act results in Jan breaking their engagement. However, he tells her he will come to her aid whenever necessary.

A lion is captured and taken out of the jungle by the expedition. When Gene's father refuses to permit the girl to leave the country and become a "circus queen" the girl steals away from home. On the outgoing ship she learns the true character of Otto. Months later, Gene has become a circus performer. Otto continually annoys her. A dwarf with the circus, who pities the girl and longs for revenge on Otto for many wrongs, overhears the man plotting against the girl. The dwarf goes to the cage of the captive lion, brought to the circus by Otto, and saws the steel bars of the animal's prison. The dwarf then writes a note to Otto asking him to be at the lion's cage at 12 o'clock that night, and signs Gene's name to the note.

The lion becomes aroused as the man approaches. Gene cannot sleep, and seeks the African lion whom she has learned to consider a friend. Otto spies the girl and seizes her in his arms. The lion, raging at the struggle, breaks his bonds and slays Otto. The circus men are about to execute the lion when Gene intervenes, and her appeal for the custody of the beast is so thrilling that she is permitted to take the animal. Together they embark for South Africa

One day when Jan Kail is thinking of Gene he is transfixed when she stands before him! With a sob of joy Gene rushes into the arms of the young farmer. And what of the lion? He is freed from his cage and, with a bound, is again in the beloved jungle where he again will reign as King of Beasts.

HER PERILOUS RIDE (One Reel).—The cast: Lieutenant Borden (Thomas Santschi); Doris McGraw (Bessie Eyton); James McGraw (Frank Clark). Written by Melvin Busch. Directed by Colin Campbell.

Coincident with the arrival of Lieutenant Borden at Fort Congo to suppress the lawlessness of the renegade, Jahalli, James McGraw and wife, together with their daughter, Doris, leave for McGraw's ostrich farm. Jahalli has long since vowed revenge on the McGraws for fancied wrongs, and, with his horde of savages, he descends upon the McGraw dwelling.

Laying siege to the home, the desperate bandit is opposed by McGraw and his few retainers. Doris McGraw resolves to escape and go for assistance. The horses have been stolen, and as a last resort she mounts an ostrich and rides the fleet bird to Fort Congo. There she finds Lieutenant Borden and his soldiers. She leads the rescuers to the McGraw dwelling. They arrive in time, for the savages have set fire to the home and death seems near to the occupants. Lieutenant Borden never forgets the bravery of Doris, and later, when peace has come again, he asks her for her heart and hand. Willingly she gives him her love.

THE LOVE OF MADGE O'MARA (One Reel).—The cast: Reginald Van Dorn (Wheeler Oakman); His Father (Gordon Sackville); Joe (Frank Clark); Madge O'Mara (Bessie Eyton); Her Mother (Mabel Van Buren); Mrs. Van Dorn (Lillian Hayward). Scenario written by Lanier Bartlett. Produced by Colin Campbell.

Madge O'Mara supports her invalid mother by working as a cashier in a cheap chophouse on the waterfront. Madge is ambitious and when Reginald Van Dorn crosses her path she loses her heart and head.

Portuguese Joe, who runs the chop house, becomes jealous of the boyish millionaire. Reginald and Madge resolve to be married. The wedding date is set, but through the interference of Van Dorn's parents and Portuguese Joe, all that Madge receives is a farewell note from her lover. She resolves to be revenged.

Three years later, unhappily married, Reginald Van Dorn meets with an accident and Madge O'Mara, now a nurse, attends him. She holds in her hand the power of his life or his death. As she is about to let the man die in revenge for her wrongs, the professional honor as a nurse and her old love for him returns and she saves him.

NESTOR.

MOVE OVER (Rel. Week of Aug. 20).—The cast: Eddie Cliquot (Eddie Lyons); Lee Young (Lee Moran); Edith Pill (Edith Roberts); Doctor Feeble (Fred Gamble); Doctor Slice (Harry Nolan). Produced by Roy Clements.

When Lee visits Eddie in the hospital he becomes smitten with the nurses. He tells Eddie to move over to one side of the bed so that he can lie beside him. Eddie refuses. Then he tries to change places with Eddie. Eddie is willing, for he is dead anxious to see the baseball game that afternoon. The plan is spoiled when the two are seen about to change raiment, and Lee is thrown out of the place, while Eddie is put back to bed. After several attempts on the part of Eddie to get out and Lee to get in, Lee finally does get in, and the change is made.

Meanwhile a new nurse and an outside doctor came on duty. The nurse is ugly, and gets her instructions mixed as well, mistaking Lee for a patient that is to have a leg cut off. Eddie is seen buying a ticket for the ball game by Edith, the pretty head nurse, who is out for an airing, and she and Gamble, who also happens along, give chase.

They capture Eddie and take him back to the hospital just in time to prevent the operation that is about to take place, thus saving Lee's leg and getting Eddie back to bed without his seeing the game that caused most of the trouble.

VICTOR.

A FIVE-FOOT RULER (Two Parts—Rel. Week of Aug. 20). The cast: Beau Brummel (Carter De Haven); Frank Bartlett (Frank MacQuarrie); Argo (Flora Parker De Haven); Mr. Brummel (Ed. Clark); Soneralla (Jack Tornek). Scenario by Maie Havey. Produced by Carter De Haven.

Beau Brummel at college, with wealth at his command, always manages to have his parties of the best. Frank Bartlett, from the same town, is supposedly one of the "goody" boys. But, under the skin, he is as naughty as the rest of them. One day while out for a ride he meets Argo, a South American girl who, rebelling against the restraint placed upon her by the faculty, decides that she will go for a walk. Frank invites Argo for a boat ride. She accepts with misgivings.

He takes her to a private room in a cafe and there tries to make love to her; her screams reach the ear of Brummel, who is entertaining a party, and he goes to her rescue, followed by his crowd. As a result of it all, Beau Brummel is reported to his wealthy and stern parent, who informs him that he does not care to hear more of him until he has made a man of himself. Argo is sent home.

Beau Brummel ships as a stowaway on a South American bound ship, but is discovered by the crew and suffers many indignities. At last he lands in the same city in which Argo and her people live and happens to rescue her and her father when they are being attacked by one of the uprising mobs. She recognizes him as her former rescuer and tells her father about him. Beau Brummel is installed as prime minister.

His father, meantime, knows nothing of this, and with a party of friends is making a tour of South America. Great is his surprise when he meets his son in the high position, and the two fathers, becoming acquainted, become fast friends, while son and daughter follow in the way of youth—and romance.

POWERS.

COLONEL PEPPER'S MOBILIZED FARM (Cartoon Comedy—Rel. Week of Aug. 20).—A peek into the colonel's ammunition factory is rewarded by the sight of a patriotic party, headed by a bunch of healthily laying hens who help their country by their efforts, even dispatching the "hen-shells" into an adjacent building, there to remain until they grow "ripe." A sight of Colonel Pepper's signal station is seen, and his signals, which mean "Get ready for target practice," are shown, the hens all obeying. The mobilized farm, run by Colonel Pepper, exploits all of the animals in training, their patriotic efforts being largely rewarded in the end.

THE HOME LIFE OF THE SPIDER (On Same Reel as Foregoing).—An amazing picture story of the mysteries of small wild life, features this offering, with views of the water spider from the time of the carrying of her egg cocoon to the going out into the world of her whole family of three hundred brave! Into the mysteries of the cocoon, the opening of which reveals two hundred eggs, the devoted mother, the Leonard spider, exhausted unto death, with spinning her egg cocoon, another opening—the wonderful nursery, the features of the nursery of the Water Spider and of many varieties, including the Wolf Spider, are viewed by the spectator.

BEHIND THE MAP (Rel. Week Aug. 20).—The cast: Bill (William Franey); May (Lillian Peacock); Jed (Eddie Baker); Teacher (Zasu Pitts); Mayor (Milburn Moranti). Scenario by Tom Gibson. Produced by Wm. Beaudine.

The woman teacher at Hokum Center could not handle her unruly pupils. When the Mayor of the town is attracted by the commotion he fires her on the spot and sends at once to the city for a man teacher.

Bill, the new teacher, arrives and receives a warm reception by the pupils. His arm becomes so tired spanking them that next day he opens school with a fangled spanking machine installed. This does the business and the pupils decide that the new teacher had best be let alone.

May, the belle of the village, is fond of Jed, who considers himself too big to go to school. When he learns that the new teacher is paying court to his May, he decides to go. Bill at first thinks that Jed is a little fellow, because he is slumped away down in the seat, but is amazed to discover Jed's size. He realizes that if Jed continues to be a pupil his reign as master of the school will soon come to an end. For just such an emergency he has provided a bottle of "Courage," which he keeps behind the map, and of this he imbibes at frequent intervals. The Mayor pays the school a visit to see how his new "man" teacher is getting along and finds everything fine.

MRS. MADAM MANAGER (Rel. Week of Aug. 20).—The cast: Mrs. Madam Manager (Gale Henry); Her Husband (Milton Sims); Tessie (Lillian Peacock); Manager (Charles Haeffli). Scenario by Tom Gibson. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Pruneville had real cause to be proud of its opera house. Its manageress, doesn't she do everything in it from taking tickets to filling in on the stage in an emergency? But when the Imperial Burlesquers came to town, one of its members, Tessie, attracts the husband of the manageress.

That night finds the manageress a very busy woman—selling and taking tickets and acting as usher. Curtain time finds her behind the scenes to lend a hand while her husband leads the orchestra—not, however, without a lot of "spiritual" assistance. All goes well until the end of the first act when the husband, becoming very thirsty, borrows some money from one of the audience and sneaks off to the family entrance next door. He encounters Tessie, who is not averse to a little refreshment.

When it comes time for the second act to open there is neither an orchestra leader nor dance specialist. The manageress perforce must take the dancer's place—which she [illegible] the absence of her husband.

But when the said husband sneaks back to his place in the pit with powder marks of a pair of woman's arms about his neck—and—at the same time Tessie hurries to her place on the stage and the wife sees the powder on her arms—it is too much for her and a fight starts in which everybody becomes mixed. Finally triumphant, she turns her attentions to her battered husband and taking him fondly in her arms assures him that she knows she stopped Tessie just in time to keep her from losing him.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE GRAY GHOST (Episode Nine, "The Pearl Necklace"—Two Parts—Rel. Week of Aug. 20).—The cast: Hildreth (Emory Johnson); Morn Light (Priscilla Dean); "Gray Ghost" (Harry Carter); Jean Marco (Eddie Polo); The Maid (Gypsy Hart); Jerry Tryon (Lew Short); Arabin (Howard Crampton); Fred Olmstead (J. Morris Foster).

As the ninth chapter of "The Gray Ghost" opens, Arabian, the jeweler, pulls the trigger of the revolver, but the Gray Ghost only smiles. The butler in the hall winked at the maid as Arabian furiously pulled the trigger. Then he pulled the bullets which should have been in the revolver out of his pocket. An instant later the Gray Ghost's gang is in the house searching for the two million dollar Carlow necklace.

In the meantime Jean Marco, Hildreth's secretary, arrives on the borrowed horse at headquarters. There he informs Jerry Tryon that the Gray Ghost is at Arabin's house, and tells him to take all his men there if he wants to save the necklace. Ten able-bodied plain clothes men bundle into an automobile.

But when Tryon finally knocks at the door the Gray Ghost has discovered the necklace and is about to depart.

"Ten guns are covering you, Mr. Arabin," says the Gray Ghost, "and if you forget for one instant that I am your physician, and am attending you for a bad cold, you will never need another doctor."

Then they let Tryon in, and it is not until the Gray Ghost has started to leave that Arabin tips Tryon off.

"Halt there," says Tryon. Two shots ring out, both from Tryon's gun. One gets the Gray Ghost fair in the chest, the other barely misses the butler.

A furious struggle ensues. All seems over for the band when Williams, Arabin's former secretary, makes a break, with Jean Marco close at his heels.

"Well, they didn't get the right necklace, anyway," said Arabin. "This one is an imitation."

Meanwhile in the house on the island of mystery Fred Olmstead suddenly sees an apparition of the Gray Ghost pointing directly at him. He falls senseless. The telephone rings. "Everything is fixed in the steel chamber for Hildreth," is the message. Hildreth turns white, but neither he nor Morn Light understand the meaning.

Suddenly the double floor starts to go down again, and Hildreth and Morn Light get on and go down to the second floor, where they wander about in the passages below until the ghostly apparition of their common enemy is suddenly seen at the end of the passageway. They make a quick turn, and as they step into a room the floor goes down from under them.

and they drop into a steel-walled room into which water is pouring.

Thus we leave them with Jean Marco rowing toward the island, and Jerry Tryon writing his report to the chief of police.

BISON.

SQUARING IT (Three Parts—Rel. Week of Aug. 20).—The cast: Neal (Neal Hart); John Moore (Fred Church); His Wife (Janet Eastman); Joe Ramon (Joe Rickson); Sheriff (Bud Osborne). Scenario by George Hively. Produced by Geo. Marshall.

Several men in the Red Dog saloon knew the outlaw's face. One man ran for the sheriff, while the other ran to the back door to prevent the outlaw's escape that way. Neal saw the sheriff. When the man at the rear door put his head through, Neal's gat got him, and he made his getaway with the sheriff's posse in hot pursuit. He just escaped by plunging over a cliff, but he had been wounded.

Mary Moore, who occupied a little homestead with her husband, took him in, and although she suspected that he was an outlaw, she ministered to his wounds.

The couple were very poor, and their larder had been replenished by Joe Ramon, a gambler who had conceived a guilty admiration for Mary. This same Joe Ramon was a demon. He promised to give John Moore a job, and told him to meet him at the saloon next day.

While John was away Joe came to the cabin, and Mary's attempt to conceal Neal convinced him that the outlaw was in the back room. Neal realized that his position there would endanger the Moores, and after Joe went away he made a break for the open, but was overtaken by Joe, and was promised his liberty if he would rob a stage coach the following day. The alternative was the exposure of his being shielded by the Moores. Joe then sent John Moore to the rendezvous agreed upon.

When the posse, which had been warned, overtook Neal and John, Neal turned to John.

"You make a break over there in that direction, and I'll get out the best I can."

He threw the money in the brush and rode directly in the opposite direction. His furious riding and a manoeuver outdistanced the posse, and Neal had a free road to Cactus Center, where he demanded to know where Joe Ramon was.

"Oh, he went up to the Moore cabin half an hour ago," said one of the men in the saloon.

Another furious ride, and Neal dashes open the door just in time to see Mary desperately struggling. Without a moment's hesitation Neal sends the worthless gambler into eternity. But the posse is on his heels.

"Quick," he said to John Moore, who had just stepped into the cabin. "You hold me up and turn me over to the police. It's the only way."

And with a smile on his face, and tears in the eyes of John and Mary Moore, Neal surrenders himself to the sheriff. He had squared it.

STAR FEATURETTE.

THE GOLDEN HEART (Two Parts—Rel. Week of Aug. 20).—The cast: Fenstein (Walter Belasco); Mary (Zoe Rae); Widow Forarty (Maud Emory); The Man (Seymour Hastings); His Wife (Gertrude Aster); John Gleeton (Seymour Zeliff). Scenario by Karl R. Coolidge. Produced by George Sargent.

Embittered against the world by the death of his wife and his own child, Harry Fenstein had devoted his entire energy to a pawnshop. The only bright spot in his life was Mary, the little daughter of the widow Forarty. Mary's mother died suddenly, and when a wealthy lawyer and his wife had offered to adopt her, he very zealously concealed little Mary in his shop.

Mary helps Fenstein tend the shop, and while she is alone one day a crook dashes in and hides under the counter. Mary starts to give an alarm, but the crook silences her and finally in pity she shields him from the cop. After the danger is over Mary says to the crook, "It's all safe now. Don't you want to buy a new suit of clothes? Yours looks pretty old." John Gleeton laughs from relief, and for two dollars buys himself a new suit of clothes.

The lawyer and his wife return.

"Have you seen anything of the little girl who used to live next door?"

"No, I never saw her," said Fenstein, but at that moment little Mary comes out from the rear room. The lawyer and his wife have letters of adoption, and his one ray of sunshine goes out of his life. But little Mary cannot forget her old home, though every effort is made for her happiness. One day she jumps into the back of a wagon and when she comes to Fenstein's store she jumps out, and the old man nearly passes away for very joy.

A day it lasted. Then came Mary's new parents, and though it was like giving up his life, Fenstein realized that the education and home that they could provide would be so much superior to his that, with sorrow in his heart, but a smile on his lips, he says good-bye to little Mary.

REEL LIFE NO. 69 (Aug. 23).—The alligator of America's southlands is doing his bit in this great war by helping to reduce the high cost of living. The method is pictured in this issue of "Reel Life." "Hunting Alligators for Their Skins" is the title of this section which shows how the rise in the price of leather is turning manufacturers to the alligator as an additional source of supply. Alligator meat has long been a delicacy relished by negroes, and the pictures show the alligator being skinned to get at the meat. The most exciting pictures show how the alligators are caught, the larger ones with ropes looped upon sticks, and the smaller ones by hand.

At this season of the year Coney Island often entertains three or four hundred thousand inhabitants of Greater New York upon some particularly hot day. Just what the attractions are for the multitude are shown in "Coney Island Thrills." Those who have never visited this famous resort will witness merry-makers hooting the chutes, riding the witching waves, and doing other stunts that appeal to their fancy because of the strange sensations induced.

From the Pacific Coast come pictures of a shipment of soy bean oil from Japan. The soy bean is now being introduced into the United States. It was formerly used only in the making of soap, but recently it has been found to have a high food value. A trainload of 240,000 gallons was valued at $300,000.

'Harvesting Potatoes" show the various methods used to gather this important crop. The reel concludes with an animated drawing founded upon a humorous picture in "Life."

CUB.

JERRY ON THE FARM (August 23).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Hank (George George); Father (Gordon McGregor); Daughter (Claire Alexander).

Jerry is a "movie" actor making pictures on a farm. Jerry spots the farmer's daughter and proceeds to flirt. Hank, while professing love for the farmer's daughter "falls" for the leading lady. She repels Hank. He becomes enraged when he sees Jerry making love to his girl. Hank's jealousy finds expression in a fast fist fight.

Hank is fired by the farmer, but Jerry promises him a job in a movie company provided he will drive him to town. Hank agrees, but insists that his girl elope with him. They leave for the city. Hank and the daughter take rooms in a tenement. Jerry calls on daughter during Hank's absence and she cries for food. Hank returns with sandwiches. Jerry hides under the table—a cough betrays him, and Hank opens fire with a big revolver.

Police are attracted by the shots and Hank is jailed, while Jerry offers his protection to the daughter. The whole action is just a few scenes of a picture in the making. The camera is rolled back, showing the director congratulating the cast for their good work

THE BARKER (Selig—Five Parts—Aug. 13).—The cast: Prof. Leo Fielding (Lew Fields); Floria Fielding (Amy Dennis); the Count DeGrasse (James Harris); Henri Fielding (A. Francis Lenz); Dulcine Fielding (Mabel Bardine), Wilfred Wells (Pat O'Malley). Written by Charles K. Harris. Directed by J. A. Richmond.

Professor Leo Fielding is enticed by his brother Henri to join a secret Anarchistic organization having designs on his great wealth. The evening Prof. Fielding is initiated the police raid the meeting and Prof. Fielding, his brother and Count DeGrasse, head of the organization, are arrested. As the brothers are awaiting sentence, Prof. Fielding exclaims: "My brother is innocent. I induced him to attend the meeting. He should be freed!" While Henri has not the courage to declare his own guilt, Prof. Fielding is ordered to leave the country within twenty-four hours. It means the separation of a doting father and his little daughter, whom he commits to the care of Henri.

Five years elapse and Prof. Fielding longs for his daughter. As teacher of languages he can earn but little. Not one dollar has his brother sent him. His wife, Dulcine, who wants full possession of the professor's wealth, has told her husband that Prof. Fielding died. Henri is confronted by Count DeGrasse, who escaped from prison. He says to Henri, "You need my silence, I need your money." Dulcine urges that the Count be given money and that he take Floria across the sea to her father, and if possible make away with her enroute. The Count is given gold and he embarks for America with Floria. Prof. Fielding is happy when he hears that Floria is on her way from Europe. But he later receives a telegram reading: "Floria fell overboard and drowned."

The years speed on and Madam Floria has become a star of a circus. She is, in reality, daughter of Prof. Fielding, the Count posing as her guardian. Both travel under an assumed name. The Count is almost always intoxicated, but the circus manager, Lemuel Salter, does not discharge the Count because he is infatuated with Floria and fears to lose his star attraction. Prof. Fielding, poverty-stricken, is forced to sell his beloved books. His plight is seen from across the hall by a musician who plays in the circus band. He and Prof. Fielding become friends and the musician secures a position for Prof. Fielding as "The Barker." The professor is introduced to his own daughter by the Count. Neither know their relationship. The Count fails to recognize the professor.

Wilfred Wells inherits the circus from his father. He discovers that while the show plays to capacity the receipts grow less, and joins the circus as stenographer to detect the crookedness of Salter. Wells and Prof. Fielding become friends. Wells loves Floria. One afternoon Salter finds Floria alone in her dressing tent and enters with the Count. The Count commands Floria to give her consent to marry Salter, but she refuses. A struggle ensues and Prof. Fielding, Humpy Jim Wilson, a circus attache, and Wilfred Wells come to the rescue. They learn that the young stranger is Wilfred Wells, owner of the show. Maddened by the loss of Floria and with the knowledge that his crookedness has been discovered, Salter resolves to cut the rope of the trapeze belonging to Floria and also the strands of the net into which she falls after her high dive from the trapeze.

It may be fate, but for the first time Count DeGrasse resolves to dive first into the net. The net breaks and the Count receives fatal injuries. Through the [illegible] of Humpy Jim Wilson, Salter is arrested. Count DeGrasse, dying, asks that Floria and Prof. Fielding be summoned. In his dying breath he tells the story of Floria, and the professor, realizing that the girl is his own daughter, takes her into his arms. Then comes the dinner. Prof. Rendezvous, the circus musician, and Prof. Fielding, the barker, nod their aged heads approvingly as they view Wilfred Wells and Floria Fielding seated together across the room. The old pals know that the young folks love each other and have plighted their troth.

OPEN PLACES (Essanay—Five Parts—Aug. 20).—The cast: [illegible] Calhoun (Jack Gardner); Mollie Andrews (Ruth King); Dan Clark (Carl Stockdale). Written and directed by W. S. Van Dyke.

Mollie Andrews is a little New England school teacher who goes out to Rawhide, Montana, to "teach the West" its manners. She is of romantic nature and the [illegible] habits of Dan Clark impress her deeply. She marries him. Clark is a bad man at heart. He treats Mollie brutally after the first blush of [illegible] kind, and escapes across the border to Canada.

The year that passes teaches Mollie some things about mankind she never knew before. [illegible] of the Royal Mounted Police, who occasionally called on her, as a real friend. But though their mutual regard for each other ripens finally into love, Mollie remains true to her husband. When he turns up again she exacts a promise from Calhoun, on the strength of his love for her, that he will not harm Clark until the latter strikes the first blow. The beast within Clark still runs amuck, however, and he attacks the policeman, unjustly accusing him of undue attentions to Mollie. A struggle ensues in which Clark falls dead. Thus Mollie is released from her marriage vows, and her future brightens with Calhoun awaiting her.

A TRIP TO CHINATOWN (Selig—Two Parts—Aug. 20).—The cast: I. Noah Heap ([illegible] Fables); Welland Strong (James Harris); The Princess (Amy Dennis); Homely Jane (Fanny Cohen); a Roman Gladiator (Frank Hamilton); Captain of the Guards (A. Francis Lenz). Written by Charles Hoyt. Directed by J. A. Richmond.

I. Noah Heap, after giving a number of the race track patrons some poor tips, is chased by the copper, Welland Strong, who is ever on his trail. Noah's attempts to panhandle the crowd are also thwarted by the ever watchful Strong, who seizes and throws him bodily into the street.

Noah wanders into a Chinese laundry and induces the owners to give him a smoke. He plants himself in the old man's bunk and after a couple of drags at the pipe he is off for a wonderful dream. He finds himself in a palace, surrounded by beautiful girls, and the Princess, who falls in love with him. The place is turned over to him and his every wish is granted. The Princess even orders the Captain of the Guards to provide him with a private slave.

When the slave arrives it is no other than the despised copper. He is treated to a series of abuses for the edification of Noah; being forced to battle with the gigantic gladiator; the court wrestlers, and finally is thrown to the lion. They all in turn fall easy prey to the cop, the lion being a cinch for him. At the sight of this the Princess turns her affection from Noah to Strong. Noah is chased by the guards, takes refuge beneath some skins, but is shaking so with fear that the guards easily find him, and while they are poking him with their spears he comes out of the dream to find that it is the old Chink poking him with the clothes stick and demanding his money for the smoke. Noah is clean as a bone and is thrown into the street again by the Chink and rolls into the waiting arms of the cop, and is once more marched off to jail.

THE KINGDOM OF HOPE (One of the "Do Children Count?" Series—Two Parts—Aug. 22).—The cast: Daisy Erling (Mary McAlister); Bobbie Erling (Ellis Paul); William Erling ([illegible]); His wife (Violet Craig).

The Erlings are the leaders of their town's "peace-at-any-price" propagandists. However, their small children, Daisy and Bobbie, are strong for war play. Recruiting officers, in order to frustrate the parents' plans, persuade the children to enlist as an honorary soldier and Red Cross nurse. The newspapers publish the story of the pacifists' children enlisting, and it is read during a big peace meeting.

hotly replies to her parents' scoldings with the [illegible] that she'd rather [illegible] than have to be conscripted. This puts the matter in a new light to the peace advocates, and there is a rush to the recruiting offices.

THE LADY OF THE PHOTOGRAPH (Edison—Five Parts—Aug. 27).—The cast: Ferdinand Latimer (Raymond McKee); John Brown (Royal Byron); Marjorie Van Dam (Shirley Mason); Cornelius Van Dam (William Calhoun); Mrs. Van Dam (Jane Harvey); Eric Latimer, Ferdy's cousin (Dudley Hill); Capt. Latimer, Ferdy's elder brother (Gerald Pring).

And because my younger son, Ferdinand, disregarding my wishes, has been leading a riotous life—gambling, drinking and otherwise dissipating—I bequeath him nothing—absolutely nothing." Thus reads the will of the late Lord Latimer. Ferdy, his younger brother, finds himself facing the world, penniless and burdened with debts. Ferdy's cousin, Eric Latimer, discovers a flaw in the will and offers to show Ferdy for a "consideration," but he refuses Eric's aid.

Marjorie Van Dam, daughter of an aristocratic American family, is visiting in Europe on an estate bordering the Latimer property. In an attempt to get a lily floating in a large fountain, she falls in. Ferdy, wandering in the gardens, [illegible] her out. Eric meets them and a rivalry starts. Marjorie returns to America, and Ferdy, clinging to the hope that he will make good, asks her to wait for him. Marjorie assures him that she will. Ferdy sails to America, but Fate is unkind to him.

Meanwhile, John Brown, who has just inherited millions, is unsuccessful in his many attempts to enter society, and turns his footsteps riverward, with a view of calming his mind. While at the river front, John Brown rescues Ferdy from drowning and takes him to his home. After he has heard Ferdy's story he makes a suggestion: "If you'll teach me all you know of etiquette and agree to impersonate an English lord so that I can get into society, I'll pay every cent you owe and then some besides. I want to marry a certain girl and you've got to help me." Ferdy accepts this office reluctantly.

Six months have passed. Ferdy, with full-grown Van Dyke beard, has become Lord Soho. Eric, John Brown and Lord Soho are now frequent visitors at the Van Dam home, all suitors of Marjorie's. She is true to her promise to Ferdy. Eric, meantime, has received word that he is soon to become Lord Latimer and master of the Latimer estates. Mrs. Van Dam, however, announces that she prefers to have Lord Soho as her son-in-law and when the ladies retire, he and Mr. Van Dam consult a copy of Burke's Peerage. They find that there is no such person as Lord Soho and determine to unmask him.

A large party is arranged at the Van Dam house. Van Dam and Eric expose Lord Soho in the midst of the throng. Ferdy bows, admits the fraud and goes from the room. Marjorie, guided by intuition, feels that Lord Soho is none other than Ferdy. But Brown leaves society in disgust and marries his stenographer.

Ferdy hurries to the home of Brown, changes his clothes and once more attempts to end it all. At the Van Dam home he leaves a note for Brown. Brown, not being there, Marjorie opens the note and learns that Lord Soho is really Ferdy and that he is about to drown himself. Marjorie hurries to John Brown's home and immediately two machines rush toward the river. Ferdy is caught just as he is about to end his life. Explanations follow and soon two happy couples are planning the future. Ferdy, now sole heir to the Latimer fortune, and Mrs. Van Dam glorying in upbraiding her husband and threatening drastic action when she gets her hands on Eric Latimer, his friend.

(On K-E-S-E Program)

THE CUSTOMARY TWO WEEK (Program No 6—Aug. 18). The cast: Harry Burnhart (Craig Ward); Carl Vibert (Herbert Evans); George Extell (Robert Ellis); "Pop" Grinnel (Joseph Burke); Muriel Clemm (Kathryn Adams); Mr. Wetterson (Arthur Dennis).

Harry Burnhart, who has inherited the "Eclipse Tool Company," thinks more of enjoying life than taking care of the business which is almost entirely managed by Carl Vibert, an honest employee, but a hard taskmaster. Vibert delights in discharging employees, as he imagines it is evidence of his own efficiency. He is not unjust or heartless, but he worships efficiency. George Extell believes himself indispensable as advertising manager of the concern. Muriel Clemm, his enamorata, is Vibert's stenographer, and Extell is jealous of Vibert. "Pop" Grinnell, the factory's oldest old employee, is given "the customary two weeks" by Vibert because he is no longer "live enough." Extell overhears Vibert "firing" the old man, takes it up with Burnhart, and has him reinstated. Vibert dislikes having Extell interfere with his rulings, and gives Extell the "customary two weeks" the following morning because he is late. Extell goes to Burnhart with his grievance, but receives no satisfaction. Extell is young, and immediately hits the trail for the West. As he leaves, Muriel gives him a letter which he is not to open until he is successful.

Extell, now in Chicago, has succeeded in connecting with a competitor of his former employer's—the South Trent Tool Company. He landed the job, not because of his unusual ability, but because of his personality and determination to tell the truth. A $2,000,000 war order is under way, and Extell is sent as representative of the South Trent Tool Company. Vibert, representing the Eclipse Tool Company, endeavors to secure the order by "knocking" his competitor's merchandise. When Extell is asked why the order should be placed with his firm he says his only reason is "the personality of the salesman." This truthful statement appeals to the president offering the large order, and Extell is given the preference. Extell immediately wires to Wetterson, his employer, saying: "I put it over." Extell receives a call from Burnhart, who offers him a position to take complete charge of his entire organization. Extell accepts on one condition: "$5,000 a year and unrestricted rights over the sales department." This is agreeable to Burnhart. Vibert now falls under Extell's control. Extell teases Vibert considerably, and under the strain Vibert says to Extell, "Why don't you do it? I can't stand this any longer." Extell then replies, "Mr. Vibert, you can have the customary two weeks." Vibert falls back in a chair, relieved at last, the tension gone. A revulsion of feeling comes over Extell, and crossing over to Vibert he gives him back his job. They are to start on a different basis. Extell has had his revenge. Both are changed men, and they work together as though they had never met before. Vibert realizes, however, that Extell is truly the bigger man. Extell hurries to Muriel, whom he credits with his success. He relates what has occurred, and Muriel sees that Extell is quite as big as she thought he would be. He is worthy of her love.

The time has come for the envelope to be opened, but Extell has forgotten it. Muriel says, "I wonder, George, if you ever opened that envelope?" It contains simple assurance of Muriel's undying love. Whether he succeeds or fails she is his. With a widening grin he remarks: "Well, I'll be hanged! All this hard work for nothing. Why, if I'd opened this envelope the day after I left here I'd have taken the first train back!" But Muriel roguishly answers: "If I hadn't known you wouldn't open it, I shouldn't have written it, should I?"

THE GRAND CANYON OF ARIZONA (One Program No. 6).—This picture presents the most sublime of earthly spectacles. Most of the views were made shortly after the heaviest fall of snow at the canyon in recent years. Clouds form in the canyon and give to the scene an ethereal aspect. Tourists are seen descending into the cayon, some on foot and others astride burros. Passing Hermit's Rest, the party descends through the Devil's Corkscrew, a dangerous and precipitous pass in the side of the mountain. In the canyon the party rests at the river, and then returns to the starting point by way of the Bright Angel Trail.

NATURE'S PERFECT THREAD SPINNER (On Program No. 6).—The eggs of the silkworm, called graine, are hatched out by artificial heat at the period when the mulberry leaves are ready for the feeding of the larvae. The moth of the silkworm lays about two hundred eggs. A view of the eggs hatching is shown. The silkworm moults about four times. When the caterpillars are mature they cease eating and ascend the brushwood branches or echelletes provided for them, in which they set about spinning their cocoons. They complete their cocoons in from three to four days, and in two or three days thereafter the cocoons are collected and the pupae killed to prevent further progress. Such cocoons as are selected for the production of the graine are freed from the external floss, and preserved at a temperature of 66 to 72 degree Fahrenheit. In about two weeks the moths appear.

THE STORY OF PLYMOUTH ROCK (On Program No. 6).—A picture reminiscent of Longfellow's poem, "The Courting of Miles Standish." Some three hundred years ago a poor handful of "Separatists" fled from England to Holland. After being betrayed by their shipmaster and almost annihiliated by soldiers they reached Leyden, Holland. Miles Standish, who joined them, told them that they had been promised religious liberty in America. Although at that time a voyage to America was a perilous enterprise, they resolutely set sail in the Mayflower. The ship wallowed through one storm after another until, after almost four months at sea, "an invincible army of twelve" was set ashore in the New World. After Standish selected a site the others were landed from the Mayflower. Among the first to land was a young student, John Alden. Shortly after landing the pilgrims made a treaty of peace with the Indian Chief Massosoit.

Miles Standish loved a young maiden, Priscilla. As told in Longfellow's poem, he asked John Alden to propose marriage for him. Alden went forward on the mission, but the maiden smiled and said, "Why don't you speak for yourself, John?" Alden told Standish of the result of his errand, and Standish accused him of betrayal. Soon, however, an arrow laid the dauntless captain low, and a messenger brought the news to Priscilla and Alden. "Pressing her close to his heart, as forever his own, he exclaimed, "Those whom the Lord hath united, let no man put asunder."

THE MAGIC OF SPRING (On Program No 6). A young man wanders into the park, and filled with the calling of spring steps on the grass and admires the flowers. But a cop scares him away. He throws himself down on a bench to rest, and slowly his heavy eyelids close.

Nature sleeps in sunlit peace, likewise does our bright young man.

Dreaming dreams of ancient Greece, with himself the young God Pan. With a vision of himself as Pan playing on the pipes, there comes to him a maiden of rare beauty. They romp about the open fields of old Greece, the maiden fleet of foot and ever elusive. Pan pursues the maid, and they seat themselves upon a rock and whisper delicious nothings to each other.

THE FOUR R'S (On Program No. 6).—At a modern American military school the old "three R's" of "readin, 'ritin and 'rithmetic" have been supplemented by a fourth—riding. This picture shows scenes of young America at the Culver Military Academy. The Culver cavalry troops starts on a two-day hike, and the boys, after getting their horses in shape, set forth. Interesting shots of them as they progress on their journey illustrating their orderly conduct, the lessons of self-reliance and courage bring out clearly the great lesson of "preparedness."

GOLDEN RULE KATE (Five Parts—Aug. 12).—The cast: "The Hen" (Mercedes Murphy) (Louise Glaum); Rev. Gavin McGregor (William Conklin); "Slick" Blaney (Jack Richardson); Live Sumner (Mildred Harris); "The Heller" (Jack Gilbert); "Nose-Paint Jonas" (J. P. Lockney); Mrs. McGregor (Gertrude Claire); Jim Preston (H. Milton Ross); "Vegas Kate" (Josephine Headley). Directed by Reginald Barker.

In Paradise, Nevada, Mercedes Murphy, known as "The Sage-Brush Hen," owned and operated a saloon and danceball called "The Red Light." Her word was law. At home the Hen was an entirely different character and lived with her younger sister, Olive. "Slick" Blaney, a sort of partner to the Hen, was interested in Olive, unknown to the Hen, who tried to keep Olive away from the rough element. Another character, "The Heller," also loved Olive.

A reform wave hit Paradise and a church was built near the saloon. The Rev. Gavin McGregor was sent for. Sunday came and the church music could be heard in the danceball. It had a telling effect on the Hen, bringing out her better nature, and Blaney, realizing that this would never do, ordered the danceball orchestra to strike up. The minister, hearing the noise, told his congregation that his mission was too close to the dancehall, and two miners in the church slipped out and bore the news to the Hen. At the Hen's instructions, Blaney entered the church and roped the minister, and after dragging him into the saloon, commanded him to drink at the point of a gun. The minister's open defiance gained the Hen's admiration, and she bade him go.

Later, the minister and his mother called at the Hen's house and asked her to attend the church. She did, and was so moved by the sermon that she ordered the danceball closed and barred married men from the saloon. It then developed that Olive had been betrayed and the Hen, thinking the minister to be the cause, determined to kill him. She rushed into the church while service was on, pistol in hand. Unnerved, the minister directed his sermon to her. She slipped the pistol back in its holster. The minister had won. Outside the church a shot rang out, "The Heller" had learned of Blaney's duplicity toward Olive and shot him dead. The Hen, realizing that she had wrongly accused the minister, ordered the saloon closed forever. She saw "The Heller" leaving with Olive and, turning to the minister, said, "Tomorrow I leave with the kid and Olive." "I need you here," the minister replied, and began pleading his love. She answered falteringly, "Some day."

THE FOOD GAMBLERS (Five Parts Aug. 5).—The cast: Henry Havens (Wilfred Lucas); June Justice (Elda Millar); Anthony Flynn, Inspector of Police (Mac Barnes); Samuel Sloane (Russell Simpson); "Dopy" Benny (Jack Snyder); The Italian (Eduard Ciannelli). Directed by Albert Parker.

June Justice is a special reporter on the New York Globe. A food riot takes place on the East Side and June is assigned by the city editor to get the story. She interviews storekeepers, jobbers, commission men and farmers, and concludes from the investigation that the middlemen are manipulating prices.

The food gamblers, headed by Henry Haven, himself a food commissioner, are met together in Haven's office, when one of their number comes in with a Globe containing the arraignment of price of manipulation written by June. Haven immediately calls up the Globe; says that he has a statement to make, and wants the Globe to send the reporter who wrote the food story up to his office. The city editor sends

June and she goes to Haven's office. When Haven sees her it is a case of love at first sight. He had planted a stenographer with the intention of bribing the Globe reporter, but when he sees June he hestitates. One of the gamblers comes forward, however, and attempts to bribe June. She spies the concealed stenographer. She tells them she will expose their whole rotten system. After she has gone out one of the men tells Haven the girl must be silenced.

Meanwhile, in a squalid room on the East Side a young Italian's baby is dying from lack of proper food. The man is employed in Haven's commission house. Goaded by his child's condition, the Italian steals fresh vegetables from the commission place and is caught by the watchman. He is brought before Haven and Haven orders him turned over to an officer. The Italian is sent up for thirty days, and when he returns the baby is dead, and his wife maddened by her loss and suffering. The Italian goes directly to Haven's office, gags the watchman, knocks Haven unconscious and drags his body to an ice box used for storage. He locks the unconscious Haven in the box, goes home, finds his wife is dead and hangs himself, first writing a note, stating that Haven's body is in the ice box.

The food gamblers, knowing that Haven would not consent to getting June out of the way, frame up a scheme whereby she is accused of selling dope and is put in jail. The city editor of the Globe is notified and bails her out. He realizes that the whole thing is the result of the food ring's fear of June and tells her so. June thinks of Haven and determines to find out how much he had to do with it. The editor and June go to Haven's office and are told that he has not been there for three days and has left no message.

Haven meanwhile has gone through a terrific ordeal. Face to face with starvation, he realizes what lack of food means. The note in the Italian's room is finally found and Haven is rescued, when about dead. He is taken to the hospital and there June finds him. He tells her that he will aid her in trying to put the food bill through, and go to Albany to do it. June is happy and forgets for the moment that she is out on bail. But Anthony Flynn, police commissioner and intimate friend of Haven, is around. He asks her if she is the June Justice charged with selling dope. She says she is. Haven is horrified; he recognizes the work of the food gamblers and begs Flynn to extricate June. Flynn consents, runs the case to the ground, and June is freed.

When Haven recovers sufficiently to return to his office, his former colleagues accuse him of being a traitor. Haven tells them that he fully intends to go to Albany; that he is going personally to give affidavit of the rottenness of his former methods. A few days later Haven is shot by a yegg as he is leaving his office with June. The final scene is set in the Assembly Chamber at the Capitol. The members of the food ring are there to fight the bill—June Justice is at the press table. As Sloane, one of the members of the ring, gets up to argue against the bill, Haven is wheeled in in a chair. He accuses the food ring of attempting to murder him because he refused longer to be a party to their dishonest methods and proves his charges. The food gamblers are handcuffed and led out. June, standing beside Haven's chair, hears his impassioned plea for legislation to wipe out the food gambling; hears his confession of his own former part in it, and his pledge to do all in his power to make restitution.

ART DRAMAS, INC.

EYE OF ENVY (Horsley—Five Parts—July 30).—Ambition, a young man, wishes to seek fortune and adventure in the world. Possessing an admirable personality, he is unsatisfied with the happiness he has attained and covets worldly achievements. His envy becomes centered upon Avarice, a crafty old libertine who is wealthy and powerful—but despised. Avarice is married to Innocence, but he is a husband in name only. She became his wife to save her father from the ruin of overwhelming debt.

Ambition and Innocence meet and a friendship springs up. Avarice views this with alarm. The wanderings of Ambition take him to a wishing tree, where, if one raps, the Maker of Dreams will appear and grant all wishes. Ambition summons the dream maker and utters the wish that he might have the wealth and power of Avarice to win Innocence.

Avarice also yearns for the love of his wife and he, too, visits the wishing tree. He believes if he could take the form and face of Ambition he might stir love in the heart of Innocence. He makes his wish accordingly.

The dream maker brings Ambition and Avarice together, and offers to grant each wish providing each man will give up his soul to the other and at the death of either the remaining one will give up his body. The two subscribe to the pact. The exchange of souls [illegible]

Ambition now possesses all Avarice's characteristics. He is transformed for the worse. Avarice, on the other hand, is softened, and with Ambition's soul within him wins the love of Innocence. Ambition realizes his error, denounces the other and is thrust from the home of Avarice. He is killed while raging through the forest. A lightning bolt crushes him to earth. The pact to surrender the body at the death of the other is recalled. Avarice thus finds himself on the brink of the grave when all he craved is within his hands.

Then comes the stirring climax, which leads up to the interesting ending of the photoplay.

THE SHOW-DOWN (Five Parts—Aug. 13).—The cast: Lydia Benson (Myrtle Gonzalez); John Benson (George Hernandez); Oliver North (Arthur Hoyt); Robert Curtis (George Chesebro); Langdon Crane (Edward Cecil); Parkes [illegible]

The personal attributes of John Benson, Oliver North, Langdon Crane and Robert Curtis were noticeable to all their friends and acquaintances. Benson was a rich, hard-headed business man. Oliver North was known as a philanthopist. Crane was the author of a book that reflected the author's personal experiences in adventure and deeds of daring. Robert Curtis was a young society "blood."

Lydia Benson, a plain and sensible girl, with wealth at her command, had no desire to idle her time away at society's behest. She knew well the measure she placed on Crane's mock heroism; on North's self-advertising charities; on Curtis' idleness and wasting—but best of all she knew that her father was the soul of gentleness masked behind a gruff and falsely brusque exterior. She was glad when her father proposed a business trip to the Orient and asked her to go along.

Mongolian nations were showing surface indications of unrest that meant much to American commerce; and it was appealing to Robert Curtis in the thought of breaking the monotony of his ill-considered ease. Langdon Crane announced that he was going to the Orient to gather "local color" for a successor to "Back to the Primitive." Philanthropist North declared that the heathen needed his attention—and so all these different types of humanity took passage, by merest chance, on the same steamship.

German submarines had not been reported in the Pacific, hence it was a profound surprise when a torpedo hit the steamship. Fate brought the Bensons, North, Crane, Curtis and a couple of sailors together in the same lifeboat. Cast upon an island in the mid-Pacific the true natures of the various characters came to the surface. North, the philanthropist, developed a streak of selfishness that required force to thwart, else the others might have perished. The hero-author proved a coward. Benson showed his dominant spirit by taking command of the situation and in Robert Curtis the adventure roused a sense of usefulness.

The castaways lived on tropical fruits and shellfish, built a camp and shelters and then drew lots to decide who should explore the island. While Lydia held the "straws" that should decide, Crane and North trembled with fear; gruff old Benson grabbed his straw with fearless resolution—and Curtis, having drawn, broke his own straw in half to make sure it would be the shortest. The die being cast, Curtis started to explore—but Lydia followed him, attracted by something more than admiration.

DURAND OF THE BAD LANDS (Five Parts —Aug. 11).—The cast: Dick Durand (Dustin Farnum); Molly Gore (Winifred Kingston); Clem Alison (Tom Mix); May Bond (Babe Cressman); "Kingdom-Come" Knapp (Lee Morris); Inez (Amy Jerome); Jimmy (Frankie Lee); Story by Mabielle Heikes Justice. Directed by Richard Stanton.

Dick Durand, an engaging young outlaw, has robbed so many stage coaches that his name has come to be associated, however unjustly, with every misdeed in the zone in which he operates. His stamping ground is generally along the line between the United States and Mexico. After he gets the gold, flight is always easy because the boundary is so close by.

While out on a plundering expedition one day, Dick happens upon a band of marauding Indians attacking a group of settlers. Dick opens fire on the Redskins, but before he forces them to flee they kill all except three children and Durand himself.

Dick places the kiddies in the care of Molly Gore, to whom he has lost his heart. Molly does not suspect that the kindly horseman is the outlaw on whose head a price has been put; and whom sheriff and posse are seeking because he is blamed for the massacre.

Although he knows the sheriff is in hot pursuit, Dick stops in his ride for the border to rescue a girl who has been kidnapped by Indians. After he returns her to her father, the sheriff takes Durand prisoner, and Dick is found guilty of murdering the settlers. It then transpires that the girl Dick has saved is the Governor's daughter. The executive pardons Durand because he believes in him—and because Molly Gore does—an instant before conclusive evidence is brought that Dick was innocent of any guilt in the massacre.

WORLD PICTURES.

THE LITTLE DUCHESS (Five Parts—Aug. 20).—The cast: Geraldine Carmichael (Madge Evans); Evelyn Carmichael (Pinna Nesbit); Earl Carinmore (Jack Drumier); Jim Dawson (James Davis); Jim Snyder (Patrick Foy); Sophia Dawson (Maxine Elliott Hicks); Billy (Sheridan Tansey). Directed by Harley Knoles.

Geraldine Alicia Elizabeth Endelbury Carmichael is the seven-year-old daughter of Evelyn Carmichael, an English widow. To friends she is just Jerry—for short. In the tenement live also the Dawsons, Grandma, Jim and his daughter, Sophia, who is Jerry's age. Jerry mails a letter addressed to Lord Carmichael in England for her mother. Exacting a promise from Jerry to take care of certain papers, Evelyn, fatigued by her losing fight against death, passes away.

Jerry hides the papers behind a loose board in the room. Jim Dawson steals the rings from the dead woman's hands. When none of the neighbors want Jerry, she is taken to an orphanage, where she makes a friend of Billy, another unfortunate.

In England, the crabbed old Lord Carmichael lives in solitary grandeur. He reads a letter from his daughter-in-law, Evelyn, in which she says his son is dead and she is dying, beseeching him to provide a rightful place in his household for his grandchild—and rightful heir. Lord Carmichael turns the letter over to his attorney, Thomas Bradford. He explains that for thirty years no woman has been permitted to cross his threshold because his wife disappeared on the same day that his older brother was missed, and he suspected them of infidelity. Bradford sails for America to bring Lord Carmichael's heir.

Jerry and Billy run away from the orphanage to see a circus parade, and persuade Bill Snyder, owner, to take them in. Ransacking the Carmichael room, Jim Dawson finds the papers which Jerry secreted. Among them is Jerry's birth certificate, which shows that she is related to Lord Carmichael of Carinmore Castle, England. Jim rehearses Sophia, his daughter, in the art of being a lady, preparatory to presenting her to Lord Carmichael as his grandchild and heiress.

Bradford traces Jerry to the circus, from which he takes her to Carinmore Castle. Lord Carmichael becomes furious. She is the first female to enter the threshold in thirty years. He had expected to find his heir a boy. Jerry loses no time in telling him that he is a nasty, cross old thing, but she wins over the hearts of the servants. Lord Carmichael consents to allow Jerry to remain, but she must wear boy's attire. On her grandfather's sixty-ninth birthday, Jerry gives a surprise party for him. Touched by her sweet thoughtfulness, he is won over in spite of himself. Among his gifts he finds a great doll, which Jerry purchased because she could find no dolls in the house, and a skipping rope.

Jim Dawson arrives at Carinmore Castle, presenting Sophia as the grandchild of Carmichael, and heiress to Carinmore Castle. To substantiate his claim, he shows Evelyn's jewels and the papers he had found. While Bradford is questioning him, Lord Carinmore interviews Sophia. Frightened by his manner, Sophia forgets her oft-rehearsed part, and bungles Dawson's plans. When Jerry greets the newcomer as Sophia, Lord Carmichael is convinced that Dawson is an impostor. Through the intervention of Jerry the Dawsons are permitted to leave.

Jerry has been drilling the servants of the house into an army. Deciding to fit up a watchtower, she has them take her to an unused tower of the Castle. It is a difficult matter to open the rusty lock, but when that is accomplished, and they enter the room, they find two skeletons. Examining the room, Lord Carmichael finds a faded sheet of paper under a pile of dust near one of the skeletons. He deciphers a message written by his wife thirty years ago, in which she says that his brother and she had been exploring the tower when the lock sprung to, and trapped them. Unable to make anybody hear them, they were both dying.

Lord Carmichael realizes that his wife and his brother had been innocent of all wrong. As reparation for his months and years of bitterness, Lord Carmichael permits Jerry to assume girl's garments again. Decked out in her new finery, Jerry proposes that she can now be Lord Carmichael's little mother.

THE PLANTER (Ten Parts—August).—Osgood and Short are promoters floating stock in a fraudulent tropical rubber plantation among the residents of a New England community. Their best prospect is Elizabeth Mann, a wealthy widow, who is kept from investing only by the influence of her rather effeminate son. To get him out of the way the promoters offer to send him to the tropics to manage the plantation. David, having been brought to a realization of his worthlessness through a curt refusal of marriage, accepts, and is soon landed in the tropics. He meets Senora Morales, a Mexican slave dealer and her daughter, Consuela. They are just departing to deliver a number of slaves to Ludwig Hertzer, the most feared and hated planter on the Isthmus. David gets an insight into Hertzer's peculiar character, and the horror and brutality of the rubber slavery system.

Next morning Senora Morales and Consuela arrive with the slaves, among them a big Yaqui chief, to whom Hertzer's half-breed daughter is attracted. Going on to his own plantation, David finds that it is little more than a rubbish heap and sends a cable to his mother not to invest, but this is intercepted by Hertzer for his personal gain.

David's housekeeper, Andrea, is a wild, sensuous daughter of the tropics, and endeavors to appropriate David to herself. David turns his attentions to reforming conditions and building up the plantation, especially after he hears that his mother has invested in the company. Crazed by the unspeakable brutality to which they are subjected on Hertzer's plantation, the Yaqui chief and his sister escape. In the flight the sister is killed by Hertzer and the following morning the Yaqui is captured, taken back and terribly flogged.

Andrea's fight to win David reaches a climax when, after he had ridden by a stream and had seen her bathing, he yields to the lure of her dancing and love-making that night. They are interrupted by cries of yellow fever and, as David goes to attend the sick man, the slaves escape, and Andrea, after looting the hut, follows them. After writing a letter to Morales for more slaves, David is himself stricken with the fever.

Morales being away from home, Consuela brings the slaves. Hertzer accompanies her, and nurses him back to life. While nursing the sick man, Hertzer schemes to have David removed by Osgood and Short so that he may manage the plantation and divide the spoils with the promoters. Consuela assists David in his reforms by opening a school for slave children. David asks her to marry him. She agrees, providing his mother consents. At that moment Hertzer brings a letter authorizing him to take charge of the plantation, and, as David speeds back to New England to gain his rights, Consuela stays on to try to protect his interests. Hertzer urges Consuela to marry him. In answer to her query as to why he has been so brutal, he explains that because years ago native bandits killed his wife and stole his baby, and this had so warped him that he thought [illegible]

In New England David secures control of the plantation, while his mother writes to Consuela urging her marriage with David. Patricia obtains the letter and shows it to Hertzer, who is so enraged that he locks her up in a hut and, after a night of drinking, starts to wreak his vengeance on her. Drunk, he wanders into the jungle, where he falls unconscious.

Returning home, Morales finds that Consuela is at Hertzer's, and starts out for her, with David, who has just returned. Morales is killed. That evening Hertzer goes to the hut and attacks Consuela. She is saved by the arrival of her slave. Patricia pleads with Hertzer to give up his plan, but Hertzer locks her up in another hut and goes back to Consuela. He now plans to mate her with a slave. The slave is brought in, but Consuela is again saved by an uprising of the slaves. A battle ensues between them and Hertzer and the overseers. Hertzer is left helpless on the ground by the Yaqui chief, who, to avenge himself for the [illegible] of his sister carries off Hertzer's half-breed daughter, Patricia. The slaves burn the plantation and Hertzer, a physical wreck, plans his worst revenge. If he cannot have Consuela he determines that no one else shall, and crawling to the hut, he sets fire to it, to burn both [illegible]

David, nearing the plantation, sees the flames and rescues Consuela. Carrying her out, he adds mental anguish to Hertzer's death by telling him that Consuela is his own daughter. He revives Consuela and all ends happily.

THE JURY OF FATE (Rolfe—Five Parts—Aug. 6).—The cast: Jeanne Labordie and Jacques Labordie (Mabel Taliaferro); Donald Duncan (William Sherwood); Francois Leblanc (Frank Fisher Bennett); Ching (Charles Fang); Henri Labordie (Albert Tavernier); Louis Hebert (Bradley Barker); Duval Hebert (H. F. Webber). Directed by Tod Browning.

Henri Labordie's wife dies after giving birth to twin children, Jacques and Jeanne. Before he takes the children to the Canadian woods to live he makes an agreement with his friend, Duval Hebert, that when Jeanne is old enough she shall marry Hebert's son Louis. In their new home Labordie lavishes all his affection on Jacques, a weak and sickly youth. Francois, a half-breed, worships Jeanne.

Jeanne grows up to winsome womanhood. Donald Duncan, a government surveyor, meets Jeanne. He becomes infatuated with her, and she with him. Jacques tells his father, now totally blind, and Labordie forbids Jeanne to see Duncan. Love finds a way, however, and Jeanne promises to wed Duncan when he has completed his work for the government. Jacques, who has injured his hand, persuades Jeanne to take him canoeing in the St. Lawrence. Francois sees the canoe upset. He saves Jeanne, but her brother is drowned.

Jeanne has been warned that any great shock would kill her father, and so the girl cuts off her hair and tells her father that Jeanne is dead and that she is Jacques. When Duncan returns for his bride he is told of the death of Jeanne. On his deathbed Labordie asks Jeanne, whom he believes is Jacques, to go to Montreal to Duval Hebert, and resuming her own dress and name she does so. Hebert tells Jeanne that it was her father's wish that she marry his son, Louis, a dissipated youth. She is horror stricken, but to keep her father's vow consents that the marriage be celebrated after Louis returns from the North where he has gone to settle a question concerning his father's land.

In the North woods Louis meets Duncan, who is working for the Hebert firm, and when the young man has a quarrel with a guide, Duncan saves his life. Young Hebert insists that the surveyor return to Montreal and receive the thanks of his father and fiancee. Duncan accepts the invitation and he and Jeanne meet again. At first he believes that Jeanne tricked him, but when he has learned the truth, Duncan takes the unhappy girl in his arms and tells her again of his love. Louis, half intoxicated, sees them and insults Jeanne. Francois resents the affront to his idol, and throws Louis out of the room. Louis tries to get at the half-breed, but falls over the banisters and is killed. Not knowing this, Duncan goes away, fearing to cause Jeanne trouble.

Months later, once again in the North woods, Francois is surprised to see Duncan riding toward him. The young surveyor asks whether Louis and Jeanne are happy in their marriage. By remaining silent, Francois might keep Jeanne and Duncan from meeting, and perhaps in time win her for himself. But his love for her is so sincere that he prefers her happiness to his own, and Jeanne and Duncan are reunited in the Northern woods where they first met.

TO THE DEATH (Five Parts—Aug. 27).—The cast: Bianca Sylva (Mme. Petrova); Etienne Du Inette (Mahlon Hamilton); Jules Lavinne (Wyndham Standing); Antonio Manatelli (Henry Leone); Rosa (Evelyn Brent); The Woman of Mystery (Violet Reed); Maria (Marion Singer); Valet (Boris Korlin). Written by Mme. Petrova and L. Case Russell. Directed by Burton L. King.

Bianca, a Corsican, supports her frivolous sister, Rosa, by making laces. The sculptor, Manatelli, visits her cottage to buy laces, and sees her modeling in clay. Impressed by her talent, he offers her free instruction if she wishes to come to Paris. Bianca accepts and promises to send for Rose as soon as possible.

In Paris she meets Etienne Du Inette, head of the Internationale, a powerful secret service organization. He and Bianca are instantly attracted to each other. Jules Lavinne, also in the service of the Internationale, goes to Corsica on a secret mission. He sees and desires Rosa.

One day a mysterious veiled woman slips a note under Etienne's door, warning him to go to Corsica and watch Lavinne, who is a traitor. He soon has occasion to protect Rosa from Lavinne. Lavinne learns the assumed name Etienne is using on the island and signs it to a note asking Rosa to meet him.

In Paris, Bianca finishes and exhibits her first piece of work, and it is purchased by a wealthy patron. She sends for Rosa, but a letter from old Maria tells of the girl's disgrace and attempted suicide. Bianca rushes to her sister, who is dying. She finds the note which lured her sister to her destruction. It is signed "Pierre Renard." Bianca vows to follow Pierre Renard "To the Death."

She meets Jules Lavinne, and instinctively dislikes him, but when she learns that he belongs to the Internationale she forces herself to be gracious to him, hoping that he will aid her in finding "Pierre Renard." Lavinne, determined to win her, avoids meeting Etienne. Bianca asks Lavinne's aid, and he promises to find the man for her if she will marry him. Having vowed to avenge her sister at any cost, she promises.

That night Lavinne telephones that he has a photograph of Pierre Renard. Bianca asks him to bring it to her at once. Before he comes he writes a note which he instructs his man to deliver to Etienne. It reads, "Bianca is in great danger. Go to her at once." Lavinne engages tickets on the midnight train, and tells his valet to take his portmanteau to a prominent hotel, where he arranges to have a priest ready to perform the ceremony.

He shows Bianca the photograph. She is speechless with horror, when she sees that it is a picture of Etienne. Lavinne instructs her to ask him whether he was not known in Corsica as "Pierre Renard." When he arrives she does so, and he admits it, also admitting that he knew Rosa there. She plunges a dagger in his breast, and he falls to the floor.

Unwilling to keep her bargain with Lavinne, she attempts to take her own life. Lavinne prevents her, and forces her to accompany him to the hotel where the priest is in waiting. No sooner is the ceremony performed than Lavinne boasts of having won her by trickery, saying that it was he himself who lured Rosa to her death by the use of the name "Pierre Renard." Just then the valet knocks at the door, and Lavinne admits him. Behind him follow the woman of mystery and two gendarmes. The woman is Lavinne's wife, and he is arrested as a bigamist and a traitor. He returns to Bianca the dagger with which she struck down her lover. She rushes back to her own apartment, to kill herself beside his body, but she is amazed to find him gone. Her old nurse leads her into the room where he is lying asleep. The medallion of herself worn over his heart has saved his life.

SUMMER BOARDING (Klever Komedy—Aug. 13).—Vic reads an ad in the Summer Resort Column of a daily paper advertising "Restful Villa" at Bullem-in-the-Pines. The place, so the ad reads, has everything your heart would desire, and wanting to get away from the heat of the city, Vic decides here's the chance and packs his family up and off they go. They soon arrive at Bullem-in-the-Pines and are met at the station by a hackman, whom Vic describes as "Rip Van Winkle." After many hardships in the hack they manage to reach Restful Villa. The place is everything that your heart would not desire, and from this moment on Vic's troubles begin. Many things happen to him and his family trying to escape from the Villa, by climbing down out of the window. They manage to make a "get away," and arrive home all in, resolving that so far as summer boarding is concerned, "never again."

THE VARMINT (Lasky Five parts—Aug. 3).—The cast: The "Varmint" (Jack Pickford); the Roman (Theodore Roberts); Laura, his daughter (Louise Huff); Tough McCarty (Henry Malvern); the White Mt. Canary (Ben Suslow); the Coffee-Colored Angel (Milton Schumann); Cheyenne Baxter (Maurice Kessell); Doc MacNooder (Manfield Stanley); the Tennessee Shad (Miriam Comer); Butsey White (Ed. Sedgwick).

John Huperdink Stover, otherwise known as The Varmint," for his pestiferousness, or as "Dink" when in special favor, was expelled from a boarding school and sent to Lawrenceville Academy. On the stage on the way to the school he meets a somewhat silent man whom "Dink" sizes up for a salesman and he proceeds to wax eloquent on the subject of his past career and the reason why he was expelled from his previous school. The "salesman" is no other than the professor of Latin, known to the boys as the "Roman."

"Dink" boasts that in a week he will have the boys at the school in his power. A strange uneasiness grips him when he sees that he does not make just the impression he expected. Little by little he succeeds in making himself the most thoroughly disliked and abhorred person on the campus.

"Dink" rises a point in his schoolmates' estimation when he discovers on reporting to the Latin class that the instructor is no other than the traveling man of the stage on the day of his arrival, and in order to make good some of the many boasts he made on that day fakes the translation. The Roman, possessed of a good sense of humor, compliments "Dink" on his performance, much to everyone's surprise.

The first girl to attract "Dink" Stover is no other than the pretty daughter of the Roman, considerably older than he is. After a short and one-sided flirtation, Miss McCarty becomes engaged to another man and "Dink" is desperate until some new neckwear comes in at the local haberdasher's and diverts his mind from his agony. .

As a result of his neglect of study, "Dink" finds himself about to be dropped in school for falling off in his studies. He is to have a private examination at the Roman's house. Stover decides to cheat, and arranges with the Tennessee Shad and MacNooder to overturn a large water cooler outside the Roman's door and other devices to get him out of the way. To his utter dismay, the Roman goes out of the room and stays, thus putting him on his honor. "Dink" signs his name at the head of the blank paper and is dumbfounded when, upon the Roman's return he seems to scan the blank sheets closely and says: "I think this will about pass you, Stover." The two discover that they had been friends from the first and "Dink" really comes into his own when the Roman explains that as he is now an upper classman it is up to him to set a good example to the younger boys.

HELP!!!

An Exhibitor in Trouble

will find all the assistance needed by conscientiously studying the special departments of the Moving Picture World.

If the operator is having trouble in the booth, wiring, lighting or mechanical trouble, the projection department will be found a great help.

If the Advertising for Exhibitors department hints are followed the box office will show a better average.

If you play to a neighborhood or transient clientele a study of the Moving Picture Educator, the Film Reviews, Comments on the Films and the State Rights Department will be found very useful.

Music for the Pictures will also be found very helpful in attracting good patronage.

The Manufacturers' Advance Notes each week have made advance booking possible.

If you are not already a weekly subscriber to the Moving Picture World start as one today. Eventually you will be one of them, so why wait?

No such VALUE anywhere else.

Subscription Rates
Domestic, $3.00; Canada, $3.50; Foreign, $4.00

Convention at Ocean Beach, Va.

August 30th, 31st, Sept. 1st

THIS will be the most important gathering of Exhibitors ever held in the South. · President Percy W. Wells expects a big attendance from North Carolina. President Geo. C. Warner, of the South Carolina League, will be present with other exhibitors from his state. Harry Crandall will head a delegation from Washington, and Guy Wonders, vice-president of the American Exhibitors' Association, will be over with a large delegation from Maryland.

All exhibitors should attend whether members or not, as matters of great importance will be considered.

Simplex

Goldwyn Chooses Simplex

Suppose you were a Producer, bent upon getting out the utmost, the acme in quality of pictures—pictures into which men of rare skill had put their hearts and their brains.

Then suppose you had to purchase Projectors for your Exhibition Rooms, to show such pictures in the best possible manner to high-class Exhibitors.

Wouldn't it be a shame to put in anything but the very best?

Well, that's what the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation were up against.

Of course they had their choice of Projectors. You can easily imagine that no manufacturer tried to keep them from putting in his Machines.

But only quality counted.

Quality at the start and quality continued.

To those who know, that means SIMPLEX.

Take the Goldwyn people, as an example.

They are equipping every one of their Distributing Offices in the United States and Canada with an Exhibition Room.

They KNOW which is the best Projector.

So they ordered Simplexes for all of these.

But don't forget this: The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has no monopoly on Simplex Projection.

So don't envy them, but call on the Simplex Distributor in your section and let him help you to that Profitable, Permanently Perfect Projection. The best is none too good for you, is it?

Catalog "A" also tells about it. Your name and address?

What the Simplex does for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation it will do for you.

We sell more high grade Projectors than any other manufacturer in the world.

The One Best Bet of the Week

Harry Carey in "The Texas Sphinx"

HARRY CAREY'S millions of admirers will say that is some title for a Carey picture—because with all the dash and go that they find in his work, they know he is a master of the "quiet" method of getting his big stuff over on the screen. They'll enjoy every foot of this picture. It's great and thrilling, tense and absorbing, with a walloping punch at the end. There's a stage robbery and Harry is suspected. There's a pretty love story and for a time it seems that Harry is to lose out, but the punch climax comes with a satisfactory surprise that will bring the fans to the edges of their seats.

Harry Carey "The Texas Sphinx"

A MERRY L-KO

"Cactus and Kale" — Mile-a-Minute Comedy

OUT in the L-KO studios there's a big two-reeler made every week. There are a lot of people working, and the L-KO is some busy place. No comedy company in the country is equipped to the point of production that can equal the L-KO. That's why you can COUNT on the big two-reel L-KO every week as a humdinger. In "Cactus and Kale" there is about the swiftest action—brilliant comedy action—you've ever seen. As usual there are funny stunts and daring stunts, and pretty girls and screamingly funny situations and titles, too. Produced under the personal supervision of J. G. Blystone. The featured players are Walter Stephens, Gladys Varden, Bert Roach and Catherine Young.

The Kale

Mary Fuller Feature

Beautiful Star in "To the Highest Bidder"—Romantic Drama

MARY in this strong two-reel drama, falls heir to five thousand dollars, and leaves her home in the country and a faithful lover "to see life." She sees it with a fast crowd, and when her money is nearly gone she offers herself unconditionally to the highest bidder. The highest bid comes from an anonymous source, and while Mary is hesitating a chap offers to double it. Before Mary can decide she is handed a letter, a bid that causes her to say that all bids are off. Returning home she finds the country lover, and the fans find a climax too big to be told in words. A big picture that will go everywhere.

"The Boulevard Speedhound"

Lee Poses As Eddie's Wife

EDDIE is a speedhound and takes Lee for a ride in a powerful racing car. They are followed to Eddie's house by a cycle cop. Eddie's wife, Edith, is away, but to avoid arrest the cop is told that Mrs. Eddie's wife is sick and they have been for the doctor. The cop has to be shown and, so Lee dashes upstairs, puts on a nighty and gets into bed, where he poses as Eddie's wife. The cop leaves and Lee ducks, too. Outside he meets his best girl and sees the cop returning, still suspicious. The girl takes Lee's place and then Eddie's wife returns and finds the strange girl in her room. Lively, funny and clever, this Nestor will tickle them all.

WILLIAM FRANEY

"Short Skirts and Deep Water" Corking One-Reel Joker

BILL FRANEY and Gale Henry are re-united in this grouch assassinator, "Short Skirts and Deep Water," and they will give your fans the time of their lives. They are members of the Anti-Sin League, and Bill is sent to the beach to see that the girls wear skirts of proper length. Gale follows to see what he does, loses her own bathing skirt and is arrested, while Bill is marooned at high tide. It is a bang-up Joker—one continuous laugh from start to finish.

Bill Prefers Land Dangers

GALE HENRY

"Nearly a Queen," One-Reel Joker Has Melodramatic Plot

CAST up by the sea as a baby, Gale is brought up in a humble fisherman's cottage. She is engaged to Milton Sims, and the opening is full of big laughs. The cottage is visited by a guy in a gorgeous uniform, who tells them that Gale is a lost princess, and takes her away with him in a boat. In the middle of the bay he ties her up in a bag and throws her overboard. She is rescued by Milt, captured again, tied in a shack which is set on fire. Then comes the punch, and it is as funny as it is surprising.

"Queen," Gale and Her Prime Minister

Helen Gibson in "The Perilous Leap"

Three Reel Gold Seal Offers Many Thrilling Situations and Much Exciting Action--Strong Story and Cast

HELEN GIBSON does stunts in this picture that will fairly take your breath away. How she does them and comes up smiling after, is a mystery that only Helen herself could solve. In this Gold Seal she is the daughter of a prosperous rancher on the Border, who is visited by some strangers, who ask permission to store some property in his barn. This is granted, when it is learned that there are smugglers in the neighborhood. The news comes from Helen's sweetheart, Val Paul, a Secret Service operative. It develops that the stored goods is opium, and Val lays for the gang. He is bested in a tremendous fight, put aboard a freight train, and the gang think they have won. But they haven't counted on Helen, who, at a mad gallop, overtakes the train, jumps aboard from her horse, and after a perilous leap to and from a bridge and the fast train, rescues her lover. Book this thriller and please your fans.

Max Asher

"In the Clutches of Milk," a Clever Victor Stunt Comedy

SOME of the funniest stunts you ever saw are pulled in this one-reel Victor comedy in which Max Asher is a hotel keeper. Max has a chronic thirst, and so he draws a drink from the bath tub, from the gas jet, from his bootleg and various other queer places. He gets hold of a bottle of poison, and to save his life is ordered to drink milk. He is chased by an irate milkman through several hundred feet of the liveliest action you ever saw, trying all the time to drink from the milk bottle. Good fun.

BETTER THAN EVER

Universal Screen Magazine Shows Fascinating Subjects

EVERY week sees a broadening in interest of the subjects shown on this fascinating one-reel feature. It is a veritable mine of information and entertainment. There are shown on the current release sea birds by the million on an inland lake; making butter on the farm; the most fascinating pictures of physical culture for babies, posed by a husky 18-months-old baby girl; making shrapnel and other ammunition, an unusual glimpse of war preparations in America; and the unique and exclusive Miracles in Mud, this week's subject being "Swat the Fly." A release that captures them all young and old and gets them on the dullest day.

Two-a-Week News Service

Predominant Popularity Due to Overwhelming Merit

HERE'S big news, Exhibitors! You can now book the Universal Animated Weekly from week to week. You won't be asked to sign up a long-time contract to be able to show all the world's great news events first on the screen in your town. This is a big move in your favor. It is a great opportunity. For fifteen straight weeks, and many, many times before that, the U. A. W. has scored a BIG scoop. It was the first and only News Weekly to show completely and exclusively "Pershing in France." These were the official French Government pictures, and were shown in leading Broadway theatres by the Animated the SAME DAY THE NEGATIVE WAS RECEIVED FROM FRANCE. That is typical of the progressive methods that are at your service. You can't get this service elsewhere. Write your nearest Universal Exchange for full particulars now. You need this class of service every week.

Dear Sirs:

Doubtless you will be interested in knowing how Mutual Pictures--Big Stars Only--have been going at our theatres. In honesty I report they have proven thoroughly satisfactory. Stars like Mary Miles Minter, Gail Kane, William Russell and Margarita Fischer are great favorites with our patrons. We run many of the Mutual Pictures--Big Stars Only for three and four days in succession and find that business grows better each day. The last few Mutual Pictures have been even better than usual---seem to have touched a higher notch than ever, and you know I have always been a booster for Mutual Pictures.

Assuring you of our complete satisfaction with Mutual service in every respect, I am, with kind personal regards,

Very Sincerely Yours,

C. W. Meighan

The American Film Company's Gigantic Laboratories Are Now At Your Service

THE AMERICAN FILM COMPANY, Inc., now announces for the first time the opening of its vast printing and developing resources to those in the trade desiring the highest grade of printing and developing. Now—you may have YOUR productions printed and developed in the plant which has won high honors for the quality of its work. American film productions have been always praised for their tinting, toning, printing and developing. They are always uniform. Ten years' experience is back of every print.

Printing and Developing Capacity

1,500,000 Feet Per Week

The printing and developing plant of the American Film Company, Inc., has a capacity of 1,500,000 feet per week. Every stage of the work is handled by experts. No plant in the world excels in technical equipment or care with which negative is handled. And now you can put this entire staff to work for YOU.

Highest Quality Work Guaranteed

Your productions will receive the same care in every detail that is bestowed on the American's own releases. Your films will be handled throughout by the same people who print and develop the productions starring MARY MILES MINTER, GAIL KANE, WILLIAM RUSSELL, JULIETTE DAY, HELEN HOLMES, MARGARITA FISCHER and CHARLIE CHAPLIN. When you have completed a beautiful production it is folly to risk it in the hands of ordinary commercial printing and developing plants. Arrange now to have it done at the laboratories of the American Film Company, Inc. Call, wire or write for full details and a price estimate on handling YOUR work.

There have been only 6 Pictures that equalled This Classic Production

“GREAT FILMS, like good literature or music, or art of any kind, come few and far between. Moreover, they are apt to spring from the most unexpected sources.”

You can count on the fingers of your two hands those motion pictures which have equalled in beauty and strength, plot and action, this offering of the Ogden Pictures Corporation.

“THE LUST OF THE AGES” is one of the rare successes of motion picture history.

Whether the Ogden Pictures Corporation can repeat a success so marked, or whether it shall forever strive to live up to this, its master achievement, is a question only the future can solve.

The first "wild one" is released September 30th, entitled "A Bedroom Blunder," with Charles Murray, Wayland Trask and Miss Mary Thurman.

The second "mirth riot," will be labeled, "The Pullman Bride." The cast includes Miss Gloria Swanson, Mack Swain, Chester Conklin—aided and abetted by a flock of beauties.

Number three of the "delirious delights" is a girl avalanche, entitled "Roping Her Romeo," with Miss Polly Moran, Ben Turpin and Slim Summerville, assisted by custard pies, slapsticks, and a barrel of fun.

by
WALLACE IRWIN

WALLACE IRWIN probably never heard of Sessue Hayakawa when he wrote his famous "Letters of a Japanese Schoolboy," upon which "Hashimura Togo" is based, because the now famous Paramount star was still in Japan at that time. However, there is probably no other actor in the world who could have done the same justice to this inimitably funny and thoroughly human story that Hayakawa did. U'RE a busy man, like all Exhibitors. Are you making the common mistake of being too busy—of keeping your nose too near the grindstone—of paying too close attention to petty details?

This cuts off your foresight and blinds you to the importance of new ideas which may have a direct and lasting influence on your business—progressive ideas of great value which you should study and apply.

Have you been too busy to send for the Paralta Plan book? If you have, it's time for you to look up and see what's going on in the world. Don't let anything relating to your business get by you without knowing all about it. If you are wise you will consider the Paralta Plan.

It will cost you nothing. It will put money in your pocket. Send for the book and read it. It will take but half an hour and you will progress five years.

Start With Goldwyn at the Beginning

WHEN the eyes of the nation are on this new organization's splendid productions, when artists and critics everywhere are saying: "Here are the most beautiful pictures we have ever seen."

When billboard campaigns and skilled exploitation have made American audiences eager to come into your theatres. In other words, when the stage is all set for an immediate profit for your box-office.

This is the time for every exhibitor to sign a Goldwyn Pictures contract. You benefit by everything Goldwyn has done for its productions and its stars. You have to do less yourself—if you sign now—than for any other productions ever made.

Goldwyn Pictures are letter-perfect, scenically beautiful and dramatically powerful. And in the words of a score of great critics they are "better than Goldwyn ever promised they would be."

Goldwyn Asks You These Questions

WHERE is there another company in the industry that has ever made ten costly productions in advance of a first release that exhibitors may know in advance just what they are buying?

Where is there another company that has ever financed such a tremendous undertaking entirely with its own money—without ever receiving or applying a penny of exhibitor money to production?

Where is there another company that not only advises exhibitors to reach out and find the best available pictures in the open market, but stands ready to distribute the quality pictures of any other producer—thereby seeking to provide you with pictures on which you will make a profit each week in the year?

You will realize instantly that Goldwyn is the first producing and distributing organization to adopt such courageous and unusual policies. . . . It will be greatly to the advantage of all exhibitors to sign contracts with Goldwyn now.

Some reasons why

The SEVEN PEARLS

WITH

MOLLIE KING

is a strong attraction for you!

¶ No. 1 Mollie King is one of the most beautiful girls on the screen today. Her talent as a player has been amply proven by the Pathé successes – the serial "Mystery of the Double Cross" and the features "The On-the Square Girl", "Kick In", and "Blind Man's Luck".

¶ No. 2 Creighton Hale had a very large following in "The Exploits of Elaine" and "The Iron Claw". He is young, handsome and an actor of experience. The millions who followed him in his two previous serials will want to see him in "The Seven Pearls".

¶ No. 3 Charles W. Goddard, the author, is a famous dramatist and writer for the screen. With Paul Dickey he wrote "The Misleading Lady", "The Ghost Breaker" and "The Last Laugh", all successful plays. He wrote "The Perils of Pauline" and with Arthur B. Reeve "The Exploits of Elaine", two great serials.

Other reasons will follow.

Here is the Reason

These are the kind of the so-called "war pictures" for which the public—and the trade—have been seeking.

Which means that they are "different"—

Different, in that heroism is supplanted for horror. Romance, beauty, drama, art, action, suspense take the place of a deadly round of deadliness.

In other words, these art records of the Italian battlefront contain that quality so essential to entertainment and successful screen presentations:

A GREAT, HUMAN DRAMATIC, NOTE—

Plus—

The most marvelous natural scenery that has ever been shown in any picture.

It is because of this that up to the date of the release of this advertisement, standing room has been at a premium in every theatre at which these pictures have been presented, and scalpers have been reaping a harvest.

Facts and Comments

THE exhibitor with a touch of advertising is a curious minded man. His interest in his neighbors and in life is so fresh that he is said to be original, which merely means that his ideas and actions are not faked. He isn't half-hearted nor half alive, but is genuinely there. He doesn't "get there," but is there all the time. The kernel in the nut is his desire to be friendly. This is the real difference between exhibitors—one can't help being friendly because it is in him naturally; the other wants to be a success, perhaps, but he wants it for himself. He merely tries to be friendly. To the latter success is quite possible, but hardly in the amusement business. The other—well, the people like to talk about him and the more freshly curious his mind is the more they delight to tell each other about him. There's exhibitor Harry Pomeroy of the Photodrome in Toronto. He got the small boys hunting through the long grass for snakes for him. We don't know why he wanted them. But he made us write this and that's the personal advertising touch of genius that pays in the exhibiting of pictures.

THERE have been from time to time suggestions that the number of denominations of our smaller coins be increased. Cashiers in our picture theaters would have their work greatly simplified by the introduction of a 15-cent piece, while we have often believed that a 20-cent piece would be used in greater number than our old standby, the quarter. Possibly there are banking and other reasons why it might be inadvisable to have too many different small coins, but we would welcome consideration of the question by the powers that be and believe an addition or two would facilitate the transaction of business in many lines outside the moving picture theaters. The daily change passing the little ticket window of our theaters is of such volume that if the 6-cent and 11-cent admissions talked of a short time ago had become effective the Government would have been justified in striking new coins for those exact amounts.

THE greatly increased demand for good, serviceable programs at reasonable prices for family group and children's matinees, church, school and similar entertainment is emphasizing the need of a Central Bureau or Exchange or Film Library in all the larger centers where such programs may be secured. The present exchange system of handling moving picture productions is ignoring altogether this very important end of the business and the film industry will have to take cognizance of this increasing demand sooner or later if it is to be taken full advantage of. When one requires a book on any subject whatever nowadays they naturally go to the library. They do not have to find out who published the book and go to the publisher nor do they have to visit a half dozen different booksellers before they secure the particular book they may desire. Why not so with film?

INDICATIONS continue to multiply justifying the belief that the whole industry will enjoy a season of excellent business during the coming fall and winter. Business in general is booming, good wages are being paid over the whole country and theaters are being reopened and running to good business in every state in the Union. The anxiety and worry and increased strain under which the people are at present laboring make short periods of respite and entertainment more imperative than ever and nothing that we know of at present quite equals the moving picture in providing these short and necessarily frequent moments of relaxation.

BE SURE you are right, then go ahead, is an old motto and a mighty good one in business. Any enterprise that is begun on a wrong foundation starts with a handicap that will usually prove, sooner or later, insurmountable. When, to a faulty foundation, is added improper business methods, the situation becomes correspondingly worse. Submission to "big stick" methods in the slightest degree will result in a greater use of the big stick.

Presentation, Not Exhibition

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THERE is no great difference between the two words in ordinary use. Exhibition is probably more general, sometimes expressing a section of the other, and presentation has come to be regarded as more ceremonious, characterized by more elaborate form. Such is the distinction here intended. The manager of the Rialto, S. L. Rothapfel, for instance, has made the showing of moving pictures very imposing and impressive. Finding the Rialto packed with an enthusiastic audience at a very early hour in the afternoon, I made some inquiries and learned that five representations were being given daily.

The success of an exhibitor, quite as well as that of a producer or an actor, is something to be studied as an example and even utilized as one, provided it is due to some definite policy carried out consistently, or to exceptional taste and full appreciation of what an audience needs, or, above all, to a sincere desire to make moving pictures a big factor in our daily lives. A careful study of the effects which have led to Rialto popularity brought to light an almost unsuspected artistry in offering moving pictures before a mixed audience for acceptance.

The Rothapfel idea seems to be to make a whole impression of the visual kind, with a delightful appeal to the ear besides, the latter not intrustive while a picture is being shown, but appropriate and harmonious. Then aside from this charm, the music alone is decidedly worth while, a delight in itself, and it affords in sole performance a refreshing relief from possible eye strain. The eye is also given no decorative distraction. The theater interior is one of very dignified beauty. It might not even attract attention because of its noble simplicity of design.

Here we have a form of exhibition so elevated that it can consistently be called "presentation." It starts with a house design full of meaning, one of its subtlest charms. Good taste is pleased, and common taste, very rarely pure, is not offended. There is nothing incongruous, nothing inappropriate, though the ordinary exhibition room may confound and jar the eyes in many ways, wrong in shape, wrong in color, wrong in proportion, so many points of unconscious irritation for the audience. After visiting a harmonious theater one can sincerely say, "I am very pleased to have met you, and I hope to have the pleasure of calling again." Such is the effect of artistic design.

It is often next to impossible for the really ambitious exhibitor to get the right sort of house, so much depends on opportunity, and his opportunity may be limited by the inexorable laws of supply and demand, but he can sometimes compensate by making his patrons comfortable, placing them in chairs meant to give the spectators a sense of ease while they are his guests.

An interesting experiment would be that of having each audience vote on the question of time versus comfort. "Would you prefer a two-hour performance in easier chairs, or three hours in those you are using?" This new art is violating many old conventions, sweeping time-honored traditions into the dust heap—we may yet provide chairs for the spectator which he can call his own, which do not compel him to dig his elbows in his sides to keep them from jabbing his neighbor's, with people directly in front of him far enough apart for him to see the whole screen between their heads, instead of twisting himself with cat-like contortions to get a glimpse of the pictured story.

Before the average exhibitor can go to any large expense in such matters as house beauty and comfort, he may feel that he should be playing on velvet in the game. The quality of his projection, dealt with elsewhere in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, becomes highly important. But, after he has done all in his power to be fair with his patrons, his thoughts turn to how he can set the tide of victory flowing in his favor. The ordinary attendance may pay expenses with a dangerously narrow profit besides—by what magic can he find out the secret of filling his house to overflowing? How can he lay hands on the big money?

The "flash" has been tried. It works in some places, especially in large city locations, where new people are constantly passing. The billboard gets them in—sometimes it keep them out—but the neighborhood house can only be built up on steady patronage, and that means steady, high quality of performance. Let us suppose that an ambitious exhibitor, anxious to reach a state of high-class presentation, willing to take a chance and in dead earnest, is getting 20 per cent. of the possible patronage in his neighborhood. How can he get a line on the other 80 per cent. of them?

Get away from biased viewpoint. Certain beaming women will exclaim "How cute!" every time a baby is shown on the screen; even little animals may temporarily stir their maternal instincts. But the constant introducion of babies and little animals would soon empty the house. Little Jimmie wants an exciting chase, in which the heroine arrives at the very last minute to save the hero from the villain's clutches. But Little Jimmie would empty the house of all but his own kind. The man who selects his own program must broaden the scope of his selective taste until he can rise to a point of discriminating among all screen stories.

Have a definite policy and carry it out consistently, try to learn what an audience needs in order to arrive at that policy. What are you looking for when you turn over the leaves of a story magazine? Something new? Something refreshing? Do you prefer fresh fruit to dried apples? The evaporated kind may do for the people who are attending your theater—how about those who are not? Your surplus profits must come from them. Demand at least some originality. Let us suppose you find a good magazine story with a definite aim which bears on subjects uppermost in the minds of people today. To every friend you meet you are going to say, "You ought to read so and so—it is great."

Your patrons ought to leave your theater as so many publicity agents, speaking to all their friends of the consistently fine presentation you are making of stories entirely new and of a kind which leaves a strong after impression. If a story starts out to show where tenderness, sentiment and consideration may be better than harsh justice, the introduction of extraneous matter is merely so much padding and destroys both the pleasurable illusion and the strength of impression to be made. The moment a story is no longer consistent it becomes self-destructive. The people may enjoy a few scenes but the whole effect is boredom.

To attain presentation means an effort on your part to make moving pictures a big factor in our lives. Your audience goes to the theater in a receptive mood, very much as a woman goes shopping—she is willing to buy something good. It is for you to supply the vision. People are there to be impressed. It is for you to make the impression. It is not a case of this or that actor or director, but of a great, big composite artistry in all the leading factors of production.

Summer Musings

By Sam Spedon

THIS is our vacation time and we are not supposed to be bothering our heads about anything but doing the "dolce far niente" act at some summer resort with our wife, to show the rest of the guests that we are the real things, even if we don't own an automobile. No use, you can't teach an old dog new tricks. We stood it for three days, then we had to get back on the job among the reel people before we got too lazy to work at all. We don't have to write this and you don't have to read it. You may find it different and it may give you something to think about and help relieve your minds.

Green Fields of Virginia and Canada.

We are going to the convention to be held at Ocean View, Norfolk, Va., the latter part of this month by the Exhibitors of the Virginias, Carolinas, District of Columbia and adjacent territory. We are looking forward to meeting our old friends in that section; they are arranging for a real business session of much interest. Jake Wells, president of the American Exhibitors' Association, will be there. H. B. Varner of Charlotte, N. C.; Percy Wells of Wilmington, N. C.; Harry Crandall of Washington, D. C., and we are informed Lee Ochs, president of the National Exhibitors' Association, will be there; C. C. Pettijohn, general manager of the A. E. A., is expected. We ought to hear a whole lot of worth while news and get a big ear full. Besides it will give us another chance of sizing up the Southern situation, which we consider one of the most prolific on the motion picture map. Nothing like getting a broad view of things outside the confines of our little six by eight. September 9 and 10 we will jump to St. Johns, New Brunswick, to mix with the exhibitors of the Maritime provinces of Canada. They tell us there is a live "bunch" up there and we want to get better acquainted with them. They are keen for organization and we may learn a whole lot that is new touching upon a territory the industry should cultivate.

Never Too Old to Learn.

The other day we called a film man's attention to an article on motion pictures, published in one of the national magazines. He said: "I know. It's an old story." We agree with him. Motion pictures grow stale to us and so do we. That's the reason we lose business keenness and do not keep up with the procession. The heart and the mind must ever keep young in this business. It presents new phases every day, it changes over night. If we are alert we can always learn something new from the other fellow's experience. We should not give up the student habit; listen, read and learn all the time. It is a mistake to conclude we know it all. Just as soon as we do we will go backward. The world doesn't stand still; neither does the film business. When we get too old and wise to learn it is time to take off our shoes, turn ourselves loose and await the end.

Identity.

When an individual player becomes identified with any make of pictures and becomes recognized as part of them it is an assurance of their character and it is mighty hard to make people believe differently. As soon as those pictures lose the personnel of their players they lose in popularity. We believe the picture should be the thing "The play's the thing" applied to the stage as the special medium of entertainment, but just the same the play is considered better if it has the popular and capable actors to put it over and properly interpret it.

When a public individual loses his identity in the public eye he is soon forgotten and the asset for which he was valued is lost. It would have been a wise move on the part of some producing companies who have lost much of their indentity to have followed the co-operative method by making those who contributed to their prosperity sharers in it instead of believing they themselves were the alpha and omega of the whole business. This could have been done for a year or term of years instead of considering them mere employees. The more progressive producers recognize that they must retain personnel and identity as that which counts for success.

There are some newcomers into the producing of motion pictures who had a false idea that they could conduct it as they would manufacturing, and some old timers believed it, gradually they learned their mistake and they are now willing to leave it to those who know and from present indications the man who knows how isn't looking for a job.

No Such an Animal as Monopoly

By SAM SPEDON.

AT the present time all sorts of questions and rumors are ripe about an amalgamation of star feature productions. Will it lead to monopoly of all that is worth showing and seeing? Will it develop into a merger of producers and exhibitors who will control all the best theaters? Will the best star features be vested in one exchange?

A Dream.

Many a thinking man has dreamed of such an amalgamation and looked forward to its realization. It has never come to pass, and it is the belief of many it never will. As we see it, concentration of productions does not necessarily mean monopoly. It means co-operation. Each star or unit of stars produces its own pictures at its own expense and has a monetary interest and guarantee in the profits of its products leased through the one distributing source. In this way each star being a partner or part of the whole receives his profit from the success of his own products and the exchange handles them just as a department store handles different products on consignment. Nor does concentration necessarily mean that any one exchange can secure and hold everything of the best no matter how much it might desire it. The co-operative system does not destroy the individual identity of each unit, who will naturally look out for its own interests. Therefore if results or profits from the amalgamation do not measure up to its expectations that unit will withdraw from the amalgamation and release through some other channel.

Many to Select From.

There are not less than ten producing companies provided with stars of first magnitude well equipped to supply the varied demands for high grade pictures and there always will be a plenty to furnish all the other grades. It is well to remember that no matter how long or short a picture may be or who the players may be, no picture will be acceptable to the public and survive unless it meets a certain standard of perfection and tells a story worth while picturizing.

Nothing Less Than Good.

We may have good, better and best pictures, valued accordingly, but nothing less than good will satisfy. Therefore there is no need of apprehending a monopoly of production by one concern. We will always find a supply equal to the demand and our circumstances. Anything less than good means failure.

Control of Theaters.

It may be that the key-note of organization was struck by an exhibitors' circuit in protecting the exhibitors against the invasion of the theater field by large moneyed interests, a report of which was circulated two or three years ago when such an invasion was likened to the United Cigar Store intersts. There always will be in human affairs an effort for control, hence the cause and need for union or organization in the regulation of them.

N. A. M. P. I. By-Laws

THE recent first Members' Annual Meeting of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry shed some light on the by-laws governing the organization that would seem to call for careful and immediate consideration if the Association is intended to be representative of the whole industry and all branches of it impartially. It is not an easy task to draft a set of by-laws that will meet all the requirements of such an organization and the defects that developed in the present by-laws were doubtless unforeseen. It was also propitious that these defects should be brought into the limelight thus early in the life of the Association, as this makes possible an early correction, which, in turn, will result in unhampered development of this very necessary trade organization.

Undoubtedly the gravest error uncovered in the by-laws in the short discussion at the annual meeting was the limiting of membership for exhibitors to Class Two, or rather making membership in this Class contingent to or dependent on membership in another and outside organization. Class Two limits membership in the N. A. M. P. I. to exhibitors who are members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. It was further developed in the discussion that no further provision was made for membership of exhibitors except through Class Five, which already includes publishers, authors, actors, directors, agencies and all others not included in the first four classes.

Producers and importers are admitted as a class, not as a separate organization and altogether independent of any other affiliation, and the same is true of the manufacturers and dealers in equipment in Class Three and distributors of motion pictures in Class Four. Exhibitors are by far the most numerous of any class or group in the industry and this fact was evidently in mind when Class Two was given double the representation of any of the other classes on the Board of Directors. Why then should exhibitor representation in the N. A. M. P. I. be limited to exhibitors only who are members of another organization?

The president of the N. A. M. P. I. is making strenuous and laudable efforts to keep petty politics out of the deliberations of his Association. All unwittingly or otherwise, however, the Association is hereby saddled with a fundamental bit of trouble making—a discriminating and unfair regulation that is bound to be a canker until it is corrected.

Surely it would not be a hard matter to adjust some method of prorating representation of the different Classes on a basis of membership, if that is necessary. As pointed out by a member at the annual meeting, membership in the Association should be on broad, democratic principles of equal representation. If not, and if the organization is to be made the catspaw of any clique or group, no matter of what class in the industry, the end of its usefulness will not be far distant.

There is no politics behind our motive in bringing this forward for consideration at this time, however much some may try to make it appear that there is. A storm of protest may result on the ground that this discourages unity of organization and fosters the idea of several antagonistic groups. This we deny. It is no part of the work of the N. A. M. P. I. to bring exhibitors or any other class together in an outside organization of their own, but it is the duty of the Association to open its classes of membership to each branch of the industry on an equal basis for all, without fear or favor. The N. A. M. P. I. should become a strong organization, representative of this great industry and any flaws in its by-laws or anything else that stands in the way of its progress should be eliminated and corrected with all possible despatch.

A Triumph for Decency

By Edward Weitzel.

THE day of the salacious moving picture has evidently come to an end. Unscrupulous adventurers who still labor under the delusion that there is considerable profit to be made by manufacturing screen dramas that pander to the lowest instincts of humanity, will do well to heed the fate of the first release of a company that sought to place on the market a photoplay of this description. The claim to an ethical purpose put forth in behalf of the picture deceived neither the National Board of Review nor the better class of trade journals, the real nature of the play being unmistakable. Everything was done to "put the picture over." The author of the scenario was a playwright of experience and reputation, the director was equally distinguished and the members of the cast were high salaried players chosen for their fitness for their respective characters. An expensive advertising campaign, to which the Moving Picture World refused to open its columns, absorbed still more of the company's funds; but the failure of the picture to pass the censorship and the frank exposure of its true character by a number of the reviewers of the moving picture press proved too great a handicap, and the original version was withdrawn from the market. Last week the National Board of Review and representatives of the trade papers were asked to pass judgment upon a second and much chastened edition of the offending picture. Practically all the obnoxious material had been eliminated, the "cleaning up" process resulting in a screen drama that no longer presents scenes of depravity under the cloak of exposing the dangers of driving lewd women from their accustomed haunts.

The family moving picture theater is not the proper forum for discussions on such a subject.

A gratifying indication of the success attending the efforts to put a stop to the making of undesirable pictures is revealed by the remark of a speculative gentleman, after reading the reviews of the release in question.

"Six months ago such a bunch of 'roasts' would have been worth all kinds of money to that picture. The talk about it being offcolor would have boomed it in great shape; but you can't get away with that stuff now."

Correct, Mr. Speculator! And the bars are up for good in every sense of the word!

Activities of War Committees
OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY

Have You Any Films to Give to the Soldiers in France?

THROUGH the Moving Picture World one of the veteran chaplains of the United States Army appeals to the manufacturers and exchangemen of the country on behalf of the soldiers on service in France. The chaplain, who has been many years in the service, must be nameless on account of the War Department prohibition against the publication of the identity of persons or organizations destined for foreign service. Suffice it to say he has, since pictures became a public amusement, been using them for the entertainment of the men under his care. He states that in time to come, perhaps within a year, the Young Men's Christian Association will be in a position to exhibit motion pictures to the men in France. In the meantime that organization will have its hands full taking care of the entertainment of the men in the camps of the regular army, the National Guard and the national army in the United States.

Until such time as the Y. M. C. A. can extend its work to France the chaplain says the only motion pictures the soldiers in camp will be able to see are those which may be provided by the manufacturers and exchangemen here and exhibited under the direction of the chaplains of the different organizations. The visitor to the World office, who expects soon to join his regiment on the other side, said he would take up with his brother chaplains the work of organizing the distribution and exhibiting of the pictures in the several camps. What is necessary first are the films—and those of comedies, especially.

It is not stipulated that the films shall be new or even nearly new. Old films will be welcomed by the soldiers. There must be many such subjects available in the vaults of the exchanges in this country, subjects the owners of which would be glad to give to such a high purpose—it would be difficult to conceive of a higher. It need not be pointed out that the class of pictures should be of the best in theme—the cleanest—only such as a man would show in his own home and surrounded by his own family. This is vital.

The Moving Picture World will be glad to forward to the proper army official for shipment to the soldiers in France any such film as may be sent to this office and to acknowledge in its columns the receipt of all such. In case of New York contributions we will arrange for their collection.

Who will be the first to contribute films for the entertainment of the men who are giving their all representing the United States abroad?

Brady Praises Friend

WILLIAM A. BRADY, chairman of the war committee for the motion picture industry, which is working in conjunction with the officials in Washington, uttered strong words of praise last week for Arthur S. Friend, chairman of the industry's delegation to the Food Commission. Mr. Brady said also that Herbert C. Hoover, head of the commission, seemed to be the first of the Washington officials to appraise at its full value the aid that may be given by the motion picture industry in the work of prosecuting the war.

The president of the National Association said no end of credit should be given to Mr. Friend, who was entering heart and soul into his work in the capital city. "He is Johnny on the Spot," he said. "He is spending his own money and is getting results."

The treasurer of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, in order to facilitate his work in Washington has opened offices in that city. There he will attend various conferences with Mr. Hoover and the other authorities interested in the food situation. Mr. Friend is a lawyer as well as a man of marked executive ability.

William L. Sherrill, vice-chairman of the general committee, and also chairman of the committee to the shipping board, will go to Washington this week to confer with Edward Hurley, chairman of the shipping board. Mr. Sherrill will present to Mr. Hurley some well defined ideas as to how the picture industry can aid the board in its work of creating a large merchant marine and equipping it with man power. Already several applications have been made for the making of pictures on this division of the government's work.

Mr. Brady was gratified last week to receive the following letter from William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury. It is self-explanatory:

> The Secretary of the Treasury,
> Washington, August 8, 1917.
> My Dear Mr. Brady: I have your letter of the 1st of August advising me of the appointment of Messrs. Zukor, Loew, Irwin, Brulatour and Spoor as a committee representing the motion picture industry to co-operate with the Treasury Department in placing its activities before the public of the country, especially in connection with the Liberty Loan. I deeply appreciate your interest in the matter, and shall be glad to write to each of the gentlemen named in accordance with your suggestion. I am sure that the film can perform a great patriotic service to the country at this time, and I am indeed pleased to have your co-operation.
> I am taking the liberty of expressing the hope that you will submit some concrete suggestions in the near future. I shall be glad to have them, and shall give them my careful consideration in connection with the campaign for the next loan.
> I am advising Mr. Oscar Price, who has just been appointed Director of Publicity for the loan, of the committee you have selected to co-operate with the Treasury Department. May I suggest that you keep in touch with him as to assistance which may be rendered by the motion picture industry in carrying the message of the next loan, when it is announced, to the people of the United States?
> With best wishes I am
> Cordially yours,
> W. G. McADOO.

War Work Under Way in Boston

Louis B. Mayer, in Charge of the New England Campaign, Addresses Massachusetts Exhibitors.

President Louis B. Mayer of the New England Metro and the American Feature Film Company of Boston has started a vigorous campaign in New England to aid the National Government in its war campaign of publicity. Mr. Mayer was given the assignment of taking full charge of the New England campaign by William A. Brady, chairman of the motion picture committee.

One of Mr. Mayer's first acts was to address the members of the Massachusetts branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America at a special session on Tuesday, August 13, at the league headquarters, 127 Pleasant street, Boston. A large gathering was in attendance.

Mr. Mayer was introduced by President Ernest H. Horstmann. His address was full of instructive points on how the exhibitors could play an important part in aiding the Government in war times. He told them of the great service which President Wilson expected of them and stated that by their sincere co-operation the motion picture industry should be able to help the Government materially in the vigorous prosecution and conduct of the war.

"The motion picture," Mr. Mayer said, "has become the great intermediary between the public and the Government at Washington. By throwing instructive reading matter upon the screen in every motion picture house invaluable aid to the government in its various propagandas such as food conservation and liberty bond sales may be given."

Mr. Mayer, with Mrs. Alice Rice Carroll, a prominent Massachusetts exhibitor and well known lecturer, is mapping out a program, which will be put into operation in the near future. Mr. Mayer announces he will be glad to receive suggestions of any sort from New England exhibitors in regard to this new movement.

The first publicity matter to be thrown on New England screens will be literature regarding the movement for shoppers to carry home their own bundles, rather than have them delivered. It is expected this movement will meet with success.

The Massachusetts Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America went on record at the session as supporting the Government in its work by co-operating in every way possible with Mr. Mayer and Mrs. Carroll.

Mrs. Carroll is one of the few women exhibitors in Massachusetts, or in fact New England. She controls the Home theater in Everett and the Regent theater in Arlington, both of which houses are doing a big business, owing to her unceasing efforts to make her patrons happy and give them the show they want. She has also been an active worker in women's club circles and led the movement against motion picture censorship in New England. It was Mrs. Carroll's work and lectures which she gave before the women's clubs in several New Hampshire cities that killed censorship in that State.

The Roll of Honor

EARL METCALFE, one of the oldest of the screen players, has been commissioned second lieutenant in the national army, having been graduated last week from the Plattsburg training camp. Lieutenant Metcalfe has been receiving the congratulations of his fellow-members of the Screen Club, among whom there is a firm belief that promotion will quickly come to him when he gets into real work.

Paul McAllister, author and screen player, has been commissioned a captain of infantry following the recent graduation exercises at the Plattsburg camp.

Victor Smith, known to his friends as "Vic," long time studio manager and general manager of the Vitagraph, has been commissioned a second lieutenant in the Quartermasters Department.

Bud Fisher, creator of Mutt and Jeff, is off for Plattsburg training camp this week. W. A. Brook, manager of the Bud Fisher Company, has been ordered to Governors Island for a course of training for the Quartermasters' Department.

Kent Watson, correspondent of the Moving Picture World at Dallas, has left for the army training camp at Fort Worth.

Robert Warwick, screen player, leaves this week for Plattsburg to enter the officers' training corps.

Alan J. Bachrach, late of the V-L-S-E sales force, is being showered with congratulations upon having won his shoulder straps following the three months' course of training which he has been undergoing at Fort Myer, Va. Mr. Bachrach is a second lieutenant of the new National Army, and has been assigned to the Quartermaster Corps for active duty. The new lieutenant has had experience from both sides of the business, having been manager of the Casino theater when that house was operated as a picture and vaudeville theater by the Brylawski interests, and with other houses owned and operated by them.

Noman M. Dickson, traveling representative for K-E-S-E out of the Indianapolis office, who joined the officers' reserve training corps at Fort Benjamin Harrison, has received a commission as first lieutenant, and expects to see active service soon.

* * *

Victor A. Nulty, for many years associated with Kessel & Bauman—The New York Motion Picture Company—has been promoted to the rank of corporal in the Second Machine Gun Troop of the First Texas Cavalry, at present stationed at Hillsboro, Texas. Corporal McNulty writes: "I don' know how or where I am going, but it makes no difference, because my companions are rattle-snake eaters and German killers."

Asta Nielsen, Danish Actress in America

A FEW years ago, when pictures made in Europe were common on the American screens, Asta Nielsen's abilities as a vampire and comedy lead were recognized by most patrons. She has appeared in Nordisk and other Continental brands and is of the black-haired, black-eyed type and rather slender. A story is told of a patron new to pictures who asked, "Who is that holding a stick up in front of the screen?" "That isn't any stick," he was admonished, "that's Asta Nielsen." She does give that up-and-down effect with a tight fitting silk dress on and has the ability to make excellent comedy use of it. But her mobility of countenance and the power of registering with dramatic effectiveness all kinds of emotions has given her high standing as an artist. She may make use of tears, but they are not needed to show her grief. Among so many impressions as a screen critic gets, it is hard to remember more than a general impression of work seen three years ago; but the writer has enjoyed many of her pictures and terror and laughter are equally convincing in her.

Asta Nielsen.

She was born in Copenhagen not many years ago and began her theatrical career at the Royal theater playing Ibsen characters. Then at the New theater, also in Copenhagen, she made a distinct hit as "Trilby." Her first film appearance was in a picture made for the Nordisk in 1912 and has worked under several brands since. She arrived in America this week on the "United States," a Danish steamer, and is at the Biltmore at present. The war has, of course, given the death blow to artistic activity in Europe. Miss Nielsen probably finds it a good time to take a vacation. She intends to visit the Pacific Coast and may go on to Japan. It is affirmed that she has not come here under contract and is not connected with any film maker on this side of the water.

"THE SPY" AT THE GLOBE.

William Fox will present "The Spy," George Bronson-Howard's sensational expose of the nation-wide workings of the German spy system in this country, in which Dustin Farnum appears in the stellar role, at the Globe theater, beginning Monday night, August 27. "Jack and the Beanstalk" will close there on August 26. "The Conqueror," which was announced to follow "Jack and the Beanstalk" will be seen later on Broadway.

"The Spy" is released as a special production, under a separate contract, by William Fox, and bookings can be fixed now with any branch manager of the Fox Film Corporation.

Association's All-Star Picture a Winner

Manufacturers' Review of Great Scenes from Screen Productions Is a Most Interesting Novelty

A WHALE of a subject is the all-star composite production assembled by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and shown to the trade at the Strand theater on the morning of Thursday, August 16. There was a large gathering of film men present, and they all were enthusiastic over the remarkable entertaining qualities of the great scenes from great screen plays. Never but once before had anything similar been attempted, and that was by a single company. Here were scenes taken from the works of a number of manufacturers. President William A. Brady of the association announced in a short address before the pictures were shown that there would be exhibited but three of the five reels it is intended to release. The two others were not yet ready.

The three reels shown were "Love Scenes from Great Screen Plays," "Great Fights in Motion Pictures" and "Daredevil Deeds of Motion Picture Artists." The two remaining reels are "Great Acting Moments" and "Funny Moments of Funny Stars."

Mr. Brady stated in his preliminary talk that the picture had been contributed by all the manufacturers, but that by no means did the present showing represent all that were to come. Independent of the matter contained in the two reels that were not to be shown there were to be contributions from Goldwyn, which company would present one scene from each of its earlier subjects. Paramount, too, with a rich store of productions, would add its bit to the whole

"In assembling these pictures," said the head of the National Association, "our object is to raise a fund for the legitimate legislative work of the association. In the past year we have had to combat adverse legislation in forty-eight states, and we were successful. We will probably meet more of the same sort in the coming year, but it is also probable we will have more friends than we have had in the past.

"At the present moment there are over a dozen committees of your industry working in Washington in co-operation with the Army and Navy departments, with the Food Commission, with all the factors of war activity. Our men are giving up their time and money without recompense, making daily and weekly trips to Washington.

"The picture you are to see is to be issued, say, one reel a month for a period of five months, or oftener if it should be the wish of those who purchase it." Mr. Brady then described how the subject would be strengthened by the addition of the productions of other manufacturers. "These pictures," he went on, "which will comprise the work of every star of real prominence in the United States, will be sold for the benefit of the association."

Tender Moments in the Love Scenes.

In the first reel, "Love Scenes From Great Screen Plays," there were fourteen subjects. It is purely a matter of individual opinion as to which of these was the greatest, but there can be no question that the scenes from Vitagraph's "The Christian" stood out. Earle Williams and Edith Storey were the players, and truly it was a great moment from a great story. Then, too, there was a real touch in the flash from Mutual's "Youth's Endearing Young Charms," in which Mary Miles Minter shone. Context was unnecessary to establish the situation. It spoke for itself; it all was eloquent of life, of the persistence, the determination of a woman not to be scorned by the man she loved.

There was more than a reminiscent interest in the scene showing Mary Pickford and Henry Walthall in Biograph's "Ramona." Not only was this an extract from a picture, the making of which was the occasion and the reason of Biograph journeying to the Pacific Coast for the first time; not only was it taken from a subject conceded up to that time, 1910, to be the most expensive single reel ever made, but it showed us Miss Pickford in her teens—not so long ago at that—and Mr. Walthall at the beginning of a screen career destined to be notable.

Other scenes in the opening reel, and every last one of them of interest, were Rupert Julian and Ella Hall, in Bluebird's "The Bugler of Algiers"; Carlyle Blackwell and Ethel Clayton, in World Film's "A Woman's Way"; Donald Cameron and Lillian Walker, in Vitagraph's "Kitty Mackay"; Franklyn Farnum, in Universal's "The Woman He Feared"; Anita Stewart and Evart Overton, in Vitagraph's "The Glory of Yolanda"; Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, in "Romeo and Juliet"; Clara Kimball Young, in World Film's "The Dark Silence"; Madame Petrova, in Metro's "The Black Butterfly"; Alice Brady, in World Film's "La Vie de Boheme," and Harold Lockwood and May Allison, in Metro's "Pidgin Island."

Some Hot Scraps With Real Thrills.

Real thrills there were in the series of great fights. One of the shorter but decidedly picturesque was that of Neal Hart in Universal's "The Raid." Douglas Fairbanks was shown in a red-hot muss from Triangle's "Reggie Mixes In." It was one gem out of a rather wide choice in the same subject. It was enough—enough to show what the robust player can put over when he sets out to do things; and it demonstrated his ability to pick opponents who can take as well as give punishment. Jack Sherrill in World Film's "Then I'll Come Back to You" staged a mill that held attention tight. Then there were William S. Hart and House Peters in Triangle's "Between Men"; E. H. Sothern in Vitagraph's "An Enemy to the King"; Robert Warwick, in World Film's "Alias Jimmy Valentine"; Mr. Bushman, in Metro's "Pennington's Choice"; Alice Brady, in World Film's "Tangled Fates." Last and by no means least, there was Charles Chaplin and his robust associate in the escalator scene from Mutual's "The Floor Walker." It is just as funny as when it was released and displays Chaplin at his best. It is a situation to make even an exhibitor laugh.

Regret was expressed by some of those present that the battle between William Farnum and Tom Santschi in Selig's "The Spoilers" had not been included. Executive Secretary Elliott of the association said he had written Mr. Selig asking for the excerpt. Also on Mr. Elliott's list was the fight between William S. Hart and Robert Edeson in Triangle's "On the Night Stage."

When the Players Take Risks.

The final reel shown was devoted to "Daredevil Deeds of Motion Pictures." There was an even dozen extracts shown, and the incidents were of a wide variety. Helen Holmes put over a train thriller in a Universal subject. Then there were Alice Brady, in World Film's "Miss Petticoats"; Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne, in Metro's "The Great Secret"; Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison, in Metro's "The River of Romance"; Miss Bayne, in Metro's "Pennington's Choice"; Joseph Kilgour and Virginia Pearson, in Fox's "The Turn of the Road;" Charles Richman, in Vitagraph's "The Secret Kingdom" and the same company's "'A Goat Without Horns"; Mary Anderson, in Vitagraph's "The Dangers of Doris" and "The Gang"; Edith Storey, in "Aladdin from Broadway," and a scene from the storm on shipboard from Triangle's "Aloha Oe"—a finely staged spectacle.

It will be noted that some companies have supplied a large number of extracts. With the expansion of the list, as outlined by Mr. Brady in his introductory address, the series is bound to be of even greater interest. One inevitable result of the showing of these "bits" from so many subjects is to arouse curosity among picturegoers to see the story surrounding these "punches," which, in spite of being separated from their context, are able so strongly to grip the interest.

Perhaps it was this phase of the showing that was uppermost in the mind of one feminine observer who remarked at the conclusion: "But it is all so tantalizing!" Then, again, she made have had in mind those tenderer moments revealed in the first thousand feet.

WALT WHITMAN AS SOUTHERN PLANTER.

Walt Whitman, veteran character actor, will soon make his appearance as a Southern planter, wearing long coat, checkered trousers and wide black hat, in a Triangle production, "The Tar-Heel Warrior," directed by E. Mason Hopper. A company of colored players has been engaged

NEW JEWEL FOR BROADWAY THEATER.

Jewels Productions, Inc., will put into the Broadway Theatre, starting August 28, a super-feature in five reels, titled "Sirens of the Sea." Allen Hollbar produced the offering after the scenario by Grace Helen Bailey. Louise Loveland and Jack Mulhall will be seen in the leading roles.

Nicholas Power Company Wins Suit

Action in United States Court for Infringement of Fire Shutter Brought by LeRoy and Baird Finally Disposed of by Judge Manton—Power Company Wins on All Contentions.

THE opinion in the case of Jean A. LeRoy and Chester R. Baird against Nicholas Power Company, handed down last week by Judge Manton in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, terminated litigation which has been virtually pending for the last three and one-half years. The suit was based on a patent for fire shutter granted to LeRoy on October 7, 1913, No. 1,075,215, and which was claimed by LeRoy to be infringed by the fire shutter known as the Nicholas Power Style "B" shutter used on all the Power Cameragraphs in recent years.

The litigation was started by two suits instituted shortly after the grant of the patent in the fall of 1913, against two exhibitors using Power No. 6 Cameragraphs in theaters, in the city of Buffalo. These suits were brought without knowledge of the Nicholas Power Company, but as soon as the company received notice of them, they took over the entire defense.

After it became known that the defense of these suits had been undertaken by the Nicholas Power Company, the plaintiffs dismissed the Buffalo suits of their own motion and instituted proceedings in the Federal Court in this city against the Nicholas Power Company directly. The suit came to trial in the latter part of April and the decision handed down is a complete victory to the Nicholas Power Company on every point which they urged against the patent.

The Nicholas Power Company rested their defense on three principal grounds; first, that Nicholas Power was the first and original inventor of the shutter and not LeRoy; second, that the shutter had been used publicly for more than two years before the LeRoy application for patent; and third, that the LeRoy patent was invalid in view of numerous prior patents on fire shutters, principal among them the patents of the Edison Company.

Mr. Power testified as to his invention of the shutter more than eleven years ago and was corroborated as to his early work by witnesses from the Power factory, also by Mr. Timothy of the Department of Gas, Water Supply and Electricity, Mr. Cecil of the New York Herald, and others, Mr. Timothy stating that the first fire shutter ever presented to his department was one invented by Mr. Power. The rebuttal of the plaintiff to this evidence is summed up by the Court in the decision in the following language:

> The only contradiction of this is the testimony of Bogdanffy, a former employee of Power, who claimed that he made the drawing for this shutter and showed it to Mr. Power and directed its construction. The record of the City Water Department shows that Shutter "B," which Bogdanffy says he suggested to Mr. Power in April, 1907, was submitted to the Department for approval or disapproval in December, 1906, and the witness (Mr. Timothy) called from that Department, is therefore confirmatory of the claim that it was made prior to March 12, 1908.
> I regard Bogdanffy's claim that he made a drawing of the parts in co-operation with Mr. Power (indeed it is even claimed that he was the real inventor of the Power Shutter "B") as not well founded. His testimony is in direct conflict with many circumstances portrayed by the evidence which cannot be erroneous and point with unerring certainty to the untruthfulness of his claim.

The Court's opinion that the patent was invalid in view of the various patents prior to LeRoy is summed up in the following clause:

> The cases are uniform in holding that there is no invention merely selecting and fitting together the most desirable parts of different machines in the same art, if each operates the same in the new machine as it did in the old and effects the same result. In view of this condition of the prior art, I am of the opinion that the claim of the defendant, that LeRoy's patent is anticipated by the art, and is, therefore, void of invention, is well founded.

NEW COMEDY PLAYERS IN UNIVERSAL FILMS.

Among the new players recently engaged to work at Universal City are Mattie Cummont and Henry Murdock, well-known laugh-makers, who will be under the direction of F. F. Beaudine. Mattie is the short, roly-poly woman who has been working recently with the Fox company and with Max Linder. Henry Murdock has been working with the Kalem company for a year or more, first with its Florida company and more recently with Ham and Bud in California.

King Vidor, formerly scenario editor of the LaSalle company, has been engaged to write for the oddly assorted pair.

Another new comedy man to join the Universal is Al Santell, who has been added to the directing staff to alternate with Craig Hutchinson in staging comedies in which Dave Morris and Gladys Tennison are the principal players.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of Aug. 19 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses—The Revolution in Russia at the Rialto.

FOR the first time in the history of the Rialto all photoplays were eliminated from the program the week of Aug 19 and the dramatic spectacle, The Revolution in Russia, was given the place of honor, supplemented by scenes from the Russian battle fronts in the Caucasus, along the Black Sea, and on the southwest frontier. The films are owned by the Skobeleff Committee for the Relief of Russian Wounded and Prisoners of War and the proceeds from their exhibition will go to the committee's relief fund. The pictures are official and bear the endorsement of the Russian Commission now in Washington.

The soloists were Greek Evans and Alberto Bachmann.

British War Pictures at The Strand.

The Strand Theater presented motion pictures of the Germans retreating at the Battle of Arras. They are official and authentic British War pictures and are shown through special arrangements with the Official Government Pictures, Inc. All branches of the service are seen in actual operation in this great drive, which proved so disastrous to the Germans. Another feature was Billie Burke in her first Paramount picture, "The Mysterious Miss Terry," an adaptation from a story by Gelett Burgess. Miss Burke's impersonation of Mavis Terry demonstrates a novel method of finding both happiness and a husband. The cast includes Thomas Meighan, Walter Heirs, Gerald Smith, George Wright and Bessie Learn. An animated cartoon entitled "Colonel Heeza Liar's Temperance Lecture," and the Strand Topical Review, were also shown.

On the musical program were Grace Hoffman and Antone Lescault.

"Pay Me" at the Broadway.

This second week of the engagement of "Pay Me," the Jewel five-part western melodrama with Dorothy Phillips at the head of the cast, indicates that it has caught on at the Broadway theater.

Eighty-First St. Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-First St. theater the following pictures were shown.

On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Wm. Desmond was seen in "Master of His Home," a Triangle Komedy, "His Cool Nerve" being on the program. On Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Enid Bennett, in "They're Off," and the Keystone Comedy, "Thirst," were the picture features.

GAUMONT-MUTUAL WEEKLY.

Spectators who see the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly No. 138, the current issue, will have an opportunity of seeing President and Mrs. Wilson at close range—with Secretary of War Baker thrown in for good measure. The occasion is the graduating exercises of the student officers at the training camp at Fort Myers, Va. Major General Scott, who recently returned from Russia, is also with the President.

War pictures again predominate in Mutual Weekly No. 138. Sea lane guards which put in at an Atlantic port are shown in their drab war paint. Government officials investigate a new aero propeller, which meets all atmospheric conditions and also lifts an aeroplane 2,000 feet a minute.

At Washington, D. C., Mrs. Lansing, wife of the Secretary of State, gives a luncheon to the ladies of the Cabinet, where only dried foods are served.

At least one cantonment will not suffer from a lack of lumber. This issue of the Mutual Weekly shows a huge raft containing eight million feet of lumber on an ocean voyage of 1,500 miles to San Diego, Cal. Another California picture shows Uncle Sam in the hog raising business, an undertaking necessary to assure food for the National Army.

Miss Edna Goodrich, the beautiful Mutual star who will soon appear in "Reputation," finds time between the taking of scenes to make bandages for the Red Cross. A Gaumont cameraman took the picture at the Empire studio at Glendale, L. I.

On the same reel are some authoritative styles in footwear, showing the latest wrinkles in shoes.

Margery Wilson's Play Completed.

"Mountain Dew," the first starring vehicle of Margery Wilson, has been completed and will be released on the Triangle program early in September. The star appears as a girl of the Kentucky Cumberlands where feudists thrive. Charlie Gunn, the most popular of Triangle leading men, has the chief masculine role that of a schoolmaster.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

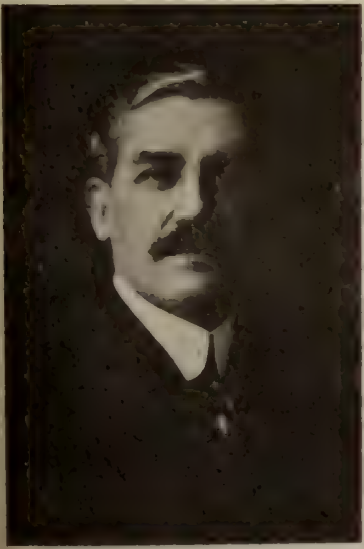
WRITE US EARLY AND OFTEN

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD carries the most complete record of Exhibitors' News. This department aims at being the fullest and fairest chronicle of all the important doings in the ranks of organized exhibitors. To keep the department as complete and as useful as it is now we request the secretaries of all organizations to favor us with reports of all the news. Coming events in the ranks of the organized exhibitors are best advertised in this department of the Moving Picture World.

Big Round-Up at Ocean City

Many Southern Exhibitors Will Be There—Prominent Men in Trade to Attend.

AMONG the prominent men in the film industry who will attend the joint convention and exposition to be held by the State Exhibitors' Association of North and South Carolina, Virginia, Maryland and District of Columbia to start on August 30th and end the night of September the 1st, are President Lee A. Ochs, of the M. P. E. L. A.; Samuel Trigger, prominent exhibitor of New York City; Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the American Exhibitors' Association; I. E. Mosher, prominent theater owner of Buffalo, New York; Frank J. Rembusch, of Shelbyville, Indiana; Harry Crandall, of the Washington syndicate of theaters, and Guy Wonders, of Baltimore. Governor Stuart, of Virginia, has also accepted an invitation to attend and deliver an address before the convention.



Jake Wells

The idea of the joint convention and exposition originated with Jake Wells, of the great Wells chain of theaters, and now president of the American Exhibitors' Association. Mr. Wells' idea is to discuss at this convention only matters which are more of a local nature than national, and to come to certain agreement between the different states as to taking action on various matters affecting the theater owners of the territory embraced, so that concerted action can be obtained through strong committees selected from the different states, when necessary to present matters before legislative bodies, manufacturers, distributers or other interests. Mr. Wells is largely interested in each of the states which is to be represented and is exerting every effort to make the convention the greatest gathering of theater owners ever held in the South. Harry Bernstein, of Richmond, Va., is in active charge of arrangements.

The idea of an exposition in connection with the convention is not with an idea of making money, but simply to help clear up certain items of heavy expense incident to the convention, and also to make the convention more attractive and tend to largely increase the attendance. Exhibits have been contracted for by every exchange serving the territory covered and the various trade papers will also be represented and have booths. Attendance of a dozen or more picture stars has been insured, and they will be guests of honor at the banquet and movie ball to take place on the last night.

American Association Men Meet

Affairs of New Exhibitors' Organization Discussed and Attitude Toward National Association of Industry Defined—Will Meet at Ocean City, Va.

AN IMPORTANT meeting of several of the officials of the newly formed American Exhibitors' Association was held at the offices of the association, Times building, New York, on Thursday, August 16. Those present were President Jake Wells, Vice-president Guy Wonders, Treasurer William Fait, Jr., General Manager Charles C. Pettijohn and Harry Crandall. Among other things it was decided to call a meeting of the association to be held at Ocean City, Va., at the same time as the convention of the Virginia League, when exhibitors from many southern states will be present. The date of this meeting is August 30.

Arrangements were also made to take a lease on a suite of rooms on the 20th floor of the Times Building, which will be the national headquarters of the association. General Manager Charles C. Pettijohn will have charge of this office and will establish at once a bureau for the adjustment of such complaints as may be referred to him by members of the association. Mr. Pettijohn's wide experience as a lawyer will enable him to be of invaluable assistance to members.

Regarding the matter of affiliation with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry General Manager Pettijohn was instructed to define the attitude of the American Exhibitors' Association toward the N. A. M. P. I. In accordance with those instructions the following letter was written:

To the President and Directors of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry.

Gentlemen: In order that the attitude of the American Exhibitors' Association toward the National Association of Motion Picture Industry may be clearly understood, and that the directors may have definitely in mind our position with reference to what has been termed "our application to affiliate with the National Association of Motion Picture Industry." I am instructed by our directors to write you the following:

First—The American Exhibitors' Association, on July 20, 1917, tendered, through Wm. A. Brady, not as the president of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry, but as the designated official, by reason of his selection by President Wilson, our hearty co-operation and services to help carry on the work set aside by our government for the motion picture industry during the present crisis. We are building a business organization of exhibitors to the end that this may be effectively done and results obtained.

Second—We care not whether we have one or fifty votes, either as directors or members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, because voting inside the industry can not interest us.

Third—We are asking nothing of you, and are offering only our affiliation and assistance in a stand with the other branches of the industry for what is healthful, and against that which unjustly attacks.

Coming League and Other Exhibitors' Conventions

(Secretaries Are Requested to Send Dates and Particulars Promptly)

Virginia Exhibitors at Ocean City....................................August 30, 31 and Sept. 1
Chesley Toney, secretary, Richmond.
Maritime Provinces League at St. John, N. B.................................September 9 and 10

Fourth—On the other hand, we will not, at any time, by any unit, vote or combination of votes, permit ourselves to be bound to support any act, measure or effort that is not for the best interests of real exhibitors of America, who comprise our membership, nor for or against any faction in any other branch of the industry that may hereafter develop.

Fifth—We desire to have it clearly understood that our services are tendered, and that no application is made at this time for votes, or for any change in the by-laws of your organization.

Sixth—We ask that the directors at the Meeting August 27, 1917, either promptly reject or accept our proffer of affiliation, assistance and co-operation in such manner as our position may be clearly and definitely interpreted by our officers and entire membership.

Ochs Statements Refuted.

Percy Wells of North Carolina Takes Issue With Maligners of American Association.

INDIGNATION is expressed in strong terms by Percy W. Wells, North Carolina State President of the American Exhibitors' Association at the length to which Lee A. Ochs is using the Trade Review since the convention in an endeavor to belittle his "enemies" at the convention, which he insists on characterizing as "bolters." Mr. Wells is of the opinion that the Exhibitors' Trade Review had best leave off the monopolization of its columns as a medium for the personal laudation of Lee A. Ochs if it expects to exist and be accepted as a bona fide trade publication of the industry.

"It is passing strange," stated Mr. Wells to a representative of the Moving Picture World, "that Mr. Ochs' paper cannot obtain statements for publication denouncing the 'deplorable tactics of the minority' except from those who have been fixed with offices in the Ochs League. This week's issue of the Ochs mouthpiece has an article purporting to come from Nebraska, but which bears certain earmarks of phraseology which savor strongly of a certain member of the Trade Review staff, which starts off with a eulogy of Mr. Ochs and ends with a denunciation of the members of the American Exhibitors' Association. Mr. Thomas, who is supposed to have spoken the words, it will be noted, was made third vice-president by the Ochs machine. It is to laugh at his statement that 'not meaning to boost myself, but the new organization looks good to me!'

"I would like to submit to Messrs. Thomas, Eager and the other gentlemen, who are blindly following a leader whom they have fallen in with, a few figures that have been obtained by Martin Quigley, of Chicago, relative to that 178 to 40 majority which they have grasped as their only chance for an argument. The city of Chicago voted 20 delegates on the convention floor, which would represent 488 theaters, whereas the City License Bureau of Chicago, where the theater owners have to pay their amusement tax, shows that there are only 378 theaters in the city of Chicago, this including theaters which offer only stage attractions. According to the Chicago representation on the floor of the convention there must be 488 bona fide theater owners in Chicago—and every one of them members of the Ochs organization!"

Furthermore the records show that up to July 1st the exhibitors' organization's roster in Chicago showed an inclusive membership of 122 men. Of the 122 men listed 55 are merely managers—not owners—exchange attaches and several men who formerly owned theaters and at present are not actively engaged in any branch of the industry. And only 80 of the 122 have paid dues. Of the Illinois state branch of the Ochs organization there are twelve members, six of whom have never paid dues.

"Another instance of the steam roller scandal is found in the Boston delegation which voted 30 delegates when the Boston license report shows them only entitled to 9. Mr. Ochs, however, had apparently visited Boston before the convention and had acknowledged through the Trade Review that he had promised to give the next convention to Boston, notwithstanding the fact that the convention is supposed to have the privilege of voting on its convention city from the floor. What do you call that but gag rule?

"When 87 men walked out of the convention hall at the Coliseum," concluded Mr. Wells, "and left 74 delegates there, we absolutely had a majority of that convention with us, and I defy anyone to prove otherwise."

Mr. Wells states that he has been in correspondence with many representative exhibitors in the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia and Georgia, and that almost unanimously every theater owner who has been approached has come out strongly for the A. E. A., which, to use Mr. Wells' words, "is an organization with no commercial alliance, nor any kind of the exhibitor, first, last and always."

MARYLAND EXHIBITORS MEET.

On Sunday night, August 12, a special meeting was called and held by the Maryland Exhibitors' League at their headquarters, in the New Theater Building, 210 West Lexington street, at which reports were submitted by the delegates to the Chicago convention, including Thos. D. Goldberg, J. Louis Rome and Guy L. Wonders and the committee which was working on the projected moving of the film exchanges from Washington to Baltimore, including F. A. Hornig, Louis Schlichter and L. A. DeHoff. Owing to the arrangements for a premiere screening of the Fox feature, "Jack and the Beanstalk," which was held immediately after this meeting, being in charge of Mr. DeHoff, the manager of the New theater, he was not able to attend and act in his official capacity as secretary of the League, so E. B. McCurdy was appointed secretary in his place for the evening. The well arranged private presentation of "Jack and the Beanstalk" took place after the meeting of the League. Among those who attended the meeting and the screening were: Guy L. Wonders, Louis Schlichter, L. A. DeHoff, William M. Tyler, Nick Burns, W. Albers, B. Rosenbauer, M. E. Berger, Joseph Brodie, W. E. Stumpf, E. B. McCurdy, Paul Emmert, Thomas D. Goldberg, Miss T. Marks, Messrs. Cook, Emerick and Volbreck, Harry Lewy, Harry Woods, L. Benesch.

New Exhibitors' Organization.

Asociated Theaters, Incorporated, Formed at Minneapolis for Booking Purposes.

WITH two hundred theaters enrolled and determined not to start its actual business activities until one thousand theaters are stockholding members, "Associated Theaters, Incorporated," was formed at the Hotel Dyckman, Minneapolis, Minnesota, Tuesday, August 14. The following officers were elected, each of whom is also a member of the board of directors: President, H. L. Hartman, Mandan, North Dakota; vice-president, Forest Secor, Forest City, Iowa; treasurer, Henry P. Greene, Minneapolis, Minnesota; secretary, William S. Smith, Menominee, Wisconsin; chairman board of directors, Chas. W. Gates, Aberdeen, South Dakota; general manager, Thomas J. Hamlin, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

The "Hamlin Plan" of booking was adopted, which is intended to conduct the booking of film, supplies and equipment at a minimum expense and solve the present high cost of marketing and distributing by co-operative collective merchandising.

Fiscal offices were opened at once in the Lumber Exchange building, Minneapolis, but the actual opening of the proposed large central Minneapolis exchange and various sub-stations for inspection and shipping may not take place until December, according to Mr. Hamlin.

President Hartman is also president of the North Dakota State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. Vice-President Secor is secretary-treasurer of the Iowa Organization of Exhibitors and Exchangemen. Treasurer Greene, of Minnesota, is a director of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest. Secretary Smith is a prominent Wisconsin exhibitor and his brother-partner was a secretary of the early Wisconsin exhibitors' organization. Chairman Chas. W. Gates is vice-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest. General Manager Hamlin was the founder of Amusements, a territorial theater trade weekly of Minneapolis.

"We have incorporated for $100,000 under the laws of South Dakota, as "Associated Theaters Incorporated," declared Mr. Hamlin. "We have no connection either directly or indirectly with any other organization or group in the motion picture industry.

"No exhibitor is expected to subscribe for more stock than what he would ordinarily pay for ten days' film rental, and no theatre can hold more than $1,500 worth of stock.

"Neither myself or any member of the board are drawing a cent of salary and the entire expense of organizing will not equal ten per cent.

"We expect to do a film rental business alone of fully $50,000 a week," continued General Manager Hamlin, 'and are incorporated to produce, buy, sell, lease and rent film, equipment and supplies, to buy, sell and operate theaters and to book films, vaudeville, tabloids and road attractions."

OKLAHOMA MEETING CALLED.

Members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Oklahoma Branch, will meet at the Lee-Huckins Hotel, Oklahoma City, on August 21, Tuesday. All theater owners and managers in the state are invited to attend, as there is business of vital importance to the industry to be discussed.

This meeting is of more than ordinary importance, as it will in all probability determine whether Oklahoma will remain in the League or join the newly organized American Exhibitors' Association. For this reason it is hoped that every exhibitor in the state will be present to voice his views on this matter. L. W. BROPHY, Secretary.

Composers' Society Moves Against Brooklynites

Three Exhibitors Haled to Court—League to Co-operate With Musicians and to Appeal to Congress.

THE American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers is pushing its campaign against those exhibitors who are using the music copyrighted by its members. Just at present its legal hand is being laid on Brooklyn men. Last week William Brandt, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was served with a summons complaining of an alleged violation of the copyright act and asking damages in the sum of $3,000. The specific offense cited is that his musician played the music of "Naughty, Naughty, Naughty." The latter allegation pained Mr. Brandt at least as much as did the general charge. The executive secretary is the staid head of a family, the father of three children, and his New Albany theater is a family house. He will enter a denial.

Two other Brooklyn prominent exhibitors were summoned similarly to Mr. Brandt. Warde & Glynn, owners of the Century and the Alhambra, in widely separated parts of Brooklyn, both large houses, and Charles Cranides, one of the directors of the Brooklyn league, were served with papers. The alleged damages in each of the latter instances also was $3,000 and counsel fees. The actions are brought in the Eastern District of the Circuit Court of the United States before Judge Chatfield. The defendants are given twenty days in which to make answer. Goldsmith & Rosenthal are representing the exhibitors. They will be paid from the music fund created by the New York exhibitors through the $3 tax levied on the picture men of the state.

On Thursday of last week Mr. Brandt and Sam Grant, of Boston, who has been active in his city in combating the American Society, called on President Weber of the International Musicians. The Boston idea was explained to Mr Weber and his co-operation was asked to the end that the same methods may be adopted throughout the country.

In Boston, Mr. Grant explained, a hundred theaters have agreed not to use taxable music. An agreement also was sought with the Musicians' Union whereby the members of the latter organization will refrain from using any music on which a tax is charged unless they are specifically instructed by the managers of the houses. The Boston organization took formal action in line with the suggestion and adopted a resolution declaring any member who did to the contrary should be subject to discipline. The Boston organization notified its members that lack of knowledge of the law would serve as no excuse, that they must be on their guard. It is expected the action of the Boston local will be adopted by all the New England organizations and that there will be full co-operation with the league.

Mr. Weber assured Messrs. Brandt and Grant he would be glad to co-operate with the league in having musicians throughout the country adopt the Boston view—that no licensed music be played except on the instructions of the house manager.

There is in preparation a bill for presentation to Congress amending the present copyright law. It is Mr. Weber's opinion the national legislature never intended to make possible the present situation in the music business.

It is reported there is a measure of dissension among the members of the American Society over the apportionment of the money collected from amusement purveyors. It is said one of the most successful of the publishers is asking why those members of the organization whose product is not particularly profitable should be permitted to share and share alike with him.

LEAGUE'S EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE TO MEET.

William Brandt, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has received word from all of the national officers of the organization as well as the members of the executive committee that they will be in New York for the coming meeting to be held on August 25. Eugene M. Clarke of the executive committee will come from Mississippi and Frank D. Eager will make the trip from Nebraska. From Chicago will come First Vice-president Joseph Hopp, Financial Secretary William J. Sweeney, Executive Committeeman Alfred Hamburger and Robert Levy.

After settling several important matters to come before the committee the exhibitor members of the Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will attend a stated meeting of that organization.

Trigger Resigns

Formally Relinquishes the Office of President of Manhattan Local Exhibitors' Organization.

THE special meeting of Manhattan Local No. 1 of the Exhibitors' League to receive the resignation of Sam H. Trigger from its presidency was held at its rooms on Tuesday, August 14. Mr. Trigger called the meeting to order and immediately proceeded to business with the following address:

"Gentlemen: It is a most unpleasant task to be asked by gentlemen purporting to be my friends to explain my conduct. This is the first time in my life that friends have questioned my God-given right to exercise my conscience and my judgment.

"As your president, I entered the hall at the Chicago convention in your behalf and for you. I was not permitted to vote and I was not permitted to speak either as your National vice-chairman or as your president. Was that the treatment you wanted me to have, and did you expect me to suffer such insults? These are two questions, my friends, for you to answer.

"Not being permitted to take part in the deliberations of the convention, refused the right to voice your sentiments and your desires or to vote on any measure, I realized I was not a delegate and left the convention. For this act I have no apologies to offer. That I have aligned myself with the American Exhibitors' Association needs no explanation except that I am glad to do my bit in this organization of business men that really stands for something, and that I believe will accomplish something for you and for me as exhibitors.

"I now hand to our secretary my resignation as president of this local. This act I will also explain. I should not continue as president of a local that is affiliated with a national organization that I do not believe in. A few of you have indicated that you prefer a new president. You should have one. This resignation I owe you, but my personal liberty to exercise my best judgment at all times I do not.

"Now, boys, that my unpleasant task is over, let me just say this in conclusion: Forget our political differences, and let's be the same old friends and pals we have always been.

"I care not for presidencies, but my friends I love. As fellow exhibitors, continue to do as you have done for fifteen years—call on your old daddy day or night—and even if I have turned my sixty-fifth milestone, you will find me so full of enthusiasm for my friends that you can still call me 'Pal.'

"To those of you who join me in the American Exhibitors' Association, I say, 'God bless you.' To those of you who do not, I say, "God bless you, too.'"

Several of the members expressed their regrets at the action of Mr. Trigger and assured him they would ever hold him their friend. It was made clear while Mr. Trigger has resigned as president of the local he had not resigned from membership in it. Nothing was said on that point. The meeting then adjourned to meet again at the call of the first vice-president, C. R. Martineau, to whom Mr. Trigger handed the gavel.

Mr. Trigger's formal resignation was as follows:

To Manhattan Local No. 1.
M. P. E. L. of America:

Gentlemen.—I herewith tender to you my resignation as President of Manhattan Local No. 1, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, same to take effect at once.

(Signed) S. H. TRIGGER, President.

PRESIDENT MARTINEAU'S ACCEPTANCE.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir: In assuming the presidency of Manhattan Local No. 1 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, I take this opportunity to pledge my support to the National League and all its officials and will use my best efforts to promote a closer bond of friendship between all local exhibitors whether in the organization or not.

It will be my greatest desire to protect the individual members from unfair trade methods and abuse and at the same time to work for the best interest of the entire industry.

I will endeavor to see that all differences between branches of the industry and exhibitors are properly arbitrated. I will be at the service of the exhibitors at all times and will do my utmost to assist them in protecting their interests.

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF A.
Manhattan Local No. 1.
C. R. Martineau, President.

BOSTON MOVING AHEAD ON CONVENTION PLANS

Samuel Grant, head of the committee of arrangements for the Boston convention and exposition next year, in a visit to New York last week stated that the municipal authorities were co-operating with the Massachusetts exhibitors in plans for the entertainment of visiting motion picture men. The city officials make no attempt to conceal their satisfaction that the League decided on the Hub for the next gathering place. Mayor James M. Curley has notified Mr. Grant that the city of Boston will give an official entertainment to the visiting exhibitors and film men. It will take the form of an outing down the Bay on one of the big excursion steamers, with stops at some of the picturesque spots. Prominent officials will go along to assist in the entertainment. Also being arranged is a demonstration by some of the municipality's fireboats.

Joseph Girard, Butterfly Player

JOSEPH GIRARD, who fills important roles in "The Double Standard" and "The Lair of the Wolf," two of the latest Butterfly features, dates his connection with motion pictures away back to the almost "prehistoric" period of 1895. At that time, just a stripling of a boy, Girard was doing "heavy" parts on a tour of New England and the Canadian provinces with the Sawtelle Dramatic Company.

The show was not going very well, so the management secured from Chicago what was called an "anamatagraph" as an added attraction. Having secured the machine, their next trouble was to get an operator, for no one seemed able to penetrate its secrets. However, young Girard said that he had been brought up in a print shop and he thought that he could run the thing. So it was turned over to him, with ten dollars a week extra for running it in addition to playing "heavy." There was not much that Joe would not have done in those lean days for ten dollars, but he soon discovered that the "anamatagraph" was a real gold mine. In every town where it was set up it became at once the biggest riot the place had ever seen. For this was the first moving picture which had ever been projected in that part of the country, and just to see them move was enough for the fans. Everywhere the manager was approached by scientific men, doctors, lawyers, mechanics, etc., all of them anxious to study the principle of the new wonder. The manager, not knowing even which end of the thing was turned toward the screen, passed them all over to Girard, who explained what little he knew about the wonderful invention. It was something on the order of a graft, however, for every one dropped something into Joe's hand after the demonstration was over.

Joseph Girard.

Girard continued in the "legitimate" for many years, and it was not until 1913 that he entered the picture field as an actor. At this time he left the stage to join Edison, and shortly afterward he became a member of the permanent stock company at Universal City, where he has remained ever since. One of Girard's most successful parts was the mysterious "Voice" in the big serial, "The Voice on the Wire."

VAN DYKE COMPANY RETURNS.

The Van Dyke Company, headed by Jean Sothern, which has been at Atlantic Highlands for some weeks making exteriors for "Peg O' the Sea," a coming Art Drama, returned to the studio this week to put the finishing touches on the production, which is being directed by Eugene Nowland. The trip was highly successful, according to the actors both from results obtained and for recreation, for the visit was something of a vacation for the players.

Little Picture Actress Saves Mother

AN interesting story appeared in the local papers recently which gave little Anna Mead a place among the heroines of the day. Anna, though not a screen star of note, has appeared in a sufficient number of small parts to say that she belongs, and presence of mind on the occasion mentioned proves that she has the qualifications.

Here's the story:

Anna Mead.

"What was declared to be the most remarkable rescue from drowning in the waters around New York so far this summer was performed yesterday by Anna Mead, eleven years old, of No. 745 Amsterdam avenue. She succeeded in raising her mother to the surface of the waters at the Steeplechase Park bathing pavilion, Coney Island, and thereby saved Mrs. Mead's life.

"Mother and daughter had been in the water together for some time. Mrs. Mead was holding to the ropes, and her daughter was swimming some distance away. The tide was coming in so fast that Mrs. Mead lost her hold of the ropes, toppled backward and disappeared under the surface. The water at that point was over Mrs. Mead's head, and there being no bathers in the immediate vicinity no person noticed her sink.

"It was not until Mrs. Mead had come to the surface for the second time that her feeble cries were heard by her daughter, who went to her mother's assistance. Anna dived several times, as her mother again disappeared before she could get hold of her. When she finally did she came to the surface with her arms around her mother's waist.

"Anna's feat was highly praised by the guards, who declared her a plucky girl.

"Mr. Mead wished to reward the guards for their work, but they refused to accept, saying that if any rewards were to be given the daughter was the one deserving of them."

NEW DIRECTOR FOR EACH PRODUCTION.

M. A. Schlesinger, president of the Mayfair Film Corporation, has announced that he has made tentative arrangements with four of the leading directors of the trade to direct the sparkling Mayfair star, Peggy Hyland, in her forthcoming releases. Mr. Schlesinger proposes to have a new director for each Peggy Hyland-Mayfair production, so that they will lack the sameness so often prevalent.

It is a physical impossibility for any man to conceive new touches and novel effects in production after production, and in this way some degree of variety is certain to be attained. The names of the men engaged will not be announced until they begin their work on the production, but each one has a number of successful pictures to his credit. They will all enter the Mayfair employ, however, with the understanding that their engagement is ended when the production is completed.

Then also each new director will naturally seek to bring out the charm in Miss Hyland which makes the strongest appeal to him and in this way the greatest possible percentage of the public will be pleased. The name of the director engaged to produce the second Peggy Hyland picture, soon to go under way, will be announced later.

BILL DESMOND, DETECTIVE.

William Desmond, Triangle star, who made a record as a Sherlock Holmes in "Time Lock and Diamonds," has been cast for another detective role in a forthcoming production entitled "Flying Colors" Frank Borzage is directing the company.

Big Possibilities for Pictures in the Orient.

Charles Margelis, Back from a Seven Months' Trip from Yokohama to Java, Believes There Is Great Chance for Picture Promoters in the East.

By Hanford C. Judson.

AFTER a seven months' sales tour with the Ince picture "Civilization," Charles Margelis is back in New York and talked interestingly to a World representative of his trip and of business conditions in the East. He was able to place seven copies of the Ince picture for the Harper Film Corporation, but he had to hustle to do it. The chief need of hustling, and he wants to make this point clear to any who may contemplate following with other pictures, is that the East lack laws to protect the film man from "dupers." Let us say that the salesman disposes of one print in Yokohama. If he lets a ship or two go by, he'll find that his picture is in Shanghai before he is and there'll be no need of his going any further. All the prints that are needed will be ahead of him. His advice is, "Don't sell a single copy till there is a man who can go to the East with six or seven copies, all the paper, cuts and advertising needed, who can be on the job and cover the whole East at once."

Chas. Margelis

At Yokohama Mr. Margelis sold his picture to a Japanese theater man, who opened with it at the Imperial theater, where it played for a week with admissions from $2.25, the highest, to thirty-one cents, the lowest. With the print went a trunk of paper, including 250 one sheets, 50 three sheets, 35 six sheets, 10 twenty-four sheets, 2,000 post cards with a set of cuts, as they do not do as good photo-engraving in the Orient as we turn out. All the printed matter they need is a set of samples they can follow, for that will fill the bill. Mr. Margelis showed me specimens of the publicity. Some of it was in English to attract Americans in the East, but most of it merely looked interesting. Mr. Margelis didn't "have time" to translate what it told.

From Yokohama he went to Peking, where he disposed of a print, and from there to Shanghai, to Manila, to the Strait Settlements and to Java. He is enthusiastic at the way he was treated by merchants in the East and the reception he got—after war was declared—by the English clubs and the like. In China, he says, a business man's word is his bond. If he tells you he will be in his office at any time with money to pay for a print, he is there without fail and has real money, not checks. He says that "Civilization" made good in the East and that there is a demand for pictures. It is a fresh field, we understand from him. This is particularly true of picture production with native players. It hasn't been done—or hadn't when he left—and he believes there is a great future for that particular branch of the industry. He showed me a request from an acquaintance in the Orient to send him whatever picture equipment he thought would be good there. He is contemplating making a second trip as a representative of producers and manufacturers in this country. He expects to take a photographer with him with a view to establishing a production plant in the East.

Mr. Margelis was born in Ohio and graduated from the Starling Medical College, but the peculiarities of the practice of that profession were not found to be wholly agreeable to him so he became a showman. He has traveled with many celebrated boxers and pugilists, among them Billy Papke, the Australian champion. He has had experience in the film business even before this recent successful trip to the Orient.

He says in closing, "Tell them all to beware of 'dupers' in the East. Move quick if you want to make sales." He also says that in the East it is absolutely necessary to be a man of your word. If you fake once, you won't get a second chance.

A K-E-S-E MUSIC CUE SHEET.

ANNA CASE TO ENTER PICTURES.

Announcement that Anna Case, the beautiful young American soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, is to enter motion pictures for a limited period is made by Julius Steger, under whose direction the prima donna's photoplays will be produced.

Miss Case's first picture will be begun in February next immediately after she completes her concert engagements, for which she has been booked ever since the end of her last record-breaking tournee. The story, based upon real life experiences, will relate the struggles against great odds of a poor, but gifted, American girl, who, through force of her character and talents alone, rises to a position of dominance in the world's greatest opera company.

Miss Case has no idea of retiring from concert and opera. She will have ample time for music and pictures, devoting half the year to the one and half to the other. Mr. Steger already has arranged for her first scenario. The picture, seven reels, will be shown first as a special attraction at a leading Broadway theater. Joseph M. Schenck will be Mr. Steger's partner in the enterprise.

JOE FISHER ESCAPES U-BOAT ATTACK.

Among the passengers of the steamship City of Athens, which was torpedoed recently by a U-boat, was Joe Fisher, who was representing Fisher's Bioscope, Limited, of South Africa, in this country. Fisher was on his way home with a consignment of pictures for a circuit of theaters. He was accompanied by a fellow townsman, Charles Moore. Upon arriving at Cape Town Fisher cabled to Henry J. Brock in answer to an inquiry: "Ship sunk; Moore and self rescued; terrible experience; lost everything."

Fisher's friends in New York will be glad to learn of his escape from the U-boat.

Strand to Give Daily Concerts

Beginning September 16 One Hour's Entertainment by Symphony Orchestra Will Be Feature at Big House.

HAROLD EDEL, managing director of the Strand theater, announces that the Strand concert orchestra, which now numbers forty musicians, will be enlarged to full symphonic strength and be known in the future as the Strand Symphony Orchestra.

Daily symphonic concerts of one hour's duration will be inaugurated Sunday, September 16, and will become a part of the regular Strand program from that date. The concerts will commence daily at 2:15 and at 2:30 on Sundays, and will precede the usual presentation of motion pictures and vocal and instrumental soloists.

The Strand Symphony Orchestra.

The owners of the Strand theater attribute the success of that institution largely to the excellent musical program presented in conjunction with the projecting of motion pictures and the orchestra has been gradually enlarged and special efforts have been made to secure the best vocal and instrumental talent obtainable. When the Strand was first opened, in April, 1914, the orchestra was composed of sixteen members. This number was doubled in less than two years, and when Mr. Edel took charge of the theater a year ago the orchestra was enlarged to forty pieces, including the organists.

Mr. Edel was one of the first to put a large orchestra into a moving picture theater. In 1910, when he was given charge of the Alhambra Theater, in Cleveland, Ohio, he had an orchestra of fifteen pieces. He has always been a firm believer in good music as a means of entertainment. Regarding his latest innovation he said:

"I am not inaugurating the presentation of daily symphony concerts in order to increase attendance to our performances. Everyone who visits the Strand must realize that one of our greatest problems is to take care of our patrons. We play to a daily average of 12,000 people. My greatest desire is to give the public the best entertainment at the lowest prices possible, and I think that by giving daily symphony concerts, as fine as the most discriminating music lover could wish, we are presenting the ideal form of entertainment, pleasing those who are familiar with symphonic music and cultivating and educating the ones who are not. I have met very few persons who do not love music, and on the other hand I know that there are thousands of people in New York who seldom have an opportunity to hear real good music on account of prohibitive prices. In this connection let me say that although the symphony concerts will increase the expenses of the Strand Theater over $35,000 a year our prices will remain the same, 15, 25 and 50 cents, and the patrons who come to hear the concerts are entitled to stay as long as they please and attend the regular Strand show which follows immediately after the concert. I have engaged Signor Adriano Ariani, the famous Italian conductor, to direct the concerts."

As a conductor Signor Ariani obtained his experience under Mancinelli and Mascagni. He was Mascagni's substitute director for four years. Since the Augustenm was inaugurated at Rome Signor Ariani contributed with his own work the marvelous development of that great symphonic institution. He also has been conductor of operas and symphonic music at Rome, Pesaro, Senigallia, Bari, Naples, Macerata, Venice, Tolentino, Genoa, Florence, Monte Carlo (Monaco), Oporto, New York, Philadelphia and Boston.

ROY STEWART IN "DEVIL DODGER."

Roy Stewart will make his appearance as a fearless bad man of the west in a forthcoming Triangle release, "Devil Dodger," directed by Cliff Smith, who assisted in the production of a number of Triangle plays featuring William S. Hart.

The Moving Picture's Part in the War

Lord Northcliffe Emphasizes It in Speech at Informal Luncheon Following Private Showing of "Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras."

A PRIVATE showing of the fourth installment of the British Official War pictures, "Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras," at the Strand theater, New York, Wednesday morning, Aug. 15, was followed by an informal luncheon at Sherry's, Lord Northcliffe, head of the British war missions to the United States, being the guest of honor. Geoffery Butler of the British Foreign Office acted as toastmaster. Other distinguished guests were M. La Valle, the Belgian attorney who defended Miss Edith Cavel, and Hamilton Fyffe, the well known British war correspondent. Several members of General Waite's staff were also present, covers being laid for thirty-six guests.

After some well chosen remarks by the toastmaster, Lord Northcliffe was introduced. The famous editor of the London Times proceeded to explain the importance which the British Government attached to the series of war views now being shown in this country under the title of "British Official War Pictures," and to voice the opinion that the series is of the greatest value in showing the people of the United States the conditions our soldiers must face while helping to crush the common foe of humanity. M. La Valle followed with a short speech expressing the gratitude and brotherly feeling of the Belgians for this country, and his appreciation of the merits of the pictures shown that morning. M. La Valle is a magnetic speaker and it was easy to understand the passionate earnestness with which he sought to save the life of the brave English woman. Hamilton Fyffe spoke briefly of the immense amount of good he had seen the moving pictures do among the soldiers of Russia, many of whom were not able to read, but were forcibly impressed with the efforts being made by their Allies for the common cause.

The motion picture trade papers were represented by Joseph L. Kelley, Motion Picture News; T. O. Eltonhead, Exhibitors' Trade Review; Dickson G. Watts, Morning Telegraph, and Edward Weitzel, Moving Picture World.

PREPARING FOR ST. JOHN'S MEETING.

A preliminary meeting of local managers and theater men was held last week to appoint a committee to look after the entertainment side of the convention. On the committee were appointed W. H. Golding, president of the League; S. C. Hurley, secretary; F. G. Spencer, of the Lyric and Unique, and vice-president for Prince Edward Island; W. C. McKay, of the St. John opera house; A. B. Farmer, of the Star theater; G. A. Margetts, of the Canadian Universal Film Exchange; Reg. March, of the Pathe; Miss Kathleen Golding and Miss Alice Fairweather, motion picture editor of the St. John Standard. Among the plans are a reception at the Manor House, a favorite place for entertainments situated four miles out of St. John, and a sail on the St. John River.

The president and officers of the Canadian Motion Picture Association of Montreal have been invited to attend. L. B. Ouimet, of Pathe, general manager for Canada, and E. Auger, of the Vitagraph, are to be present as well as other managers who have accepted the invitation of the League.

NEW SOUTHERN PRODUCING COMPANY.

The Diamond Film Company is the title of a new film manufacturing concern, just incorporated in New Orleans. R. M. Chisholm is president of the company and with him are associated a number of southern business men. The company is capitalized for $100,000 and has taken over the plant and studio in New Orleans formerly operated by the Nola Film Company.

Kenean Buel

Selected to Direct the Lee Children for Fox—Has Had Wide Experience.

KENEAN BUEL, one of the veteran directors of the Fox Film Corporation, yet one of the youngest in point of age, has been selected by William Fox, personally, to direct the future activities of the famous Lee children—Jane and Katherine.

These two youngsters, probably the best known children in the films, made an instantaneous and universal success in their first picture, "Two Little Imps," which was directed by Mr. Buel. There was immediate demand from exhibitors and the public for similar pictures by the Fox "baby grands."

Kenean Buel.

The problem of selecting the future director for these children was a most serious one, and Mr. Fox had repeated conferences with his aids and advisers. The most capable directors, not only of the Fox Company, but other producers, were considered. After looking over the lists submitted to him, Mr. Fox said:

"There is no necessity of going outside of our own organization for a director for the Lee children. Kenean Buel is the man. He has already produced a marvelous picture with them, and for years I have watched his work with children. Children like and work with him, and I have the greatest confidence in his ability."

This decision of Mr. Fox places Mr. Buel in charge of one of the most unique and important features of the program of the Fox Film Corporation. He will direct Jane and Katherine Lee in future productions. Already their first picture under Mr. Buel's direction has created a furore throughout the country, and their future pictures may be looked forward to with confidence under the capable direction of Mr. Buel.

Kenean Buel is only thirty-four years old, and graduated from college at the age of eighteen, two years later being admitted to the bar as a practicing lawyer.

Born in the Blue Grass region of Kentucky, it was the hope of his parents that he would follow the law, as had his ancestors. The law, however, was too prosaic and dull for the young Kentuckian, who had an imagination, and wanted to create rather than follow precedents.

The stage lured him away from his Blackstone, and he joined a stock company as its business manager. Owing to the illness of one of his players, he was suddenly called upon to play a part. He next began playing juvenile leads, and made a success. Naturally from this he drifted into playwriting and stage direction and thence to pictures.

Mr. Buel is one of the most modest and retiring men in the motion picture business, and is exceptionally well liked by his players. Together with his wife, he lives on his estate in the Ramapo mountains in New Jersey, and is one of the best known breeders of prize winning live stock.

ROSEMARY THEBY RETURNS TO UNIVERSAL.

Rosemary Theby has recently signed a contract with Universal to appear in a series of comedies with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. This will be the second time that Miss Theby has appeared under the big "U" banner. Previous to her present connection she appeared in a series of comedies under the direction of Harry Myers which gained wide popularity. Miss Theby may also be featured in dramatic roles after she has completed the work already laid out.

E. B. Hatrick Promoted

Becomes Secretary of the International Film Service—Organized News Film Service.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the selection of E. B. Hatrick as secretary of the International Film Service. Mr. Hatrick's experience covers a wide range of newspaper and film activities. For several years he was employed as a reporter, telegraph editor and bureau manager on the United Press Association. In 1909, he left that organization to accept a position as editor of the Hearst Syndicate and in that capacity he took charge of the news photograph departments of the various Hearst newspapers and welded them into one organization for the gathering and distribution of photograph illustrations for newspapers and magazines. This organization secured some of the most notable beats in the history of the newspaper world, including such famous pictures as the Scott South Pole expedition, sinking of the battleship Audacious, the destruction of the German battleship Bluecher in the battle of the North Sea, first pictures of German invasion of Belgium, etc.

E. B. Hatrick

After the establishment of the news picture organization, Mr. Hatrick conceived the idea of utilizing this institution for the gathering of an up-to-the-minute news film. His theory was that good trained news photographers were better adapted for this work than studio motion picture operators and with the close alliance with the Hearst system of gathering news he would be in a better position to get material more quickly than any film organization. A combination was made with the Selig Polyscope Company of Chicago and in February, 1914, the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial made its appearance on the screen. This reel was issued through the General Film Company and met with instant success.

For two years Mr. Hatrick had editorial charge of this film and later on when the International Film Service established its own system of exchanges, he organized and issued the Hearst International News Reel. He also, at this time, took charge of the organization of the laboratory work for the International, and the scenic, educational and cartoon reels. When the amalgamation was made between the International Film Service and the Pathe Exchange, Mr. Hatrick took charge of the work of combining the two staffs of field operators and of the gathering of all negative for the Hearst-Pathe News.

NORMA TALMAGE WANTS BOOK PLAYS.

Following the phenomenal success of her recent screen adaptation of Cynthia Stockley's novel "Poppy" Miss Norma Talmage has announced that in the future all of her scenarios will be written from books. The avowed intention of the young screen favorite is carried out in "The Moth," her newest photoplay, taken from the novel by William Dana Orcutt which has been announced to follow "Poppy" among the Norma Talmage releases, and in "The Secret of the Storm Country," on which Miss Talmage will begin work next week in Ithaca, N. Y. "The Secret of the Storm Country" was written by Grace Miller White as a sequel to "Tess of the Storm Country," which is also familiar to the film public.

BESSIE LOVE IN "POLLY ANN."

Bessie Love is working on "Polly Ann," in which she appears in the role of an orphan compelled to earn her living as a slavey in a small town hotel. Later she is adopted by a wealthy man, who takes her into his home to replace a dissolute son.

Yankee Plays for the World

Is the Slogan of General Manager H. O. Davis, Who Inaugurates Big Campaign for Foreign Markets.

"YANKEE plays for the World" is the new slogan soon to be adopted and carried out in policy by the Triangle Film Corporation as the result of the determination of General Manager and Vice-President H. O Davis to invade the foreign exhibiting market on a larger scale and along different lines than ever before undertaken in the industry.

Decidedly an aggressive one, the campaign will be based upon Mr. Davis' personal investigations of the field and his belief that the war has stimulated rather than retarded the European and Oriental amusement demand. Distinctive Americanism will be so outstanding in the product that the stamp will be as recognizable as the brand.

"One of the chief reasons why American producers have partially failed in their efforts to get safe and sane export business," said Mr. Davis, "is that they have persisted in giving foreign exhibitors and foreign cinema patrons a product which they can obtain of better quality and more cheaply at home. We have been trying to make French plays and Japanese plays and East Indian plays in the United States when we knew nothing of the customs, likes and dislikes of these peoples. Even if this were not true, we have been offering the foreign consumer nothing that he could not obtain from the producers of his own country, and every nationality prefers to patronize home industry.

"It would be just as logical for American exhibitors to go to France, Japan and India for their American pictures as for foreign exhibitors to buy from us something they can get from their own producers.

"However, it is not reasonable to believe that American producers can compete with foreign producers in their own fields and the Triangle Film Corporation does not propose longer to try. We will endeavor to lead the industry in supplying the already brisk demand for a distinctly Yankee, if I may use the term, film play that does not encroach upon the foreign producer but fills a well established place of its own.

"The American business drama, the so-called Western plays, the comedy drama and the good old "melodrama" are four types of screen productions that the foreign producer cannot make as well as we can, and these forms of drama never fail to attract and retain the interest of the masses in almost every country under the sun.

"Foreign producers have been smarter than we in that they long have realized their failings and have not attempted to invade America with cowboy thrillers or other forms of cinema entertainment, which, they recognized, we were far more proficient in making than they. On the other hand they borrowed freely of American ideas and introduced them to their public when they were keen enough to take advantage of a demand that we did not appreciate.

"They appropriated our custard pies, our chases and our dare-devil automobile and train wreck stunts and let us struggle with vampires and problem plays and spectacles in which we were trying to interpret the Southern European and Oriental nature without knowing how. American producers have not failed utterly, but they have made themselves ridiculous in many instances.

"These principles," continued Mr. Davis, "are applicable to the exhibiting situation throughout the United States for the simple reason that Americans are loyal to their own customs and peculiarities and would rather see American life depicted upon the screen than anything else.

"The vein of humor that streaks every genuine Yankee gives him a keen appreciation of the comedy and comedy drama, his love of adventure and zest for the rough and ragged whets his appetite for the Western 'thriller' and melodrama, and his native ambition and enterprise stir him to enthusiastic enjoyment of the play that shows zeal and devotion to duty attaining success and reward."

J. WARREN KERRIGAN'S CONDITION.

J. Warren Kerrigan whose leg was broken as the result of the falling of his horse at Santa Barbara on Friday, the 10th inst., is now in the Cottage hospital of that city under the care of Dr. C. H. Stevens. Dr. Stevens, who set Mr. Kerrigan's leg, said that he found him in splendid physical condition, which, with his rugged constitution, would make his recovery very rapid and he felt confident that the star would be able to resume his work by the middle of September.

Enthusiastic Over "The Man Without a Country," Featuring Arnold Daly and Directed by Jack Noble.

ONE cannot talk two minutes with William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Company, and listen to his description of "The Man Without a Country," a coming Frohman production, without partaking of the enthusiasm of the manufacturer. The subject is to be in seven or eight reels and will be ready for showing about the first week in September. Anthony P. Kelly is the author of the script, and in the preparation of it he spent much time and study. He has built upon the basis of Edward Everett Hale's dramatic story a structure which comprises many events in United States history. It will interest exhibitors and the photoplay public to know that Mr. Sherrill has obtained from Secretary Daniels, of the Navy Department, permission for the full use of the old frigate, "Constitution," now in the Charlestown Navy Yard. The rights accorded by the Secretary extend to the taking of pictures on or off the historic ship.

Arnold Daly will play Philip Nolan, the Man Without a Country. Mr. Daly has told Mr. Sherrill three reasons why he is anxious his interpretation shall be the best thing he has done in a screen way. You may take our word for it, the reasons seem to be sufficient—Mr. Daly has a real incentive.

"I think one of the wonderfully attractive things about this business is that a man can bring himself to such a pitch of enthusiasm that he sincerely, honestly believes he is going to have the best picture ever made," said Mr. Sherrill. "I can say deliberately that this story makes one of the most unusual scenarios I have ever seen. I believe there is no other player who can portray Philip Nolan as Arnold Daly is now portraying that character. The picture is being directed by John Noble. In the cast supporting Mr. Daly are Duncan McRae, Sydney Bracy, Frederick Truesdell, Charles J. Graham, Jack Sherrill and Anna Lehr and Mrs. Carr.

"We are putting everything into the picture that is absolutely authentic and perfect as to type, period and history. We are spending $15,000 on costumes alone—these are being made especially for the production. We believe we are going to have a great picture, one worthy of the subject and of the times in which it will be released."

SAM E. MORRIS, CONTROLS OHIO TERRITORY.

Sam E. Morris, who has been a member of the Selznick executive staff ever since the formation of the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises, Inc., has been placed in entire charge of Selznick branches in the large Cleveland territory. This is one of the richest districts in the United States for Selznick contracts, and congratulations are due to Mr. Morris from his many friends in the industry.

Under the Cleveland branch is included the entire state of Ohio and the eastern half of the state of Kentucky. A sub-office is located at Cincinnati. Mr. Morris is well known throughout Ohio, and has previously made a great record through his sales of pictures in this state. His family and relatives reside in Cleveland, and taking charge of the Cleveland office is like going home to Sam Morris.

ACTIVITIES AT GLENDALE.

The Empire All Star Corporation Studios at Glendale, L. I., are in full swing now, with three companies busily at work. Dell Henderson is at work on "My Wife," the great Frohman stage success in which Ann Murdock is starring, supported by a cast whose names include those of Rex McDougal, Hubert Druce, Ferdinand Gottschalk and many others equally well known.

Albert Capellani is directing Edna Goodrich in "American Maid," which it is unanimously agreed is the best story Miss Goodrich has yet been provided with. And John B. O'Brien, who is enthusiastic over his new star, Olive Tell, who, supported by David Powell, is playing the stellar role in "The Unforeseen." "Outcast," the first Empire picture, is to be released through the Mutual Exchanges, September 3.

CAMILLA DAHLBERG WITH METRO FOR "DRAFT 258."

Camilla Dahlberg, who originated the role of Bianca in "The Great Lover," with Leo Ditriehstein, has been engaged by Metro Pictures Corporation to play the important part of the woman spy in "Draft 258," Metro's new patriotic photodrama, which has already been placed in production. Mabel Taliaferro is the star of "Draft 258," which was written by William Christy Cabanne and June Mathis.

Alexandra Carlisle

ALEXANDRA CARLISLE, who plays the star role in the new World-Picture Brady-Made, titled "Tides of Fate," is an English actress of very great celebrity for her rare physical beauty and her surpassing gifts in the art of acting.

Alexandra Carlisle.

Her greatest triumph in London was registered upon her appearance there in the leading role of "Everywoman" some years ago, when the most austere of the English critics hailed her as "the best actress and the most beautiful woman on the London stage."

Miss Carlisle came to America shortly after the production above mentioned and she has remained here ever since. She has been the "featured" player in several dramas and comedies, and last season was chosen by George C. Tyler for the central personage in "The Country Cousin," in which she made a genuine sensation during the long run in Philadelphia.

By an odd coincidence Miss Carlisle's first New York appearance in this drama will occur at the Gaiety theater on the same date as the publication of her picture play, "Tides of Fate."

This drama contains a number of exceptionally thrilling episodes. In one of these a runaway saddle horse, upon which Miss Carlisle as the heroine is taking her morning spin, plunges from a high cliff into the river, from which she is rescued by "the wrong man," whom she marries from gratitude. Later there are two extremely striking battle scenes—one between bandits and the mounted police of Canada, and the other an engagement of United States troops with an overwhelming horde of Moros in the Phillipines.

"Tides of Fate" is a "big" picture in every sense of the term, and in the making involved an expenditure that would have amply justified its issuance as a ten-reel special but for the World's loyalty to the regular program policy.

ALICE BRADY LEAVES WORLD FILM CORPORATION.

Alice Brady has completed her contract with the World Film Corporation, and she declines to renew it. She severs her connections this week with that firm, of which her father, William A. Brady, is managing director, and she announces that she is now at liberty. She may accept any one of several offers that she has had from other motion picture producers, and she may possibly return to the legitimate stage She has two plays under contract, and if she appears in them it may be under the direction of her father in his capacity as theatrical manager, but she is not to be any longer a star for the World Film Corporation which turns out "Brady-made Pictures." She has been with that company for two years, and in that time she has won wide popularity as a "movie" star. The World Film Corporation recognized this fact when her contract expired on Tuesday (Aug. 14) and it offered her a very large increase of salary, but the increase was not sufficient in her opinion, since she had already received large offers from other companies, and she declined to renew her contract. Negotiations have continued throughout the week, but Miss Brady has announced definitely that she has severed her connections with the World Film Corporation.

THE PARALTA PLAN BOOK.

The Paralta Plan book, which Paralta Plays, Inc., has been advertising very extensively in the trade papers of late as an aid to the development of picture theater patronage and the elimination of waste in the management of theaters, has been issued from the press and thousands of copies are now being sent to exhibitors throughout the country who filed their applications for them during the past three months.

This book comprises 64 pages. It reviews the economic history of the trade, it shows the "leakage" which results from the present forms of picture distribution and shows how the four big points of the Paralta Plan will redound to the benefit of the exhibitor.

The book especially dwells on restricted, non-competitive territory, unlimited runs, repeat booking privileges without extra charge, and a twelve month contract, with cancellation privileges to the exhibitor which are exclusively his. Otherwise, under the Paralta Plan, the exhibitor is protected in every way from the conditions he now claims militate most against his interests. He can cancel a Paralta contract, whereas the company cannot cancel on him. The Paralta Plan book is very interesting reading to all concerned.

Grace Darmond.

Grace Darmond.

"WHEN Duty Calls," the seven-reel production with which Sanger and Jordan will make their initial bow in the producing field, is a stirring war photodrama in which Miss Grace Darmond takes the leading role. The picture is now in the making at the Norma Talmadge studios under the direction of Capt. Harry Lambart. Miss Darmond, probably the youngest leading woman in the film firmament, occupied the stellar role in Pathe's thrilling serial, "The Shielding Shadow," which is shortly to be seen in New York at one of the leading Broadway theaters. It was Miss Darmond's brilliant work in this picture, after it had been seen at a private view, which caused Sanger and Jordan to immediately offer her a contract as leading woman in "When Duty Calls" and several other pictures they contemplate producing.

"When Duty Calls" is not a war picture in the sense that the audience is thrilled by the sight of marching soldiers and the usual scenes which accompany a film of this class, but it is a photodrama which will appeal to every mother in the country who has a son of draft age and is willing to send him to the front with a mother's blessing.

The young leading woman has a checkered career as bride and mother whose husband has answered the call of his country. At the same time she has ample opportunities of displaying the fine dramatic qualities which she showed she possessed in the Pathe serial, "The Shielding Shadow." Miss Darmond lays claim to being the most married star in filmdom, as in her brief twenty years she has been led to the altar no less than three hundred times. True, Miss Darmond's experiences have been in front of a motion picture camera, and at present there is a prospect that she will continue on her way as a blushing bride, at least in the movies, for some time to come.

H. NEWMAN OPENS IN OSSINING.

On Monday evening, Aug. 20, the Victoria theater threw open its doors to the public in Ossining, New York, under the management of H. Newman. Mr. Newman formerly ran the Majestic in Holyoke, Mass. The Victoria was formerly known as the Roe theater, but has been renamed by Mr. Newman, who has remodeled the lobby, added a fine new electric sign and made other improvements. He expects to run first run pictures, selecting his program from state rights and other features and in this way will secure an entirely different program from other theaters in his vicinity.

Colonial Theater, Columbus, O.

Manager Marcus Has His House Decorations Harmonize With the Different Seasons of the Year—Admission Prices 10 and 20 Cents.

DO ATMOSPHERIC conditions in a photoplay house count? They do as is attested by the policy pursued by M. Marcus, who is the manager of the Colonial theater in Columbus, Ohio. The accompanying pictures of the stage, foyer and lobby give a very good idea of the floral decorations for summer used recently to beautify the Colonial. These embellishments have occasioned many favorable comments from the theater's large patronage, and it is the intention of Mr. Marcus to have the decorations conform with the different seasons of the year. The decorations, whether they are flowers, banners, festoons, or bunting, for any one season do not remain up during the entire period of that season, but are changed every two weeks or so

Formerly used as a burlesque house and as the home of stock, the Colonial has been transformed into a veritable garden, and under the directing hand of its manager it has been developed as the ideal home of photoplays, playing to capacity audiences every day at ten and twenty cents. Mr Marcus believes that appearances help make a theater, and it is not too much to say that for attractiveness, lobby effects and stage settings, the Colonial compares favorably with any other theater between New York and Chicago

Of special interest is the lighting system. Lights are changed each week, the colors so arranged as to harmonize with the settings and the particular picture shown. Everything in the house suggests quietude and harmony. The energetic young manager came to take charge of the Colonial after it had proven a failure as a photoplay house. He came with ideas of his own, and was given carte blanche to put them into execution. The result is that the Colonial is now on an excellent paying basis, and that its clientele is steadily growing.

Another element that made for the success of the Colonial is the musical entertainment. Music as an essential to the proper enjoyment of motion pictures was recognized by Manager Marcus as a direct necessity, and instead of the loud blare and the illogical orchestration so common in many photoplay houses, the music fits in and harmonizes with the picture.

Before the pictures constituting a show are screened for the public Mr. Marcus views each one privately. He also has the musical score selected for each picture tried out during the private running of the program to further satisfy him that there are no inconsistencies. Should any unsuitable cue be found in playing the selection which was not observed when it was picked, it is altered immediately, so that each score is in perfect harmony with the action in the picture, and in shape to be presented to the patrons of the Colonial.

St. James Theater, Asbury Park, N. J.

Rosenberg Opens 2,360-Seat Picture House on Jersey Coast —His Third Venture There—Typhoon Fan Ventilation System Used.

THE accompanying illustration is a photograph of a wash drawing of the new theater which was opened recently in Asbury Park, N. J., by Walter Rosenberg, manager of the Savoy theater, 112 West 34th street, New York City. This makes the third venture on the Jersey Coast for Rosenberg, for he controls and operates the Savoy theater, also in Asbury Park, and the Broadway at Long Branch.

The St. James has a seating capacity of 2,360, which entitles it to the distinction of being one of the largest motion picture houses in the State of New Jersey. Thomas W. Lamb, who was the architect of the Rialto theater, New York City, designed the St. James, and the exterior is built of red brick laid up in black cement with panels of yellow buff. A scheme of color decoration different from that common in decorating the interior of theaters has been inaugurated in the St. James. Instead of the usual gold, brown and red motif the color scheme is black and gold, which is calculated to eliminate whatever glare that may be produced from the ceiling and wall lights.

The dimensions of the structure are 100 by 156 feet, and it is proposed to operate the St. James all the year round. The Typhoon Fan system of ventilation is used, and a Moeller pipe organ furnishes the musical accompaniment to the pictures. Ample provision was made in building the St. James to house "legitimate" shows should it ever be decided to change the policy.

$80,000 PICTURE HOUSE FOR MADISON.

An $80,000 theater will be erected on East Mifflin street, Madison, Wis., taking the place of the Strand and running through to East Dayton street. Concrete, tile, marble and iron will be used in the construction of the playhouse, which is to be one of the largest and finest moving picture theaters in the northwest. It will be fireproof throughout.

Star Palace, Patchogue, L. I.

Oldest Theater on Long Island Still Going "Strong" After Twelve Years—Has Been Remodeled from Ttime to Time to Bring It Up to Date.

THE Star Palace, the oldest theater on Long Island, is at Patchogue, under the management of George T. Holmes. It has been under the same management since its inception twelve years ago. This is a long life for a motion picture theater. It began in 1905 in a small store which seated 116 persons. This was before the days of motion picture studios. Pictures were being made on the roofs of office buildings. Few pictures were as long as one thousand feet. The exhibition of a moving picture was mainly a stunt. And yet Mr. Holmes made good and has kept it up ever since.

The first building of the Star Palace was operated for two years. Then a larger house was built two doors below seating four hundred persons. This building was occupied until three years ago when the present building was erected.

The present building, the third Star Palace, is the largest theater in Suffolk County. It was erected at a cost of $30,000 and has a seating capacity of over fifteen hundred. It is a two-story concrete structure, the facade decorated with artistic plaster figures in relief. It carries a vertical electric sign bearing the word, "Palace," surmounted by a five-pointed electric star. The building is flanked by two ornamental columns for street lights standing at the curb. On each side of the arch, which gives entrance to the wide and spacious lobby, is an electric arc. The arch is set with electric lights. Altogether this arrangement gives a very attractive appearance by night, and serves to beautify the high road on which the theater is situated. The large lobby offers lots of space for the display of posters advertising the daily attractions. The admission prices are fifteen and twenty-five cents daily, both matinee and night.

Star Palace, Patchogue, L. I.

This was the first theater on Long Island to have an orchestra. There are now six pieces in the orchestra. The stage is decorated with a special scene set made by the Lee Lash Studios. The size of the picture projected is seventeen by twenty-four feet. A Johns-Manville booth is used and Simplex projectors. This theater had the third Simplex that was built.

The publicity department of the theater is under the management of Earle Holmes, whose enterprise won for him second prize in the Bluebird advertising contest. As an example of what he can do, this is what happened when "The Eagle's Wings" was shown for two days for the benefit of the Red Cross. He used a Ford tractor as a street advertisement and thereby attracted one thousand children into the theater from the nearby village of Hagerman, L. I. Further, he induced a local weekly newspaper, "The Argus," to issue a special edition advertising the picture. This is an unusual feat. Mr. Holmes attributes the success of his theater directly to the Moving Picture World, from which he has gleaned many a money-making point.

MANY IMPROVEMENTS FOR GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

Always on the lookout for the comfort and convenience of their patrons, the O'Donnell-Eskridge Amusement Company, of Washington, Ind., at a cost of $3,000 has installed in their Grand Opera House there a new ventilating and air-cooling system. Situated between the ceiling and roof of the building is a double set of eight-foot typhoon multiblade twin blowers, with ventilators located in another part of the building, which provide an outlet for the vitiated air. The fans are operated by a ten-horsepower electric motor. This equipment insures a constant supply of fresh, cool air at all times, which is particularly pleasing to the audience during the hot summer months.

The company also announces that late in the summer the upper part of the theater will be remodeled, the present balcony and offices removed and a new semi-circular balcony built, allowing an unobstructed view of the screen from every seat, and increasing the capacity of the house by about 350. Four new boxes will be added, new orchestra chairs installed, and the entire theater redecorated. As a result, Washington will have one of the most attractive and up-to-date houses in southern Indiana.

Opera House, Wolfville, N. S.

Town with Only 2,000 Population Maintains 500-Seat Photoplay Theater—Students of Seminary Attend Show in Body When Educational Film Is Run.

THE Opera House at Wolfville, N. S., formerly owned and managed by the late W. Marshall Black, has been taken over by several St. John men. A. E. Mason, formerly of the Imperial theater, has been appointed manager and is already in Wolfville. Mr. Mason has been for some years chief electrician and operator at the Imperial and will be qualified by his experience to manage the theater. He has a personal interest in the business.

The town of Wolfville has a population of 2,000, and is the center of a large farming district. There is a seminary there and when an educational film is run the authorities co-operate with the theater and announce the picture at the college, the students sometimes attending in a body.

The Opera House has perhaps the finest set of properties in the Provinces, and can handle any of the better class of road shows. The house is used (as so many of our theaters are) as a sort of social center, and on Sundays meetings of various kinds are held, recruiting, patriotic or lectures.

Interior of Opera House, Wolfville, N. S., Canada.

The house is decorated in old rose and cream. It possesses two picture machines and its own electric light plant. The city current is alternating, so a Mercury Arc Rectifier is used.

Music can be furnished by piano or organ, and the theater is equipped for orchestra. Admission is ten and fifteen cents, the management paying the war tax. The admission was raised recently to meet this tax. Only evening shows are held. The programme changes three times a week. There is a seating capacity of five hundred. The seats are opera chairs.

YOUNG BUYS GRAND THEATER AT LEXINGTON.

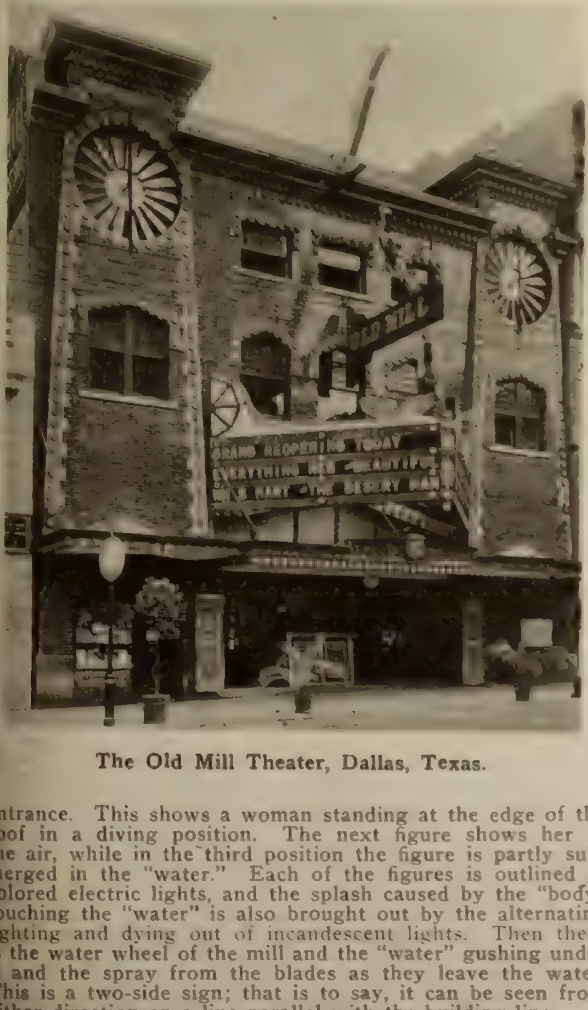
John C. Young, who for about two years has been associated with Clyde Wright as part owner of Wright's Grand theater, Lexington, Mo., has purchased Mr. Wright's interest in the house. Mr. Young, who will now assume full charge, is well fitted for his duties as he has had several years' experience in the motion picture business. This change is due to Mr. Wright's recent illness, together with the great increase in his duties as Justice of the Peace. He has proved himself to be an enterprising manager and a great believer in the efficiency of advertising, and his many friends regret to see him give up the business with which he has been associated for several years

Old Mill Theater, Dallas, Texas

E. H. Hulsey Rehabilitates House Damaged by Fire—One of the Prettiest Theaters in the City—Uses No Gaudy Announcements in Lobby.

ON May 19 last the re-opening of the Old Mill Theater in Dallas took place. The original building was so badly damaged by fire on the night of February 24 that the structure had to be practically rebuilt. As can be seen from the accompanying view of the exterior the architectural design resembles that of a mill. There is the flanking column at each side, wide at the bottom and slightly narrower at the top, where an immense exhaust fan in each has been placed, calling to mind the fan shaped wind wheel which is so important a part in the old-time mills. Then further enhancing the illusion is the old fashioned shaped window in the columns and in the center part of the structure, and the gradually sloping roof which projects just a little beyond the front and back of the building.

One of the distinguishing features of the rehabilitated Old Mill is the attractive electrical display over the main entrance. This shows a woman standing at the edge of the roof in a diving position. The next figure shows her in the air, while in the third position the figure is partly submerged in the "water." Each of the figures is outlined in colored electric lights, and the splash caused by the "body" touching the "water" is also brought out by the alternating lighting and dying out of incandescent lights. Then there is the water wheel of the mill and the "water" gushing under it and the spray from the blades as they leave the water. This is a two-side sign; that is to say, it can be seen from either direction on a line parallel with the building line.



The Old Mill Theater, Dallas, Texas.

The front of the Old Mill is faced with tapestry brick limed with white cement. There is an artistic canopy running the entire length of the building and extending to the edge of the sidewalk with art glass in the squares in the drop. In keeping with the handsome appearance of the front is the method in which the announcement concerning the current and future programs is made. All paper used is placed in glass covered brass frames. No gaudy posters are employed, but artistically painted signs, giving the names of the pictures, the featured players, and other data pertaining to the subjects. The flooring of the lobby is laid with large and small squares of tile in attractive design, and the box office has a wainscoting of marble which is topped with plate glass running along the sides and front. A pretty wood carved design bearing the name of the theater surmounts the glass sides and finishes off this part of the theater. The lobby as well as the front is abundantly illuminated, and four wide entrance doors lead into the auditorium. The doors are finished in mahogany. Each one is beautified with fifteen squares of beveled glass.

The fine impression of the house that is created upon the mind by the graceful lines of the exterior is not weakened one iota when the interior is approached. Here, too, the lines are graceful, and the various colors used in the decorations blend harmoniously. And so the conception that the Old Mill theater is a thing of beauty, a worthy addition to the list of excellent motion picture theaters in Dallas and a credit to the name of E. H. Hulsey, general manager of the company operating the house, and to the other members of the concern, is firmly entrenched in the mind of the observer.

A few words of detail on the embellishments of the interior will not be amiss. Silk tapestry of rosy hue adorn the walls, and the quiet elegance produced by this warm decoration is enhanced by the arrangement of ivory colored panels in relief. Ivory and gold is the color motif of the ceiling, and this has been relieved by hand painted floral effects. All electrical fixtures are finished in gold leaf while the draperies are in blue silk velour. This is in striking contrast to the ivory colored carpet, the plainness of which has been broken by figures in blue. Then there is the flower receptacles and bird cages in willow with stands to match, adding to the individuality of the Old Mill.

Each one of the 1,500 seats has a mahogany colored frame with Spanish leather upholstering. Indirect lighting is used, and a vacuum cooling system. Music is furnished by a large pipe organ. Until six o'clock a section is reserved for children under twelve years and unaccompanied women. The uniform of the ushers smacks of the military, and each man is drilled in courtesy and politeness.

Capacity houses have been enjoyed since the Old Mill was re-opened, and the admission prices are 10, 15, 25 and 35 cents.

ALLENTOWN'S STRAND TO OPEN IN SEPTEMBER.

Situated in the heart of the City of Allentown, Pa., at the corner of Eighth and Hamilton streets, the Strand theater, representing an investment of over $100,000, is nearing completion, and will be opened early in September. The location of this house is admirable, as it faces the terminus of the trolley lines from Philadelphia and surrounding towns.

Gennert and Stuckert, who are the managers as well as the owners, have spared no expense in making this house, so far as beauty and comfort are concerned, one of the most attractive houses in that part of the state. The ventilating plant, which is being installed by the American Heating and Ventilating Company, will supply 25 cubic feet of air per minute for each patron.

Built of steel, brick and concrete, the building occupies a plot 46½ by 170 feet, and is equipped with a large number of exits so as to enable the theater to be emptied within a very short space of time. Another feature which not only adds to the safety but also to the comfort of the patrons is the wide spaces between the rows of seats. Other conveniences for the patrons include rest rooms, sanitary drinking fountains and a spacious foyer; in fact, the management is providing numerous new and novel features which should, together with the high class of pictures to be shown, insure a large clientele.

"Rose Breeding" (Universal).

IN THE Universal Screen Magazine No. 31 will be found some valuable information concerning the breeding of roses. For those who love flowers or are interested in the development and culture of roses this subject will be found unusually interesting. The illustration reveals the manner in which the seed from selected plants is fertilized, ripened and later germinated in sandy soil. The subject is well illustrated and sub-titled with care.

"An Under-Sea Garden" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In Reel Life No. 67 will be found some interesting views which have been photographed on the floor of the ocean at Miami, Fla., by E. B. Gray. In the picture are shown the coral reefs at the edge of the gulf stream, the plant life of the ocean, and the fish swimming about in their own domain. This is an intensely attractive subject which will find favor with all.

"Beach Sports in Southern California" (Paramount-Bray).

In the eightieth release of the Pictograph will be found some inspiring views of beach sports on the Californian coast. Among these is surf riding, which originated with the Hawaiians. Here we see men and women indulging hilariously in the sport of riding a plank over the waves. Splendid exhibitions of swimming are also included, and one of the features of the picture is the work of A. Dahlquist, a member of the San Diego Life Guards, who demonstrates some daring feats.

"Bruges, Belgium" (Mutual-Gaumont).

Views of the old city of Bruges, Belgium, comprise a part of Tours Around the World No. 40. Bruges is the capital of West Flanders and is of unusual interest on the screen at the present time because of Belgium's place in the great world war. The canals which intersect it have caused it to be known as "The Venice of the North" and add much to its picturesqueness. The city is noted for its wonderful chimes, and the places of interest which are shown are the famous belfry of Bruges, the Lion's Bridge, and the Gruthouse, a seignorial residence of the fifteenth century.

"The Land That Does Not Wiggle" (Educational-Bruce).

On his way through Texas and New Mexico Robert C. Bruce picked up a great deal of interesting material, photographing for us the idiosyncrasies of the "Land That Does Not Wiggle." Evidently the stillness of the sandy wastes and rocks over which he chose to travel impressed him in this manner. One of the first things in picture that impresses us is a sand storm. Then there is the little mission made of mud, and the chocolate colored houses with their chocolate colored inmates. There are typical New Mexico scenes in abundance, and views of the Rio Grande and cactus covered wastes. This is a remarkably attractive picture, at the close of which are some night scenes on the desert. Here we are reminded that because of its beautiful nights men answer the wail of the desert.

"The First American Apartment House" (Educational-Bruce)

"The First American Apartment House" appears on the same reel with "Nature's Theatricals," a study of the Grand Canyon. The apartment house referred to is that embodying the homes of the Cliff Dwellers, which were photographed by Mr. Bruce at the Canyon of El Rito de Los Frijoles, N. M. It has a courtyard 200 feet in diameter and possesses 180 rooms. On the walls in the back rooms there still exist the remains of adobe plaster used in lining them. The subject is unusually well illustrated in the usual interesting style of Robert C. Bruce.

"Nature's Theatricals" (Educational-Bruce).

"Nature's Theatricals" presents some of the most beautiful views of the Grand Canyon of Arizona that have ever been photographed. Here we see the tourists descending into the canyon by way of the Bright Angel trail, and are given several views of the sides of the great abyss. Then we are told that only amateurs get their knowledge of the canyon by following the trail into its depths. Others of wider vision sit on the edge of the precipice and watch for "Nature's theatricals" in the play of the elements about its rim. Before and after the storm are beautifully described in film, and with our photographer we watch the mystery of the clouds as they pour like great white streamers from canyons into other canyons of greater mystery. A truly beautiful picture.

The School vs. The Theater

W. D. McGuire of the National Board of Review Points Out Wisdom of Utilizing Theaters for Film Entertainments.

IN SPEAKING of the work of the National Committee for Better Films to a representative of the Moving Picture World, W. D. McGuire, secretary of the National Board of Review, said: "It is not unusual in the development of many social movements, for dangers to crop up, that were not at first anticipated. The enthusiasm with which local committees are forming in different communities to further the Better Films Movement is also giving rise to a danger which may develop unless motion picture exhibitors show themselves willing to grasp the opportunity offered. I refer to the question frequently asked by these committees as to whether it is wise to give motion picture entertainments in the school buildings. We all recognize that the people are coming into their own as far as the schoolhouse is concerned. The time is rapidly passing when either the principal of a school or the local school board may consider the school as their personal property, and they no longer feel that they have the authority to deny the unlimited use of the school building to the people of the community—the taxpayers—to whom the property really belongs. This was brought out forcibly at the Chicago convention of the National Council of Community Center workers whose slogan is the unlimited use of the schoolhouses by the people themselves.

"When it comes, however, to transferring the motion picture entertainment of the community to the school building, even as a community center, danger arises. The school stands for concrete education and this fact is very apt to be implied in the whole atmosphere of the place. It is particularly well-grounded in the minds of young people who spend so many hours a day under the schoolhouse roof. The motion picture theater, on the other hand, represents 'entertainment' in their minds and this type of entertainment while possessing educational value of a high order, nevertheless imparts its enlightenment, for the most part, sub-consciously rather than consciously. It is apt, therefore, to be more permanent.

"The local committee on Better Films, therefore, working for permanent results, will do well to utilize the motion picture theater as the field for their operations rather than attempt to transfer the entertainment to a school building where the surroundings do not normally lend themselves to enertainment as an end in itself. Whether or not the local committee is inclined to transfer its activities to the schoolhouse depends largely upon the measure of cooperation shown by the local theater manager. It is fortunate that in most localities up-to-date managers are quick to show the utmost cooperation, realizing that to work in the public interest is to their personal financial interest also.

"The National Committee for Better Films has urged from its origin the avoidance of the so-called educational pictures at any rate as the backbone of the program. The finest dramas with a strong human interest element are those which appear month after month on the bulletin of the National Committee as having been used most successfully. There are conspicuous examples among producing companies making photoplays of this type consistently. It may be stated with reasonable assurance, that the entertainment which will not please the older people of the community wil not be successful with young people. The heart, rather than the head, must govern in selecting the pictures. Strong, vital drama, presenting manhood and womanhood at its best, are needed. Lessons—'moral' or otherwise—should be avoided. Inspiration to act and think rightly is the best kind of education and the moving picture entertainment attracts thousands when pictures possessing these qualities are shown.

"The theater, not the schoolhouse, is the place for the motion picture show. Much is gained and nothing lost by using this natural channel for the entertaiments. It all depends on the cooperative spirit shown by the exhibitor."

White Plains Gets Busy

Local Committee for Better Films Makes Plans for Future Entertainment and Welfare of Community—Theater Manager Cooperates.

RECENTLY at White Plains, N. Y., a meeting was held to arrange for special moving picture shows for that city. A strong group of representatives of various women's clubs was organized to further the interest of the Better Films Movement in White Plains, and a local exhibitor was consulted. Unfortunately he allowed other matters to press upon his time to the extent that the women of the committee gained the impression that he did not wish to cooperate with them. They immediately turned their attention to the school building and started their plans to organize regular performances in the schoolhouse weekly. At this point the manager realized the opportunity that was slipping from him and assured the ladies that by a return to the original plan they could count on his utmost cooperation. Conference meetings have been held during the summer and the movement is well under way toward getting the first of the Better Film performances started at White Plains immediately after the opening of the schools in September. Mrs. R. P. Ray, wife of the city superintendent of schools, has been active in the movement since its origin. No one realizes better than Mrs. Ray the advisability of using the regular theater for the special performances, and the danger of making the program "educational." The committee, headed by Mrs. A. K. Griffin, has the matter in charge. Publicity plans are being worked out and everything points to carrying out the plan most successfully. Mr. W. D. McGuire of the National Board of Review to whom we are indebted for this information says: "Frequently the motion picture exhibitor does not realize the Better Films Movement is his movement and that the organization of a local committee is one of the best mediums of publicity his theater can obtain."

Moving Pictures in the Orient

Interesting Matter Gleaned from J. W. Allen, Paramount Representative Recently Returned From the Orient.

OUR San Francisco correspondent, T. A. Church, sends some interesting facts in connection with the moving picture's place in the Orient. These facts, learned in an interview with J. W. Allen of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, will be found good reading, and are as follows:

The Orient, the land of mysticism, but also the land of wonderful commercial possibilities, is succumbing slowly but surely to the charm of moving pictures. This is the news brought home by J. W. Allen, of the San Francisco branch of the Progressive Motion Picture Company, distributors of Paramount Pictures, who returned in July from a trip to China, Japan and the Philippine Islands, made for the purpose of studying conditions from first hand and of placing Paramount service. During his absence of six months and two days he secured a fund of valuable information that will be used to advantage and succeeded in booking a large amount of business, considering the present development of the field.

Mr. Allen was accompanied on the trip by his wife, and the first stop, after a brief visit to Honolulu, was made in Japan. From there they went to Manila and spent two months in that city and other communities of the Insular possessions of the United States. There are several moving picture houses here and Paramount pictures are being shown in a splendid new one, the Lyric theater, on the main street of the city, which was opened on June 1. While prominent as a business thoroughfare, this street is one of the shortest of similar importance in the world, being but about four blocks in length.

From the Philippine Islands Mr. Allen and his wife went to Hong Kong, the British port in China, and then to Canton, Shanghai and the northern provinces, two months being spent in this country. Much has been written concerning the moving picture industry in China, but Mr. Allen found but little to substantiate the reports that have come out of that country either concerning the number of theaters, their ownership or the methods of conducting them. "China, with a population estimated at four hundred million souls, has within its great confines only forty moving picture houses," said Mr. Allen, "or one for every ten million persons. On the face of it this country should present wonderful possibilities for moving pictures, and it does, but any development will be slow. Moving picture theaters are found in the treaty ports, but there are great cities in the interior where there are no theaters and none are wanted at the present time. A vast amount of poverty and ignorance must be overcome and changes made in local government before moving pictures will be popular." In many places attempts have been made to introduce this form of amusement, but without much success. Soldiers would insist on being admitted free to entertainments and would start disturbances which the civil authorities would be unable to quell, with the result that the latter in many cases are now refusing to grant permits to would-be exhibitors in order to preserve order. This is merely one of the many problems met with in attempting to introduce moving pictures in China and illustrates the fact that it is not solely a question of educating Chinese to appreciate screen productions.

During the stay of Mr. Allen in Japan he visited the leading cities, including Kobe, Osaka, Kyoto, Tokyo and Yokahama. He found that this country possesses splendid possibilities as a market for moving pictures, with this form of entertainment steadily growing in popularity. However, there are many problems to be overcome by the American manufacturer in marketing his products there and business cannot be transacted on American lines. Quite a few Japanese films are being made, but these do not approach the American product in quality. These native productions are divided sharply into two schools, those of the old, or Shogun days, which have to do with the legends and myths of old Japan, and those of the new Japan, whose actors play parts of modern dramas. Practically all of the work is done by men, it being very seldom that a woman portrays a character before the camera.

The wrestlers of Japan, long idols of the people, are commencing to appear in moving pictures. These are trained from boyhood for their future occupation and the course of training they receive and the system of feeding that is followed make giants of them and they appear almost like a different race, compared with the rest of the people, who are small.

One of the distinctive features of moving picture entertainments in Japanese theaters is the use of the film explainer, or kabutsan, as he is known. This personage occupies a prominent place on the stage and explains the action on the screen while the films are being slowly run through. He gives his interpretation of what the actors in the production are saying, runs the gamut of emotions, with deep bass tones for the villains, shrill shrieks for woe, and changes to suit the action of the picture. Frequently he gets an entirely different impression from that intended by the director of the picture, but if this is noticed by the audience it is never shown.

Moving pictures are projected in an entirely different manner in that country than in the United States, and machines of Japanese manufacture are used almost exclusively. These are sold at less than one hundred dollars gold, so there is no chance for any business there by American manufacturers under present conditions. Films are run through the machines at a very low rate of speed and the intermittent movement is supplanted by a device which serves the same purpose, but which does not admit of a fast motion.

Contrary to the general impression, but few of the Japanese sit on the floor in moving picture houses, but the parts of the theaters arranged for sitting in this manner are considered the best. Music is furnished by a native orchestra, which performs after the kabutsan has finished his work. All attempts to introduce American music has failed, being acceptable to no class of Japanese. The patronage is drawn almost exclusively from the middle class, the members of the old school not caring for modern invention and the poorer classes unable to go. Japanese exhibitors do not use film titles, leaving the interpretation to the kabutsan, but in China these are translated and are shown in both English and Chinese.

While in Tokyo Mr. Allen made a trade showing of Paramount pictures and the leading film men of the Empire were on hand to view them. A story of his trip appeared in the "movie magazine" published by the Katsudo-Shashin-Zasshi Publishing Co., with pictures taken at a welcome party tendered himself and Mrs. Allen at Mikawaya Hall on June 20, by Shiho Okamura, publisher of the Katsudo-Shashin-

Zasshi. The dinner served here included almost twenty courses and was an interesting experience, in which the manipulation of chopsticks formed no small part.

Mr. Allen is now attending to his former duties as manager of the San Francisco branch of the Progressive Motion Picture Company, but these have taken on a different aspect since his return from the Orient. Instead of being merely a distributing point for the Pacific Coast, in itself a territory of no mean importance, San Francisco has become the distributing center for the biggest territory in the world, serving five-eighths of the entire population of the globe. Paramount pictures have been placed in this new field and the seed that has been sown is expected to produce an abundant harvest in years to come, when the sleeping East awakens.

British Notes

THE most important news item of the week is an announcement by the Chancellor of the Exchequer (Bonar Law) respecting the increased entertainment taxes which should have come into operation the beginning of this month but which have been postponed until October. Mr. Law has made the following concessions: The admission tax of one penny to entertainments will apply up to and including seats of the value of four-pence instead of three-pence originally proposed. The duty on seats over the value of seven shillings and six-pence but under ten shellings will be one shilling and six-pence instead of two shillings. On admissions over half a guinea but under fifteen shillings, two shillings instead of three shillings, and on seats over fifteen shillings the duty payable will be at the rate of six-pence for each five shillings (or part of five shillings) over and above the two shillings on the initial fifteen. Upon introducing these amendments into the Finance Bill Mr. Law stated in Parliament that the Government has no desire to pose as a killjoy and it realizes the necessity for legitimate entertainment at this time of nerve strain. The concession cannot be extended to six-pence seats because over eighty per cent. of the entire revenue from this source comes from tickets of six-pence or less. Mr. Law added that "the reduction of the higher priced tickets is to encourage higher forms of entertainment." The announcement has naturally given satisfaction in all sections of the trade but particularly to exhibitors. They are, however, determined to keep the entertainment duty at its present level if humanly possible, especially in regard to six-pence seats.

Mention of the enemy reminds me that the first German propoganda film to be publicly exhibited in Great Britain was put on last week at the Scala, the theater Chas. Urban is associated with. The film embraces life in the enemy's lines with several rather good close-up views of the Kaiser.

The news of the sudden death of Sir H. Beerbohm Tree must have occasioned bitter disappointment to his many film producing friends in the States, particularly in Los Angeles, whither he had definitely planned to return in the autumn. The late Sir Herbert was the first great luminary of the "legit" theater to realize, seven years ago, that the cinema was more than an ingenious toy and to bestow his patronage upon it. Since this, his first appearance in Barker's "Henry VIII," down to the Triangle "Macbeth," the industry had a consistently firm friend in the famous actor-manager.

The call upon the exhibitor to show on his screen slides and films in aid of war and other charities without including the large number of appeals from different Government departments has never been so great as now. So much so that a number of showmen are inclined to the opinion that they are being taken advantage of by charitable institutions out for free publicity. The Edinburgh branch of the Exhibitors' Association has decided to show no further films or slides of this type until they have been approved by the secretary, and even then only upon condition that acknowledgment of the exhibitors' services is made in the press.

D. W. Griffith, Robt. Harron, Lillian and Dorothy Gish left London the other evening for France to do the exteriors of a film "D. W. G." is producing for the French Government. As soon as these are completed they return to America to make the interiors and complete the subject, which is one of patriotic appeal.

If there is one question more than another that a certain London newspaper keeps on flashing before its readers it is "when is Charles Chaplin going to enlist?" According to this paper and the inference of the articles the war will cease the day Chaplin appears in France, so perhaps this is one reason why its owner is visiting America to coerce Charlie into joining for immediate service. A telegram published on Saturday and attributed to the Los Angeles correspondent of the Boston "Christian Science Monitor," states that the famous comedian has already enrolled in the U. S. A. citizen army for training, cancelling all future arrangements for film production. All this makes interesting reading, but the balance of opinion, in the trade and out, concurs that Chaplin could render no better service than by keeping on, "keeping on."

The Vitagraph Co. announce this week the release of "Womanhood, the Glory of a Nation" and "The Suspect." The former was shown to the trade on Friday and the applause which greeted its exhibitors was torrential. "Womanhood" is certainly a worthy successor to "The Battle Cry of Peace."

MOBILIZE PARK SHOWS FOR WAR TIME.

This year the whole scheme of the Boston Park Shows has been changed and they are "mobilized for war service." Incidentally they are showing that motion pictures have definite usefulness to convey information to the people in times like these. Current record films are used, but not anything of a dramatic or story character. Four to six reels are run a night. The length of the program is an hour and a half to two hours. The singing of national or patriotic songs by the audience, with words thrown on the screen, is a prominent feature. Several sets of slides are used in each program, which makes it easy to emphasize whatever subject is current, as, for example, the Liberty Loan when that was being pushed; the Red Cross war fund campaign; recruiting for army, navy and Marine Corps and, later, food conservation.

The film material found to be especially desirable for the purpose includes the Universal, Pathe and Mutual News Weeklies, Selig "Following the Flag," Federal's "America Is Ready," Pathe's "Our Fighting Forces" and Metro's Army and Navy pictures.

FIRE UNDERWRITERS ISSUE BOOKLET.

The National Board of Fire Underwriters, with offices at 76 William street, New York, has prepared for the Council of National Defense a booklet of directions for the prevention of fire. Its title is "Safeguarding Industry." The booklet contains twenty-four pages. Sixty-six thousand copies have been mailed to manufacturers, and the board states if any concern has been overlooked it will be glad to forward a copy on application.

The purpose of the publication is the highly important one of preventing fires in industrial plants working under the abnormal conditions of wartime emergency. The cover carries a signed statement especially written by President Wilson, as follows: "Preventable fire is more than a private misfortune. It is a public dereliction. At a time like this of emergency and of manifest necessity for the conservation of national resources, it is more than ever a matter of deep and pressing consequence that every means should be taken to prevent this evil."

THE Queen theater, Galveston, Texas, which does most things exceedingly well, did better than usual with an invitation card to "Womanhood." This was a private showing to launch the feature in Texas. The invitation idea is the reverse of new, but it is not often that we get a card so well done, though done from type. We get few examples of Old English than we used to, but most jobs show the type instead of play impression. This card is printed from type, yet suggests engraving. It is done with Litho Shaded Script printed with a light inking. The effect is decidedly swagger and aids in creating a favorable impression in the minds of the recipients

Kindly Present This Card

Cheating Itself.

The C. and A. Amusement Company, Pocatello, Idaho, gets out a twelve-page weekly for the three theaters under its management, but it takes a space only four by seven inches for the triple program. In so small a space there can be little display, at best, and here the printer complicates matters by setting it all in full face, and not always with a good idea of what should be kept up. With twelve 8 by 12-inch pages there should be more space for the program announcement instead of merely a third of one page, and even a dub printer should know better than to use all full face where he is so crowded. That page three should be given to the editorial head and the three programs alone, which would permit a proper display, using one of the many forms of program shown in this department; for example, the Colonial, Camden, N. J., which would work well here. This chain of houses is almost too generous with its general reading. The house should come first always, no matter what the form. Recently all three houses bought Liberty Bonds with the day's taking. There was a patriotic parade when the Mayor ordered all business places closed in the afternoon, but between five and eleven the houses ran full blast and then bought Liberty Bonds. Naturally they got local mention, the daily paper giving them a three-line twenty-four-point head on the first page as part of the general whoop for the day. In the same paper there is announcement of F. H. Richardson's tour and his comments on the town, for F. H. used to shove a locomotive through the town when it was only a narrow gauge road and a narrow gauge town. Now both are broad gauge.

Another Red Cross Scheme.

T. L. Little, of the Majestic, Camden, S. C., sends in a ticket used for Red Cross week with this explanation:

> I am enclosing to you a coupon ticket that I am using for Red Cross Week, June 18 to 25, and which so far is meeting with unusual success.
>
> The Boy Scouts and the local branch of the Red Cross Society are both taking an active interest and selling these coupon tickets. I am taking my highest average week receipts and giving to the Red Cross all over and above that. I figure now that the Red Cross will receive as their part $100 for the seven days.
> There is practically no inducement in cut rates, as the 80-cent coupon is sold for 70 cents, making the straight seven days at 10 cents, there being one 10-cent-20-cent day.

The ticket is a straight cardboard strip 2¾ by 6 inches, as shown, the stubs being perforated to permit them to be torn off, the first date being at the top. Presumably some box office stamp was used as a counter check; certainly some such safeguard should be used. Mr. Little is taking no chance. He gets his top receipts and turns over to the beneficiaries a stipulated percentage of their sales, or a percentage of all the takings above a certain sum. The straight commission basis is the best rule, since it requires them to work and yet gives them a direct check on results. But any scheme is good that declares the house in on the movement—any movement—for public good. Between the Liberty Bond sale and the Red Cross movement, the picture theaters have presented themselves in a wholly new light to the public.

MAJESTIC THEATRE

Doubles on the Kids.

The City theater, Newark, N. J., has found it pays to cater to the children. It anounces two special bills a week through vacation time. We print the announcement:

> With the view of making the City theater attractive to its younger patrons during vacation days, Wednesdays have been selected to furnish special features for the children in addition to Saturday matinees. The success of the special children's matinee program on Saturday afternoons has not only warranted its continuance, but the setting aside of Wednesdays as well for a similar entertainment. The principal attraction now booked for this new departure on Wednesdays is little Mary McAlister in Charles Mortimer Peck's "Do Children Count?"—a series of twelve two-reel subjects, each unit a complete and distinct story in itself. Motoy comedies, animated photographic comedy conceits enacted by toy dolls and manikins, in conjunction with Ditmar's celebrated animal pictures, are the selections for the entertainment of our younger clientele at the mid-week special children's show. These features will also be a part of the evening as well as the afternoon entertainment.
> The present policy of presenting attractions for the children in addition to the feature for "grown-ups" on Saturday afternoon will be continued. The offerings for children Saturdays will be different than that presented on Wednesday. The programs will consist of the more pretentious children's productions and the better known juvenile subjects. These features will be presented at 1.00 and 3.00 P. M. at the matinee only, and will not form a part of the evening's entertainment.

It might be argued that there is too much propaganda on "Do Children Count?" but we think that it will be found that the pictures will interest the youngsters. Special catering to the kiddies through the summer is a lot better than kicking about poor business. The City is using a neat six page railroad with an informative front page and a space for the star feature there, and a well arranged inside form. The color combination—deep green on lemon—is rich and effective, but perhaps a bit too warm for summer.

Halfway.

Here is a trade advertisement we clipped from the program of the Queen, De Queen, Ark. It illustrates a nice point in advertising. The idea is good in that it offers a specific argument. You save money. How much? The cost of admissions to the theater for a week. But the display does no catch as well as would a

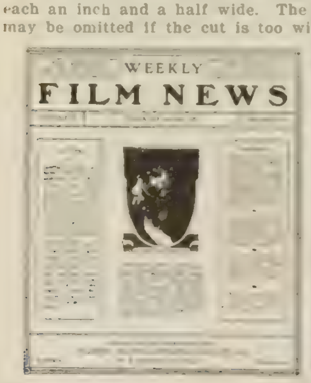
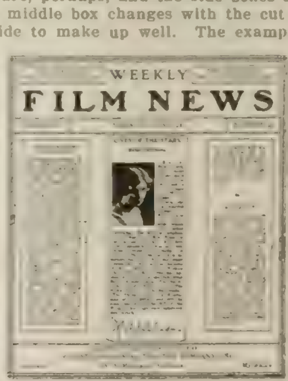
That would get them started reading because it is something concrete. It is a definite promise and not a broad generality. Precisely the some thing holds good in writing your theater copy. Be definite in your statement. Get attention with a catchline, but make the line important. Think what you want to say, then say it in the most definite and attractive way you can plan.

Boxed Fronts.

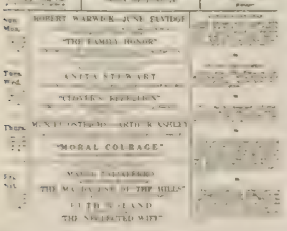
The joint program of the Majestic and Colonial theaters, Jackson, Mich., offers some neat wrinkles. We rather like the front page arrangement, for example, in which the stories are boxed. The pages are eight by nine inches, almost too square, perhaps, and the side boxes are each an inch and a half wide. The middle box changes with the cut or may be omitted if the cut is too wide to make up well. The examples show one with and one without the rule box. Both work well. The matter in these boxes runs all the way from advance notices to hints on theatergoing. It is all live material and not merely matter put in there to fill up a space. It all means something to the house and the patron. The inside pages suggest the Kunsky houses in Detroit, which use much the same style program. We particularly like the page on the left, with the time table in the box. There might be room to date the days on both programs, but the weekly date is pretty close, though not close enough to link the day and date. A man may not stop to figure out that in the week of June 24 Thursday is the 28th, and the idea is to get day and date in the memory at the same time. W. S. McLaren shows a nice judgment in his clip stuff, but it is by no means all clip. His original matter is smart and to the point. In announcing "The Slave Market" he starts in with the explanation that it is not another vice trust expose but a good old-fashioned pirate story. That is a far better line to take. The program runs eight pages with a generous support from the trade advertisers, who are not permitted, however, to intrude on the space needed by the house. It is the sort of program that makes business, and the fact that it is in its third volume speaks for itself.



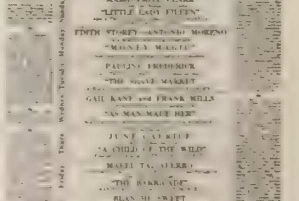
WEEKLY FILM NEWS



WEEKLY FILM NEWS



MAJESTIC THEATRE PROGRAM



COLONIAL THEATRE PROGRAM

Both if Possible.

W. H. Coon, of the Mission, Amarillo, Texas, writes:

> I am sending you two of my programs for criticism. This is a town of about 18,000 and has three theaters. We put out 1,500 of these programs every week. Our house, which caters to the better class, has a seating capacity of 750, and employs a five piece orchestra. Knowing these things do you think hand bills or newspaper advertising would be the better? We have always used hand bills, but since every house in town is using them at present, we have not been getting the results from them lately that we secured in the past. You will notice the little cut in the center of our program which reads:
> We began using this cut several months ago and have used it continuously. A few weeks ago another house began to use the same style of composition on all advertising matter, but the text reads, "Where all the people go to see the best show." What do you think ought to be done? We have done nothing—letting it "soak" into the public. Do you think that is best?

We have reproduced the cut in question, not that we think it would pay to take the matter to law, but because this appropriation of idea is so common and may sometimes be so important that it will be worth nothing that adaption does not always prove safe. If Mr. Coon has been using his trade mark only a few months it might be necessary to patent the design to enforce protection, but we think that as a general rule the copying of an established slogan with reproduction of the essential features of a design will be held at common law to be a colorable imitation and an attempt to trade upon the merit of the original. An injunction would probably lie against an infringer, but in the present instance it hardly seems worth while to force an issue. Had the design been in use for a year or so, and had it become identified with the house, it would pay to protect the rights. The better plan would be to let the matter lie dormant. The public will make its own deductions. At the same time it is well to remember that it is not necessary to be protected by patent to guard against an attempt to trade on reputation, though it is to be presumed that if a trade mark is worth while, it is worth entering with the patent office.

But the more interesting question is the relative value of newspaper and hand bill advertising. We take it that Mr. Coon by "hand bill" refers to the programs sent, and not to throwaways in the generally accepted sense of the word. We think that a program classes above the general run of distributed matter. It is entitled to a greater distinction, but it should be distributed in some more dignified manner to gain its greater credit. If it is merely dumped upon the front door step along with two or three others, it classes as a nuisance save in the minds of the fans. Given more importance, it might advantageously replace newspaper work, though if there is a daily paper of a considerable circulation, and there is a reading public, the fact that the house appeals to the better class would indicate the fairly generous use of the daily paper. For a long time Steve Farrar, who appealed largely to miners in Eldorado, Ill., found that circulars were best, but Steve has come over to colored programs lately. If he had a larger proportion of newspaper readers from which to draw, Steve would be all for the newspapers. The way to figure it is this: If there is a local paper, does it have a large local circulation? This, of course, means large as proportioned to the town. In a town of 5,000 persons a circulation, locally, of 800 would be large. Some towns have their local papers and yet most persons depend upon the dailies from the nearby cities. All through Maine, for example, the Boston papers have the advantage over the local sheets. It would not pay to advertise in the Boston papers a theater in a small town in Maine, but the Boston papers to some extent blanket the local issues. Here the distributed program would at least get into the homes where the local paper is not seen, and so would be a better publicity medium, but even where this is the case there should be some advertising in the local paper, and it should be well and carefully done, no matter what is used to supplement it. In a town of 18,000 it should be possible to use some pictorial paper advantageously posted. This would be better than hand bills, particularly if there are several sets of hand bills out. Put up paper and make the boards distinctive so that it is easy to see that the paper refers to the attractions at the Mission. Supplement this with a program that has something to read on it other than the formal bill. The Mission program is a four pager with an ornamental front, a well set double middle and an atrocious back page of trade ads held together only by a spinal column of one point rule with ribs of the same material. There is no frame to hold it together and the announcements are so small in proportion to the page that they look positively lonesome. It would be better to take that back page for the house, or at least half the space, running reading matter. Still better would be the use of reading matter on page two, with the program in the Theater Louisiana style on page three and with trade ads decently and respectably set on the back page, or the trade ads as they stand with a heading and a narrow column of text between. The ads run 3½ inches wide on a page 6¼ inches wide. There is too much margin. That back page is enough to damn the entire issue. A program must be something people want to see, not something they merely tolerate. If it is the only one in town it may show some results, but if there is competition the best looking bill will be apt to get the more respectful attention, but it must be something that looks like a "really and truly" program and not an experiment on the part of an amateur typesetter. A 750 house in an 18,000 town should be able to use both newspaper advertising and a good program. There must be some printer in Amarillo who knows his trade and the elemental rules of getting out a good job. It will be harder work to supply copy for the right sort of a program, but it will pay.

Too Joyous.

Clearly Miss Pauline Carr has been reading of Douglas Fairbanks and the ample salary a wide smile brings to him, for she is beaming in the ballyhoo used for Keith's Hippodrome, Youngstown, Ohio. The feature was "Womanhood," and evidently the house tied up to the recruiting service, for the officer in the car is Captain Stanley Huntley Lewis. No details are sent with the photograph, but these may be imagined. Note particularly the lettering on the car. Few exhibitors seem to realize that water color can be used on a car without damage if it is carefully washed off afterward. Direct lettering on the car is several times more effective than banners tied on. Directly under Capt. Lewis is "Recruiting Service," lettered upon a bursting bomb, while the hood is lettered with the title of the film story and fact that it has been adopted by the Naval Recruiting Service in its work. The sailor on the opposite running board seems to be in charge of some sort of machine gun. The collaboration with the Navy Department works well both for the house and the Department. More exhibitors should realize that they can help recruiting and themselves at the same time and this in many other ways.

Scott Starts Up.

Having gotten through with the special publicity work for Linder, L. J. Scott is back in the Chicago offices of Essanay, and those who know him from Kansas City days will be glad to see that he is starting up his aids to exhibitors. Mr. Scott knows from personal experience what will and will not make good for exhibitors. His press sheets are not filled with theories but experience facts, and while he says he does not want a comment on his first sheet—for "Do Children Count?"—we do not see what he needs to be so blamed modest for. He will get better as he goes on, for that is his way, but his first contribution is nothing to be ashamed of. We do not grow jealous when the press men follow the lines of this department. We welcome every aid the exhibitor can get, and we are glad to see Mr. Scott where his material will go to Exhibitors generally and not merely to those in the limits of one exchange. Even if you do not use the Essanay features his stuff is a good lesson in general advertising, but we think that many will be led to take up this Keys feature because the press work is made so easy. Here are some examples of preliminary advertising. The cuts in two cases seem to have been taken from a cut up larger plate, but the suggestions are good, and those two on the left we particularly like. But it is as a stunt man that Mr. Scott excels, and it is easier to write advertising than to evolve pulling stunts. Some of the stunts he suggests are new and the others are time tried, but particularly applicable to the present series. That's Scott—stunts that fit. We cannot copy his stuff with the same freedom we showed when his work had but a limited circulation, for you can get the Essanay sheet for a postal card, but we want to urge you to make sure you get on the Essanay mailing list. It will be worth while. One very practical stunt is a six page railroad folder for the series, printed in brown on cream laid paper with a blank page for the current house program. This is a new scheme, and a valuable one.

Special Ghost Stories.

The Universal special press sheet for "The Gray Ghost" is a good example of what it should be. It is printed only on one side, and not only gives a number of stories but gives stories of the sort that an editor will print without revision downward. One great trouble with these advance sheets, not alone the Universal but most others, has been the extravagance of tone of the stories. The real trick in press agenting lies in writing stuff that will be printed without undue revision. If you say a story is "superbly wonderful" the entire sentence is apt to be cut out because the copy reader will not bother to write in a new adjective. If you say that the story is of real interest the sentence is apt to stay in, and it is more profitable to the exhibitor to have printed the fact it is of real interest than to have no comment at all. It helps the exhibitor not at all to give him color printing and extravagant adjectives. It does help him to get stuff that his newspaper friends will be glad to print, and service to the exhibitor is the determining factor in sales. One thing that makes the Pathe serials so popular is the adroit press material. Of course there has to be that in the film which will make good, but it is real press work that sells the serial to the public, and so it is the press work that sells it to the exhibitor. This is a point we have been hammering on for several years, and yet it is only lately that there has been much evidence that it has reached home, and some producing exchanges still waste on fancy printing the money they might better put into press work. This does not mean that these press helps should not be well printed. It does mean that the first consideration should be the production of a grade of press matter that will enable the exhibitor to make a profit on his rental investment. The Universal sheet is a step in the right direction and something editors and exhibitors alike should welcome.

All in Red.

J. S. Woodhouse, of the Lagoon, Minneapolis, Minn., gets out a Fourth of July program in fiery red with firecracker border used as dashes. It is appropriate, but it is not easy to read red on white smaller than twelve point, and much of the program is in a small eight point. But it is appropriate for this once, and the program is very well laid. The front page is given to a Jazz orchestra which is featured. The second page also gives prominence to the band, giving the program by days. Page three has readers on the band and four has a story on six children to be seen at the Lagoon in a single week. It is an original story picked up from the program much as a Sunday editor picks his features from the daily news. The children are not all in the same play nor in the same company. It simply struck Mr. Woodhouse that he had some unusual kiddies in unusual numbers, so he made it a talking point. Page five starts off with talk of the plays for the week and then runs into a series of casts, dated, and with a few lines of comment on the play. It is not a formal program, but treats each play by itself. The titles are in eighteen point condensed Gothic (rather a trying face) with an eight point full face dated day and the cast, also in full face, with the comment in eight point Roman following. It is neat and orderly. This runs on the next page, with a page ad for "The Neglected Wife" on page seven and two weeks' advance programs on page eight. It all forms a meaty program that you can read without mentally tiring, and in black it would be easy on the eyes. He runs several slogans at the bottom of the pages. One is "If it's at the Lagoon it's good." It might be well to work the double phrase and run: "If it's good it's at the Lagoon. If it's at the Lagoon, it's good."

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. By mail, postpaid, $2.00. Order from nearest office.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Triangle Scripts.

RECENTLY we published a letter from the Triangle Film Corporation asking that all scripts intended for Triangle be sent to the company at Culver City, California, and not to the executive offices in New York, where there are no facilities for handling scripts. The item was plain enough in view of other news stories of late, but to make it fully definite it should be noted that the Triangle is the Triangle and Ince is Ince. Mr. Ince is no longer making Triangles. If you intend your script for Ince production wait for announcement of his needs. Meantime, there is a better demand for scripts at Culver City than existed during the Ince regime, and the company promises action within ten days of receipt, but this does not mean within ten days from the time you drop your envelope into the letter box at home.

Credulous.

Lately some magazine stated that a woman was making a good thing selling plots given her by her little children. We did not see the statement in print, but take this from a boob letter, but if such a statement was ever made we believe that the originator of the fable could make Ananias look like a tongue-tied amateur. It is conceivable that now and then some kiddie with an uncanny imagination might evolve an idea capable of being built up into a plot, but that a woman should make a living by marketing these kid plots is unbelievable. It sounds like one of those lies used to sell the Producer's League junk. The point, however, is that it does not pay to believe all you read in the Motion Picture Magazines intended for the general public. It is written to be interesting, and not always does the author cling to the truth with the same fierce intensity that was practiced by G. Washington. Take it with a couple of pounds of salt.

Stories Count.

The other day we noticed that one of the really big New York theatres was taking all of a certain service save the comedies. Another brand, once favored, has been dropped. In one case the comedies are all written by a single hired hand; not a writer, but a hired man. In the other case the stories have become too deadly same because the star will accept only material running in the same narrow lines. In both instances the stories have practically become a detriment to their releasing affiliations because the stories are wrong. High priced players of real merit are failing to amuse because they lack material. And neither company realizes that it is the stories or lack of them, that is to blame. Another brand is replacing these because here are offered stories that are stories and not mere excuse for pie throwing and stunt stuff.

Holding Back.

Evidently writing more for a confirmation of her own intention than with a desire for information, an author says:

> I am by nature born to fight and do not believe in lying flat because sales are slow at present. If I do as you say many do, and stop sending in stories, won't the companies forget a writer? In every studio there must be someone who watches the writer's progress. I think it cowardice to stop.

We disagree with the writer of the above. Editors are not buying, not because, as this writer suggests, they are too poor to pay for scripts, but because they want to hold the job to themselves or because they are not able to judge scripts. Generally it is more a desire to hold the money in the family. Presently these grafters are going to be found out and then kicked out. Manufacturers will find that their much-admired staffs are the chief cause of hackneyed stories and unprofitable releases and will turn again to the great body of writers. There will again be a market. That is the time to be ready to rush in with a lot of really good stories. If you send them in now the chances are that some portion of the idea may linger in the memory of some unscrupulous staff writer and what merit your work has will be taken. Then when you send in to the new editor you meet the "done before," and are naturally suspected of having stolen your own idea. It may be cowardice to stay out of the market, but we are more inclined to believe that it is merely sound sense.

Originality.

We were talking to Marc Edmund Jones the other day and some of his ideas are just as crazy as ever, though he is not talking about them as much as in the days when "Marcemunding" was a synonym for visioning. We always walk soft when we pass Marc Edmund, for we do not know at which end he is loaded. It is just possible that what we now regard as freak writing may, some day, be evolved into the play of the future. At least he is one of the few with the courage of his convictions, and he is not ashamed to offer his freaks along with the bulk of his stuff which conforms to current usage. And if it is not Jones it will very probably be someone like him who will lead the way to the real photoplay. In spite of all that has been said and written, we are not yet arrived at the real photoplay form, and by form we mean the art and not the mechanics of writing. Photoplay form today follows too closely the drama and the fiction story. It must be made more individual, more distinctive, more original before it can properly claim its place as an art instead of a graft upon twin arts. Don't get too fantastic, but do not be afraid to give rein to your fancy. It may be you or Jones or Vachel Lindsay. It probably will not be one of the old line writers

The Average.

Probably 95 per cent. of the writers of scripts stop with their tenth submitted story. That is an average. Some may write more and others not so many, but of every hundred starters it is safe to say that 95 of them between them produce about 950 plays and stop. The other five per cent. keep on. How many beginners, do you suppose, go into a box factory and master the work after spoiling only ten boxes? It is true that they are broken in on the different machines, and seldom make complete boxes, performing only certain of the operations, but even at that there are few who master the knack with a spoilage of material for but ten boxes. Manufacturers count a certain loss as a part of the cost of breaking in new hands. They expect it. They know it must come. And yet hundreds of would-be writers do ten stories and quit. Most of them, perhaps, should have quit before the first, but unquestionably some of them could master the business if they kept at it. It is because so few do that there is still some room for those left.

Deduction.

Take a long and sharp lead pencil. Now write down the name of Marguerite Clark. Now write down the name of some "vampire" who is more popular than Miss Clark. You cannot do it, can you? You cannot think of a single vampire who is more generally popular than Miss Clark. You cannot think of one who is as popular. You can think of players who are as clever as Miss Clark, perhaps, but you cannot think of one who is as popular. Now write down the Vampire plays in which Miss Clark has appeared. There isn't one, is there? Isn't it obvious that the clean play, well done, is the best seller? Then why not write more of these?

Bribery.

Lately a very new writer wanted to know if there was not "some gathering of those authorized to purchase stories," to which he could submit his story with a reading fee. It would take only an hour, he wrote, to read his five-reel cowboy play, and he was positive that once read, it would be bought, so he was willing to pay the reader for his time. This is the second cousin to the scheme of offering the editor a sales commission, but it is just as effective in spoiling whatever chance there may be. Such editors as still read with a view to acceptance are paid to do their work, and do it properly. If a story has merit, it will be read for that merit and not because an author slips a two-dollar bill into the envelope.

Drags.

All arts have their drawbacks. We have excesses of closups and visions, but paiting has its cubists and impressionists and literature its free verse. We might be worse off.

Technique of the Photoplay

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Cannot Get Results.

Bert C. Evans, Saginaw, Mich., is in trouble, as follows:

> Would greatly appreciate your assistance in the following matter, as for some reason I am unable to get desired result Data is: Two Powers' 6-B projectors, using 60 amperes D. C. Gundlach No. 1 projection lenses, having an effective opening of 1⅝ inches. Back focus of projection lenses, 3.5 inches; ¾ cored carbons above and 11/32 Silver Tip below. Project a 17-foot picture at 88 feet.
> Please advise what condenser combination should be used, both plano convex and Meniscus bi-convex; also distance from center of condenser combination to aperture. Enclosed find postage for carbon of department reply, and any additional information will be appreciated.

You say "result is unsatisfactory," but you do not advise as to in what way it is unsatisfactory. I can, therefore, only advise as to the proper lineup of the lenses and aperture distance. Using plano convex condensers you will need a 6½ next the arc, and a 7½ in front, with not to exceed 1/16 of an inch between the apexes of the lenses, and with about 15½ inches from center of condenser combination to aperture. With Meniscus bi-convex you will need either two 7½ lenses, or one 7½ and one 8½, with about 17⅓ inches between aperture and center of condenser combination. This advice is based upon the assumption that you use 60 amperes. A different amperage will require a different line-up. The reason I give two possible combinations for the Meniscus bi-convex is that the 60-ampere curve comes exactly half-way between the two. In your case I think I would advise the Meniscus bi-convex, because it increases distance Y, which is highly desirable. After installing the new condenser system, remove your objective lens and insert a sheet of white paper exactly the same distance the back surface of the projection lens was from the film Open your machine gate and project the white light on this paper, and measure its dimensions. You can then see how it compares with your effective lens diameter, and govern yourself accordingly insofar as projection lens diameter be concerned. Will you kindly advise me as to how this works out in your case?

From Nova Scotia.

A. J. Mason, an old-time correspondent of the department, is here again with the following. He writes from Wolfville, Nova Scotia:

> You will doubtless be surprised to hear from me at the above address, but the way of the world is that we change. I have taken charge of the Wolfville Opera House, and am well pleased with the proposition. The theater is a mighty nice one for a town of 2,000; also it has a fine stage, and an operating room 12 x 14, equipped with Motiograph and Edison motor-driven projectors. There is a Mirroroid screen, and projection is first class, with a good operator, Everet Pineo, in charge. I feel that I can make more in this end of the game, though the business will have to be built up, having been run down by carelessness in management, and by poor pictures. (Poorly-selected programmes, Brother Mason means, I take it.—Ed.) The one thing which impressed me most when I arrived here four weeks ago (letter dated July 25.—Ed.) was a photograph of the Operator's Friend, F. H. Richardson, neatly framed and hung in the lobby along with the photos of other stars. The operator has your handbooks, second and third edition, which argues for good results on the screen.
> My former assistant has taken charge of projection at the Imperial (Friend Mason was chief operator at the Imperial theater, St. Johns, N. B., for a long while.—Ed.), and is, I believe, making good. He is deserving of success, and I most earnestly wish it for him. I left because I was told I was as high as I could climb, and that did not in the least meet with my views. I was receiving more than any of the other men, and friend employer well knew I could not secure anyother position as operator at the same or better money anywhere in the Provinces. The answer is that I am here, and well satisfied with the change.
> My operator works daytime at the automobile business, and is considered about the best man in these parts. But what they lack in this part of the province is knowledge of electrical equipment. They send batteries to St. John to be charged, for instance. Friend operator wants me to go in with him. Am not familiar with car wiring. Can you recommend some good work on that subject? Note with much pleasure account of your successful trip. It was amusing at times, and I was surprised, but well pleased at the interest taken in your most valuable lectures, which every right-thinking operator cannot deny are highly instructive.

Am well pleased to hear of Mason's graduation into the managerial class, and trust he will have all kinds of success. And, by the way, what's the matter with you Maritime Province men, anyhow? Have not heard from any of you in Heaven knows how long. If you want to crawl back into your hole you can do it, of course, but it really isn't necessary to yank the hole in after you. Have I got to come up there and poke you up again? I'm some considerable poker, you know!

Cannot say offhand just what book you need, but will look the matter up tomorrow and advise you as to what I discover. What happened to that organization the Nova Scotia men formed last fall? Did it go blooey, or what happened to it?

Reduce Your Lens Ports.

The lens port should only be as large as the actual, effective light ray which carries the picture. The picture-light ray is surrounded by a halo of reflected light which, if it escapes into the auditorium, will do nothing but injury to the projection.

To test this matter, project a film (the clear white light will not do) when the audience is not in the house, and place a cardboard in the light ray right up close to the operating room wall—in the lens port, for instance. You will probably be surprised to find your actual picture-bearing light is much smaller than you had supposed, and that a considerable halo of light surrounds it.

You should then reduce the lens port to a shape and dimension which will barely pass the light ray carrying the picture, and nothing more. Paint the operating room side of the mask dead black, so that the light it intercepts will not be reflected back into the operator's eyes. In making the test for size do NOT use a title, but a rather clear scene—one not too dense. The light which surrounds the picture ray often has the effect, though I am not certain as to just why, of lessening the sharpness of the picture. But even if it does not do this, it does no good and does do distinct harm.

Jimmy-the-Usher Patches.

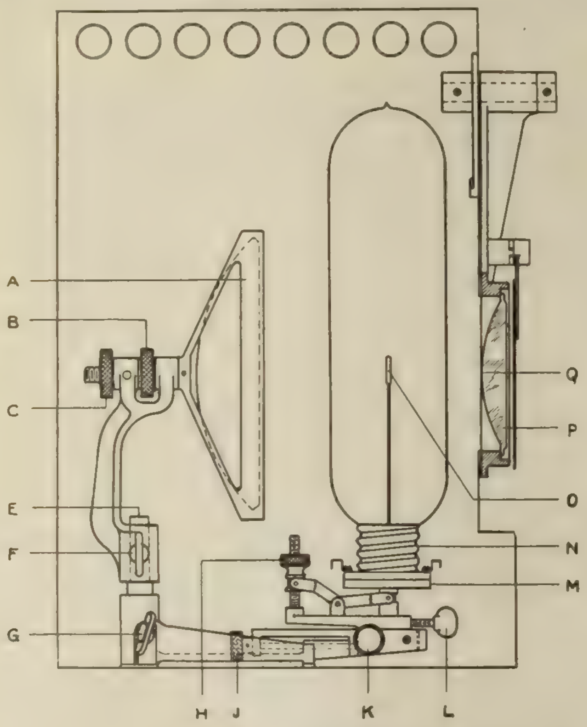
Joe Welch, Indiana, sends in some "horrible examples," together with the following pointed remarks:

> Attached splices are from the subject, "Youth's Enduring Charm," received July 14 from Indianapolis branch of the Mutual Film Corporation. Would call your special attention to where Jimmie-the-Usher got a part spliced in wrong side to. The picture was shipped to us rewound, and presumably inspected, but this is what I encountered on the first run. I hope you will forward these to the main office of the Mutual.

All right, Indiana, I will do that little thing for you, and for the benefit of other operators and exhibitors receiving service from this apparently mismanaged exchange. It is even as Indiana says. A part of the subject was spliced in backwards. Such work is raw. It is outrageous. I have repeatedly said, and I again repeat: THE OPERATOR IS NOT EMPLOYED TO DO FILM INSPECTING, and to compel him to inspect and repair film is nothing less than an outrage and a swindle. The film exchange is presumed to sell service in shape to project. The theater pays for that kind of service. Is it getting what it paid for, when an operator finds such things as this, plus a mess of splices varying from ¼ to ⅛ of an inch wide? Well, scarcely. The exchange is not, then, fulfilling its part of the bargain, is it? It is selling one thing and delivering quite another, is it not? And this is distinctly dishonest, is it not, both as regards the operator, who must do the work of inspection and repair, without a cent of pay, and as regards the theater itself?

What It Looks Like and How to Use It.

The accompanying drawing shows the new incandescent equipment being marketed by the Nicholas Power Company and also the instructions for adjustment which are sent with the equipment.



Two sets of condensers are provided in this equipment, the corrugated one being for motion picture work and the other for stereopticon. The required adjustments are given below:

1—With the special moving picture lens in position, move the lamphouse forward so that the distance between the aperture and face of the lens is about 7 inches.

2—Swing the left hand arm and receptacle into position with respect to the condenser lens and secure by tightening thumbscrew "G."

3—Seat the lamp in receptacle "N"; the first position of the lamp necessary is the placing of it so that the plane of the filament "O" is parallel with the front face of the lamphouse. This is obtained by a swivel motion of the receptacle "N" and base "M," after which it is secured in this position by tightening of thumbscrew "L."

4—Place the center of the lamp filament "O" on a level with the point "Q" by means of adjustment "H."

5—Center the filament "O" of the lamp, and the lens, with respect to side movement, by means of adjustment "K."

6—By means of adjustment "J" the lamp can be brought close to the condenser so that the proper spot can be obtained at the aperture.

7—The reflector is a very important factor in obtaining the maximum amount of light. After the lamp has been properly adjusted, it should be lit and the objective lens removed so that the image of the filament may be obtained on the screen. It is necessary, of course, to get as flat a field as possible, and the adjustment of the reflector provides for this. After placing the center of reflector in a horizontal plane with the filament "O," the reflector should be moved forward or backward by means of adjustment "B" until the reflected light is the same size as the filament image. It is then moved sidewise on stud "E" until the dark spaces between the filament images are filled with the reflected light. The reflector and mounting is then secured in position by turning up the thumbscrew "F."

The lamp is now adjusted and in position for operation, allowing, of course, for the usual slight movements of either or both the lamphouse or lamp, backward or forward, to obtain a good spot on the aperture and a flat field on the screen. The other arm is swung into similar position, and adjustments as above described repeated.

When the use of slides is desired, the lamphouse is moved over to the usual position on the sliding rods, and the other set of condensers swung into place.

It must be remembered that when this type lamp is used on the usual 110 or 220 volt D. C. or A. C. commercial service, the proper auxiliary appliances for reducing the voltage and maintaining a rated current flow must be employed. Satisfactory lamp performance cannot be expected unless the lamps are used with control apparatus equipped with means for accurately regulating the current. If these means are carefully used, the saving in lamp renewals will soon more than offset the slightly higher cost of accurate control devices.

A Law Needed.

We have many examples of freak legislation on the books, so why not add one which is needed. It might be a "freak" in one sense, but would act as a protection to the theater, the operator and to the public. I would arise to suggest a law, with severe penalty, absolutely prohibiting the sending out of any film to a theater in other than perfect mechanical condition as regards splices and sprocket holes.

Of course friend film exchange manager instantly declares such a law to be impractical, in that he simply MUST send out uninspected film upon occasion; also there would be difference of opinion as to what constitutes "perfect mechanical condition." But it really is not so impractical as seems at first glance. Mr. Manager does not have to send out film in bad condition. He just thinks he does. I have managed an exchange, and am in position to say that, while conditions arise in which it is a big temptation to do so, it is really not at all necessary. And if it were it would be easy to insert an "uninspected" slip in, directing the operator to inspect and send in bill for the labor. As to disputes, why the court would settle them, would it not? That is what courts are for, I believe. Protection in this matter is needed, and is needed badly. The condition in which some exchanges send out film is shameful. True, there is little to complain of in this respect with regard to properly-managed exchanges, but unfortunately not all exchanges come under that category.

Sample Letter.

The following, which requires no comment other than to say it is one of the many received from local unions all over the country, speaks for itself. It comes from a live president of a live local—a good combination:

> Colorado Springs, June 15, 1917.
> The Moving Picture World,
> New York City:
> Gentlemen.—Just a few lines to personally thank you for the visit and splendid lecture of our brother, F. H. Richardson, whom we had the pleasure of having with us June 9, which same we owe to the Moving Picture World, which cannot receive too much credit from managers and operators all over the country. The lecture was without a doubt the most interesting thing to which the writer ever listened; moreover, he never expects to again hear its equal, unless we are so fortunate as to meet Brother Richardson again. And this I sincerely trust may come about. Moreover, let me add that our entire membership, as well as our managers, enjoyed it every bit as much as did I, and all the talk since he left has been of the Moving Picture World and Richardson. Again thanking you for the great work you and Brother Richardson are doing for the good of the entire industry, I am, very truly yours,

With Regard to Shutters and A. C.

E. W. Humphreys, Woodstown, N. J., desires the following information with regard to the revolving shutter and alternating current. He writes:

> Being the manager of a small-town house, with an operator who is rather indifferent as to results, I try to keep up with the Projection Department, and wish to compliment you on the able assistance you so often render to operators.
> We use alternating current, 60 cycle, through a Fort Wayne Compensarc. The projector is a Powers' 6A. Our current supply was recently changed from 133 to 60 cycle, and we are still using the three-wing shutter we used when the current was 133 cycle. Ought we change to a two-blader? I do not notice any unusual flicker on the screen, but if we can get a better picture with a two-blade shutter, why it's me for it. We had, of course, to change compensarcs when the current was changed.
> Another thing: I notice you often speak of using glass in the port holes. I take it this refers to the observation ports only. Am I correct?

With regard to the port holes, you are not right. I mean there should be glass in all of them. The glass should be old photographic plates from which the emulsion has been thoroughly cleaned. The idea is to prevent pulling the foul, hot air from the auditorium into the operating room. The operating room should be supplied with FRESH air, pulled in from outside the building through a special air chute, or else forced in from the air chutes of the house ventilating system. For several reasons, however, it is best to have the operating room ventilation entirely separate from the main house ventilation system. The lens ports may be left open provided they be reduced to the size of the actual light ray.

As to the other matter, it is quite possible that you may use a three-wing shutter with 60-cycle current, or what is supposed to be 60-cycle, and if you are using it without any trouble, keep right on using it. The trouble with 60-cycle current and a three-wing shutter is that, especially if the cycle happens to really be (as often happens) a little less than 60, and you run your projector a trifle fast, its blades will, or may, get into synchronism with the alternations of the current. As you will see by consulting page 16 of the third edition of the handbook, or any standard textbook dealing with alternating current, two times each cycle the voltage of single-phase current sinks to absolute zero, and at this instant of time the brilliancy of the crater is greatly diminished. If your shutter blades should happen for a space of time (it would be almost impossible that the blades would remain in synchronism with the alterations for more than a few seconds at a time) to cover the lens at the exact time when the crater is most brilliant, and uncover it when it is at its lowest point of brilliancy there would be a decided dimming of the light at the screen. Due to the improbability of the shutter remaining in synchronism for any extended period, the effect is usually that of a waving of the light—alternately brilliant and dim. If you have no such trouble, your shutter is not doing this and you should continue to use it.

Might Help.

Frank Shipley, Des Moines, Ia., has the following to say:

> Enclosed find four dollars for autographed third edition of the handbook. I attended your lecture here, and desire to express my appreciation. Have not as yet heard of any resultant progressiveness, but don't belong to the local here, so don't know whether or not they are acting. To my mind the operator may get much good out of a study of "First Principles in Physics" books such as are used in public schools. I have one, and find it deals with many principles the operator comes into contact with. What do you think of the idea?
> Why should the change-over sign be placed in the negative, as you advocate? I use a cross, scratched in a corner of the frame about five feet from the end. I receive films with unnecessary punch marks. Even find them at the beginning of the reel.

Well, brother Shipley, I am a little bit inclined to believe that it will require a pretty heavy jolt to wake up Des Moines as she ought to be waked. There was every indication of extreme sluggishness in that city. Do you mean you are not a member of the Des Moines local? Or that you do not belong to the I. A. If the latter, take my advice and "get in.". If merely the former, why you might better put your card into the local union. It needs every live man it can get. As to the change-over sign in the negative, why if put there, then it would be in every positive, and no more trouble about it; moreover, it would be one universal sign, and everyone would soon come to recognize it. The negative is where it should be. Your cross mark is a mutilation, though a small one. But the next man will not know it is there, and will make his own—and so on. Do you see the point? I am very much afraid your copy of the Handbook was not autographed. And if so, it was my fault. Your letter was in the first mail received when I reached New York, and I thumbed through it hurriedly to give just such matters attention. Saw the four-dollar order and word Handbook. Gave address to office force and did not notice the autograph part. Sorry, old man. Yes, the books you mention have much of value, but I fear the average operator would be unable to apply it in his work. However, a study of the books certainly could do no harm.

Pictorial Photography.

The J. B. Lippincott Company has favored us with a copy of "Pictorial Photography," a 300-page cloth-bound book, by Paul L. Anderson, written in response to a definite and insistent demand for an authoritative work on American Photography.

The writer does not pose as an authority on photography, but it requires no exhaustive knowledge to see that the subject is, in this instance, handled ably and well. Mr. Anderson has put out a work which, while it shows his evident familiarity with the science of photography, and the principles which lie at the base of its structure, is couched in language so simple that the layman can readily understand, and profit by what he reads. The work is replete with formulas, and will be of decided value to the amateur, as well as to the professional.

I can recommend this book to operators who are amateur kodakers. It will give them the precise information they want in that line; also the chapter on the lens will impart valuable understanding of lens action which will help them in their work—operating, I mean.

Port Shutters.

When in Tucson, Arizona, last April I visited the Tucson Opera House, W. W. Brumberg, Chief Operator, and noticed a very clever and effective method of fusing and of dropping the port fire shutters. Brother Brumberg, a live wire, by the way, promised to send in description thereof as soon as I returned to New York. He has done so.

The drawing consists of the main, upper sketch, and two detail sketches showing parts of the device. A-A are ordinary roller shade fixtures, such as one uses in the home. B is a suitable length of ordinary wooden curtain pole, 1¼ to 1½ inches in diameter, into which are driven iron pegs, such as a small nail from which the head has been amputated. These pegs are indicated by the letter F. C-C-C-C indicates the wall shutters, D-D the uper magazines of the projectors, E-E an iron lever, of suitable length, firmly attached to roller B, as shown in detail No. 1. G-G are film links inserted in master cord O by means of clamps such as are shown on page 225 of the Handbook, the same being indicated by the letter L. M is a film link inserted in the master cord, and located directly over the rewinder. N is a weight attached to lever E.

The action is as follows: should either of the film links break or burn, master cord O would instantly be released at all points, which would cause weight N to pull lever E down, thus rotating roller B and dropping the rings to which port shutter cords are attached off pins F, causing the shutters to fall over the wall openings. The action of the roller is shown in detail No. 2. H-H are metal pieces attached to bottom of upper machine magazines, as indicated in detail No. 1. I-I are similar pins attached to wall of room.

I believe a little study of the sketches will make the entire action clear, and that operators will have small difficulty applying the plan if it appeals to them. Incidentally I saw other more or less similar plans in different cities, and would like to have sketches and description of same. The film link is, in my judgment and opinion, the thing to use. It is far superior to metallic fuses, but must be placed intelligently if one is to receive the benefit. I saw one scheme which particularly appealed to me: An operator had inserted into the port shutter master cord, at the proper place, about eighteen inches or so of fine copper wire. He had then drilled a small hole in the center of the top of his upper magazine, doubled the wire in its center and passed it through the hole. He then rolled about an inch of film tightly and laid it over, or rather under the hole, pulling the wire tight. Of course should the fire get into the upper magazine, the bit of film under the wire would instantly burn, thus releasing the wire, and the master cord, which supported a roller somewhat similar to the one used by Brother Brumberg. Still another scheme I saw was to pass film link G into the lower front of the upper magazine through a very narrow slot. I would ask that these and other plans be sent in, to the end that they be set forth in the department for the benefit of all. Many thanks to friend Brumberg. By the way, Tucson, the wife thinks that Indian made wicker basket from San Xavier mission is just about the finest thing going. It occupies the place of honor on the mahogany (I strongly suspect the genuineness of the mahog part) pedestal, right square forninst the very frontest front window. Personally, aside from the kindness which prompted the gift, I didn't think such a much of it, but gee, you couldn't pry it and friend wife apart with a crowbar.

Motion Picture Standards.

At the last meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers held at the Sherman Hotel, Chicago, Monday and Tuesday, July 16 and 17, the following standards were formulated and approved with the recommendation that they be universally adopted by all manufacturers.

> Film Speed: A film movement of sixty feet per minute through motion picture machines shall be considered a standard speed.
> Frame Line: The dividing line between pictures on a motion picture film shall be exactly midway between the marginal perforations.
> Projection Angle: The maximum permissible angle in motion picture projection shall not exceed twelve degrees (12°) from a perpendicular to the screen surface.
> Projection Lenses: The outside diameter of projection lens tubes shall be of the following diameter: 38 mm., 46 mm. and 65 mm.
> Projection Lens Foci: The focus of motion picture projection lenses shall increase in ¼ inch steps to 8 inches, and from 8 to 9 inches in ½ inch steps.
>
> Projection Lens Mounting: Picture projection lenses shall be so mounted that the light from the picture aperture shall have an uninterrupted full path to the rear component of the lens.
> Picture Aperture: The film picture aperture in a projection machine shall be 0.906 inch wide, and 0.6795 inch high.
> Projection Lens Light: The standard height above the floor to the center of the projection lens of a motion picture machine shall be 48 inches.
> Film Perforations: The dimensions and location of film perforation shall be in accord with the illustrating diagram herewith. (The diagram is not given here.)
> Standard Picture Film shall be 1¾ inches in width and carry a picture for each four perforations, the vertical position of the picture being longitudinal of the film.
> Lantern Slide Mat Opening: A standard opening for a lantern slide mat for use in conjunction with the motion pictures shall be 3 inches wide by 2¼ inches high.
> Thumbmark: The thumbmark spot on a lantern slide shall be located in the lower left-hand corner next the reader when the slide is held so as to be read against a light.
> Lantern Strip: A red binding strip shall be used on the lower edge of the lantern slide.

As these standards comply with the measurements now generally in use and most of the variations from them were retained by dissenting manufacturers for trivial reasons, the principal one being that there was no recognized authority to recommend a universal standard, it is to be hoped that the few remaining cumbersome departures from standard practice will be speedily abandoned.

The frame time question has caused more annoyance than all the other points put together. The news weeklies will now have no excuse for putting out prints that require the framing lever to be shifted a half dozen times during the showing of a reel.

Camera men whose cameras frame differently than the adopted standard should have their frame line altered to correspond.

Film manufacturers who have not had their cameras lined up have often learned to their sorrow after using different cameras on a picture that expensive scenes could not be used or would have to be retaken in order to match frame lines. Happily most of them have already learned their lesson, and have adopted the frame line now recognized as standard. Unfortunately for a few of the old line companies their frame line is on the center of the perforations, but they will undoubtedly see the wisdom of conforming with the overwhelming majority and drop into line with the rest.

Of course the amount of expense involved in the mechanical work entailed may cause some of them to be tardy in agreeing with the standard, but the cost is a mere bagatelle compared with the future saving in trouble and expense.

The future tendency will always be to conform to standard, and all those who fail to recognize that standardization is just as much for their benefit as it is for the industry at large will inevitably pay for their stubbornness in annoyance at being unable to use standard apparatus without expensive changes and in loss of business from their customers who will prefer to use standard apparatus which is designed to give sure fire results with standardized products.

Another feature of standardization that will save many deluded people a large amount of hard earned money is the fact that standardization will discourage many nut inventors with freak motion picture apparatus from foisting their abortions upon gullible people who can be made to believe that film should be run horizontally instead of vertically, or that a slight change in the dimensions of the picture frame or film will produce a miraculous improvement in motion pictures.

The woods are full of self deluded inventors, who have marvelous contraptions which are to revolutionize the picture business just as soon as some kind angel supplies the money for them to work out their ideas.

This little tirade, of course, does not apply to the hundreds of serious workers, who are, day by day, solving the problems that the industry presents with a sane inventive genius and a large admixture of hard work.

The work of the society fills a gap which has yawned unfilled in the industry since its inception, and will be of incalculable benefit and save time, material and money at a time when they are most sorely needed for the welfare of the nation.

Los Angeles writes:

> Some time ago I noticed in your department an article concerning the new Akeley Moving Picture Camera. Is it being manufactured? By whom? And what will be the probable price?
> Lately I have been trying to photograph against the light. There are two difficulties I have run up against. One is exposure; the other is the difficulty of keeping the sun out of the lens. In the majority of cases I have tried to use a lens shield, but find that unless the sun is fairly high in the heavens the sun shines fairly in the lens. In the matter of exposure, I find the faces especially are under-exposed. Then I have increased the exposure and ruined the picture again—over-exposure. I am only an amateur in this game, so if you can tell me how to arrive at a happy medium I will be very thankful. In my ordinary exposures I use the Harvey Meter as a guide, and find it the best thing out in that line, but am up a stump in this particular proposition so am writing to you.

The Akeley camera is not yet on the market. You can probably obtain further particulars from Mr. Carl Akeley, American Museum of Natural History, New York City.

In regard to exposure in back lighting: In calculating exposure for back lighting it is usual to calculate the exposure for the lower tones in the picture, as the high lights where the sun strikes are always over-exposed. It is practically always necessary to use a lens hood or some sort of shield to protect the lens from the direct rays of the sun. When the sun gets low enough to be included in the picture it is then usually too dark for back lighting, and the effect then becomes either silhouette or moon light effect. It is customary in most back lighting effects to light up the shadows by an inclined reflector placed between the foreground and the camera, as shown on rough sketch.

Sketch No. 2.—Ground Plan Showing Back Lighting with Two Diffusing Reflectors to Illuminate Shadow Detail.

Back lighting generally takes two to four times the exposure necessary in the same light when used in direct lighting.

"DOUG" FAIRBANKS PULLS A BONE

Douglas Fairbanks has pulled a bone.

Yes, sir; the Artcraft star has pulled a bone—pulled it right out of the ground on an island "somewhere in the Pacific." And to prove that "Doug" pulled the bone Bennie Zeidman, than whom there is no more veracious fabricator, has mailed us the bone. It is the dryest bone we have ever seen. In fact, it is so dry that we are almost convinced that the "bone-dry" movement was named after the bone that Bennie sent us. But Bennie always did try to prove his assertions, and below is the assertion he wanted to prove, which was pasted on the bone:

"The remains of a prehistoric creature found by Douglas Fairbanks on an island 'somewhere in the Pacific Ocean' named in honor of the Artcraft star by a western Government official. The Douglas Fairbanks Island is now being registered in Washington."

We hate to doubt Bennie's word, and we further dislike to dash his hopes. We will grant him that Mr. Fairbanks found the bone. But we have had the said bone examined by one of New York's foremost specialists. He reports that the bone is the rib bone of a steer, otherwise known as Bull.

GAUMONT CHARACTER ACTOR DEAD.

The announcement last week of the sudden death of Charles W. Travis, well known as a character actor, came as a distinct shock to his friends in the Gaumont Company, where for so long a time Mr. Travis was a general favorite and a leading member of its stock company. Mr. Travis, who was born in Brooklyn in 1865, died in that city following a second apoplectic stroke. For nearly forty years he had been before the public as an actor, practically the last decade having been devoted to the silent drama. That he was an early recruit to pictures will be understood when one recalls that he played the part of the parson in "Davy Crocket," the first picture produced by the Bison Company. He also worked in the first independent picture that was ever produced by a firm releasing under the Carson brand. He later played character parts for the Universal Company, the Ramo Company, the Famous Players, the Fox Company, Humanology, and the Gaumont Company.

Among the Gaumont productions in which Mr. Travis scored were "The Devil's Darling," with Francine Larrimore, in which he took the part of the devil, "The Card Players," "The Idol of the Stage," "As a Woman Sows," "I Accuse," "According to Law," "The Quality of Faith," "Flames of Vengeance" and "Armadale."

FILM "TOM SAWYER" IN MARK TWAIN'S HOME.

The exterior scenes in "Tom Sawyer," Jack Pickford and Louise Huff's next Paramount production, will be taken in the very locality where Tom lived nearly 70 years ago. The Pickford-Huff company have betaken themselves to Hannibal, Missouri, where Mark Twain lived as a boy, and they will spend the next few weeks in taking the scenes for the story of "Tom Sawyer."

"Perfection Pictures"

The Highest Standard in Moving Picture Art Yet Reached Most Likely To Be Announced Officially in the Near Future.

MANY surprises have marked the development of the moving picture industry since it became an industry and ceased to be a novelty or a mere plaything. And by "surprises" is meant important happenings, not mere rumors which have never been realized.

It may be questioned, however, if any of these former surprises will rank with one that is about to come in the near future, almost as certainly as anything human can be certain.

This will be nothing less than the merging some time ago of the interests of some of the foremost of America's producers with the aim of establishing a new high standard in the art of making moving pictures; and these pictures, it is expected, will so clearly demonstrate their superiority that they will be known as "Perfection Pictures."

It is understood that some of America's finest directors have been at work for several months past on these "Perfection Pictures" and that fifteen have already been completed, while as many more are now under way.

These productions are, and will be, comprised chiefly of light comedy-dramas, of five reels or more in length, which will be released at the rate of one a week, the first release to be made sometime in September.

It is said that appropriations have already been made which call for the expenditure of $1,700,000 on productions alone, for the first year.

It is also stated that many of America's foremost novelists, magazine story writers, and the cream of the authors of "best sellers" have been placed under contract, and that some of them have already supplied manuscripts for use in "Perfection Pictures."

Don't ask for names just now. They will be revealed in the very near future, in all probability.

New York Versus London as World's Film Center.

In the discussion which is now being carried on in the London trade press over the possibility of New York supplanting London as the world's film center, the latest issue of the Kinematograph to hand, at the time of writing, has the following expression from E. H. Montagu, European agent for the Selig Polyscope Co.:

> It will do no good to grumble about the film export trade going to America. Changed conditions mean changed methods, and people here may as well make up their minds to the fact.
> Personally, as the representative of the Selig Polyscope Co., I have first of all to consider the interests of my firm, and I may say I have voluntarily surrendered the right to work certain markets, because, under present-day conditions, it is cheaper and more satisfactory to work them from America.
>
> The trouble with film dealers in this country is that for a long time they have made their money too easily. The experience spoiled them, and they seem unable to grasp the fact that in future they will have to work harder for smaller returns.
>
> As for the agitation to keep London the film-distributing center of the world, it comes too late. The export trade in films is not merely going to New York. A great deal of it has already gone, and no amount of shouting will bring it back.

Chicago Reel Fellows' Club Dissolved and the Organization of Its Successor Discussed.

The first meeting of the reorganization committee of the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago took place Wednesday noon, August 15, at the Hamilton Club. Messrs. Proctor, Nehls, Belford, Curtis, Ross, Russakov, Hopp and Stoddard were present.

President Proctor took the chair and the meeting at once engaged in the election of permanent officers of the reorganization committee. On a motion made and carried, the following officers were unanimously elected: President, R. R. Nehls; vice-president, R. O. Proctor; secretary, Mr. Stoddard, and treasurer, H. E. Belford. After the election Mr. Proctor resigned the chair in favor of Mr. Nehls.

The meeting then proceeded to a discussion of the present condition of the Reel Fellows Club and the most feasible plan to surmount the difficulties confronting it. Various plans were discussed by the committee, and the following resolutions were finally moved, seconded, and unanimously carried:

> Resolved, that the Reorganization Committee of the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago, pursuant to power vested in it, does hereby declare the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago to be and the same is hereby dissolved.
> Resolved, that this committee proceed at once to wind up the affairs of the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago, and further
> Resolved, that this committee proceed at once to the organization of a new club to be composed of the representative men of different branches of the motion picture industry.

The meeting then appointed a committee for the performance of the above duties, and after a motion duly made and carried, it was unanimously

> Resolved, that this committee be equally divided into two sub-committees, known as the Organization Committee and the Finance Committee; that the president appoint all of the members of this committee to the respective sub-committees, and that the president be a member of both committees, and further
> Resolved, that the duties of the Organization Committee be to draft and submit to this committee a constitution and code of by-laws for the proposed club and to formulate and submit a plan of organization for the same, and further
>
> Resolved, that the duties of the Finance Committee be,
>
> First: To wind up the affairs of the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago, this committee being vested with full power to liquidate said club, provide ways and means for meeting the obligations of the same and to deal with the creditors and properties of that Club, and,
>
> Second: To prepare and submit to this committee a financial budget for the proposed club, advising the necessary running expenses for a year of said club, and make recommendations for the meeting of the same.

R. R. Nehls, presiding, then announced the members of the two sub-committees as follows:

Organization Committee, Messrs. Nehls, Curtis, Ross, Hopp, Russakov and Stoddard.

Finance Committee, Messrs. Nehls, Proctor, Bell, Rothacker, Heaney and Belford.

The first meeting of the Organization Committee was set for Thursday noon, August 16, at the Weiss restaurant, in the Consumers Building, and the first meeting of the Finance sub-committee was set for Monday noon, August 20, at Mr. Proctor's office, 207 South Wabash avenue. The next meeting of the Organization Committee was set for Tuesday noon, August 31, at the Hamilton Club.

Before adjourning the suggestion was made that each member of the Organization Committee prepare a roster of the candidates for charter membership in the new club, to be submitted to the committee at the next meeting.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Alfred Hamburger recently brought suit in the Circuit Court against Nathan Ascher, of the Ascher Brothers' circuit, for breach of contract, which involves over $75,000. The particulars of the suit have not been given out, but it is well known in film circles that a strong spirit of rivalry has existed for some time between these owners of large competing chains of picture theaters.

A special meeting of the Advertising Film Producers' Association will be held Monday, August 27, at the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company's studios. The business taken up will include changes in the constitution and by-laws, standards of practice, the campaign for 1917-18, and other matters of importance connected with moving picture advertising. The Association is the recognized moving picture department of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

How moving pictures are made was explained to members and friends of the Chicago Camera Club Wednesday evening, August 15, at the American Film Company's plant, this city, by Charles A. Ziebarth, superintendent of the company. Amateur photographers were also addressed by Mr. Ziebarth on the processes to which the raw film is subjected from its crude state until ready for projection on the screen.

"The Call to Arms," the original title of the patriotic picture on which Mary Miles Minter is now engaged, has been changed to "Her Country's Call."

Beginning Saturday, August 18, Alfred Hamburger will offer his first pre-release program of Paramount, "The Mysterious Miss Terry," in which Billie Burke is featured, according to his contract with that company, which gives him the right to first run of this make throughout the city. A similar contract also applies to Artcraft pictures.

Arthur S. Odin, who owned the Plaza theater at Lansing, Mich., about a year ago, has been at the training quarters for officers at Fort Sheridan for the past three months. Mr. Odin has had an important military career, having served as corporal in the 9th regiment, U. S. infantry, for many years. He was in the quartermasters' corps in Manila for a considerable part of that time, and has also seen service in Cuba. It has not been yet ascertained whether or not Mr. Odin succeeded in securing a commission. It is hoped so, as he is a splendid specimen of a man, both mentally and physically.

The Studebaker will pass out of the control of Jones, Linick & Schaefer at the conclusion of a two weeks' run of "The Honor System," which will end Sunday, September 2. It is said that Oliver Morosco is aiming to secure this house for the production of his dramatic plays.

On Friday evening, August 17, a benefit presentation of "The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras" was given at Orchestra Hall, in aid of the First Regiment, Illinois Engineers. These British official pictures were secured by the Citizens Unit of the First Regiment, Illinois Engineers, through the courtesy of Pathe Exchange and Official Government Pictures, Inc., and the occasion marked their first projection on any screen in Chicago. Many of Chicago's leading families were represented in the boxes during the presentation, and numerous parties were present on the ground floor as the guests of other prominent people. The proceeds, which were large, will be devoted to buying extra equipment, clothing, mdicine, etc., for the First Regiment boys. Col. Jamieson, of the British Recruiting Mission in this city, pointed out the military features of the films to those in the large assemblage. Tom North, of Pathe Exchange, Inc., made the arrangements for the benefit.

"The Italian Battle Front," the only official war pictures of that country now in America, will be given a run of 12 days at the Auditorium theater, beginning Thursday, August 23. These pictures show fighting in the Alps, many thousands of feet above sea level; the campaign against and the fall of Gorizia, the great Austrian fortress, and Italy's battles among the clouds and on the sea. A forty-piece symphony orchestra will play the accompanying music.

A New York music publishing house has issued a song entitled "The Garden of Allah" in honor of the Selig super picture of that name. The front cover is illustrated with scenes from the Selig production.

Wm. N. Selig again desires to state that his company is not in the general market for scenarios, being overstocked with stories. The company is willing, however, to consider synopses for features of big, comprehensive themes.

The opening of "The Crisis" at the Garrick theater, Philadelphia, August 13, was a great success from accounts furnished by the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, which owns the rights in that territory. The Wolfberg Co. sent out letters to many exhibitors in adjacent country, inviting them to see the big film drama and promising to pay their expenses. By this means many attended and bookings were largely increased in consequence.

Edward Trinz, nephew of Joseph Trinz, of the firm of Lubiner & Trinz, this city, and formerly manager of the West End theater here, called at the World office August 16. Mr. Trinz recently joined the Second Infantry regiment of the Illinois National Guard, which will leave in a few days for Fort Sam Houston, Tex., where it will remain encamped for some time. He took advantage of this opportunity to say good-bye to all his brother exhibitors, through the courtesy of the Moving Picture World.

"The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras," under the management of Tom North, opened its run on Saturday, August 18, instead of Sunday, August 19, as previously announced. It was thought better to continue the big war picture after the benefit given the preceding Friday evening in aid of the First Regiment, Illinois Engineers.

A special meeting of the Chicago branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was held in its hall in the Masonic Temple building, Friday morning, when the new wage scale for operators, the music tax, and other matters were discussed.

James Vincent Directs "The Hidden Hand" for Pathe.

THE HIDDEN HAND," the Pathe four-star serial which will be released in the early winter and which stars Doris Kenyon, and features Shelden Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton, is being directed by James Vincent, who has to his credit, the production of many successful features. This is the first serial Mr. Vincent has directed, and he says he is surprised to find that the atmosphere, sets, story and acting required for a Pathe serial are of the kind that is required for the best features.

James Vincent

Mr. Vincent is a native of Springfield, Mass., and was educated in that city. He studied at the Emerson School of Expression in Boston, and took part in the juvenile lead in several dramatic productions, among them being "As a Man Thinks," with John Mason, and "The Man Who Stood Still," with Louis Mann. He took the part of Jack Hale in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," dramatized from the novel of the same name. He was leading man for Kalem for several years.

Director Vincent has to his credit the following features: "The Melting Pot," with Walker Whiteside; "Gold and the Woman," with Theda Bara; "Sins of Men," with Stuart Holmes; "Ambition" and "Love and Hate," with Madame Bertha Kalish; "Sister Against Sister" and "A Royal Romance," with Virginia Pearson, and "The Unwelcome Mother," adapted from Isben's "The Lady from the Sea," with Baroness Valkyrien.

Not only can Mr. Vincent show an actor or actress how a certain bit can be put over to the best advantage, but he also can tell when and the reason why. He has a thorough grounding of dramatic principles and believes that the universal language is pantomime, which is only sign language carried to its highest degree.

The story Mr. Vincent has to portray in "The Hidden Hand" is a dramatic one and Pathe expects big effects of his work. It is being produced under the supervision of G. A. Smith, formerly manager of Pathe's serial publicity department, who from his wide experience with serials knows what suits the public taste in chapter photoplays.

NEW THEATER AT TRAIL. B. C.

This week there was opened at Trail, B. C., the beautiful little Liberty theater. Trail is a prosperous little community with the mining business as its chief asset. M. P. Wetherall, formerly of Grand Forks, is in charge of the house. The house was opened with the subject, "Miss George Washington." They wrote the Famous Players Exchange as follows: "The house opened to S. R. O. with 'Miss George Washington.' Fine house, fine pictures, everybody happy."

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. HARLEMAN

Universal Studios Busy.

Many New Players Engaged—Eddie Lyons Marries—Other News from Big Film City.

UNIVERSAL CITY is always busy and many companies at work for Mr. Laemmle. We paid a visit this week to the big film factory and found the place a bee-hive of activity

During the past week a number of players have been added at the Universal plant and each has been assigned roles in current productions.

Among these may be mentioned Kenneth Harlan, who recently finished playing the juvenile lead in Lois Weber's latest production. He is now playing opposite Carmel Meyers in "The Dynast," which is being directed by Harry Solter.

Hal Cooley has returned to the Universal City fold. Cooley was with the Universal Company up to a year ago, when he went to the Keystone Company where he played juvenile leads. He also was with the American Company at Santa Barbara. Cooley has been assigned to the company directed by Elsie Jane Wilson in which Zoe Ray, the child actress, is featured.

Another player who has returned to Universal City is Rena Rogers, who will best be remembered for her work in Lois Weber's "Where Are My Children." Miss Rogers is also in Miss Wilson's company.

David Morris has become the leading comedian of Director Craig Hutchinson's aggregation of fun-makers. Morris has had a long experience both in the legitimate and before the camera.

Charles West, who is best known for his Biograph work under D. W. Griffith and who also was with that producer at the Fine Arts studios, is among the newcomers at the Big U City. West established an enviable reputation in the cinema world playing both juvenile and characters. He is now playing opposite Miss Grace Cunard, under the direction of Louis W. Chaudet.

Director Edward J. Le Saint, who is gathering a notable cast for a feature production, will have among his players Mildred Davis as his ingenue.

Eddie Lyons has joined the ranks of the benedicts. His marriage to Virginia Kirtley took place on August 1 and no one knew anything about it—not even the members of the Nestor Company, with whom he has been so closely associated—until the night of August 4, when it was announced at a beefsteak dinner given to the screen scribes of the motion picture colony of the southland and a number of film favorites by Eddie Maier, of Los Angeles. About one hundred were present at the dinner and when the announcement was made the bridal couple was showered with congratulations.

Mrs. Lyons is no stranger to screen fans, for she has been in pictures for several years, appearing with the various companies.

Priscilla Dean, star of the Universal mystery serial, "The Gray Ghost," whose arm was fractured recently while performing a hazardous scene for the seventh episode of the story, again has taken up her work before the camera after an enforced illness of but ten days.

Although she was urged by Stuart Paton, her director, and Henry McRae, Production Manager of Universal City, to take a longer rest, Miss Dean thought her absence would handicap Paton in the filming of the serial and insisted upon picking up her part of the production at the earliest possible moment and her indomitable will and courage could not be denied.

Toreadors Corraled by Fred Palmer.

The Toreadors, that valiant bunch of hot air merchants, under the leadership of Fred Palmer, the comic scribbler, adjourned to the classic environment of Maier's Brewery, on Saturday last week. Charlie Murray and others made several speeches which were very good but not quite as fine as other things more tangible. The steaks were securely planked, in fact we noticed that there was nothing that could be thrown around the room, however there were no casualties. Among those present were Ethel Davis, Lee Moran, Virginia Kirtley, Eddie Lyons, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Clements, Alice Lake, Franklyn Farnum, Mrs. and Mr. Fred Palmer, Miss M. E. M. Gibsone, Doris Schroeder, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Rothwell, Mr. and Mrs. M. Jonas, Mr. and Mrs. Carlyle Robinson, G. P. Harleman, Peter Milne, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Jessen, Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Murray, Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Cline, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Selig, Hal Cooley, Harry Wulze, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth McGaffey, Miss Gene Crosby, Kenneth O'Hara, J. B. Woodside, Sam H. Comly, Allen Hulbert, "Pop" Hoadley, J. Grubb Alexander and the latest stenographic recruit to the navy, Clark Irvine, as well as others whom we missed in the haze.

Fox Company Films Elaborate Battle Scenes.

A BIG naval battle scene was staged by Director J. Gordon Edwards at Balboa Beach this week for the Fox production of "Cleopatra," in which Theda Bara is being starred. The scene is a reproduction of the famous battle of Actium. Participating in the conflict were the war vessels of Octavius Caesar and the galleys of Cleopatra and Antony. In reproducing the battle Mr. Edwards required the services of several thousand men.

About five thousand gallons of crude oil and inflammable materials were used to stimulate the burning of the fleet.

Los Angeles Brevities.

Anita King is with Balboa and will be starred in a series of five-reel features for release on the Mutual Program.

Having made such a success in directing the battle scenes of "Joan the Woman" by means of a series of field telephones, Cecil B. DeMille has ordered a set to be used in Geraldine Farrar's forthcoming production equipped with the same instruments. Twelve telephone stations scattered throughout the village will be in constant communication with the director-general who stands on his platform with the receiver strapped to his head and the transmitter swinging from his breast. The cast of Miss Farrar's production includes Wallace Reid, Hobart Bosworth, Raymond Hatton, Theodore Kasloff, James Neill, Walter Long, Olga Gray and others.

Triangle-Keystone fans are soon to be treated to a new style of pantomime entertainment that should find instant appeal. Triangle-Keystone Director Henry Kernan and Jay Dwiggins, the veteran character comedian, have started work on a new series of comedies to be released on the Triangle program at regular intervals. Jay Dwiggins has been with Triangle-Keystone for a year, and will be remembered by many for his work with the late John Bunny in the old days. He will write all of his own stories and appear in the leading role. The series will be devoid of the slapstick tricks and will present human little stories that intersperse comedy with pathos and human touches.

Geraldine Farrar, with the same portable dressing room which she used in her production of "Joan the Woman," has departed for the California mountains to film some exterior scenes in her forthcoming production which is being made under the direction of Cecil B. DeMille from the story by Jeanie MacPherson. This dressing room, no matter where it is set, contains all the comforts of Miss Farrar's room at the studio, even to a telephone.

Italian Letter

By Francesco Manelli.

NOTWITHSTANDING the war, which has caused a slump which amounts almost to a standstill in those industries not directly connected with the supply of munitions, the cinematographic industry has received a new impulse in spite of the increase in the cost of both raw material and labor.

This impulse is rather in the nature of an artistic revival in production than in strictly trade matters which are laboring under the disadvantage above cited, as well as the difficulty which confronts the exportation of Italian films, the rigorous Government censorship and American competition.

This new impulse has taken the form of the following of the example of Gabrielle D'Annunzio by many men of letters in devoting much of their time and effort to the production of scenarios for the adaptation of their literary or theatrical works to the screen. D'Annunzio himself has recently given to the screen "The Crusade of the Innocent," an original subject that, while it brought the author twenty-five thousand francs and is said to have cost the producers six times this figure, proved a failure both artistically and financially—an unfortunate contrast to the splendid success achieved by the same author's "Cabiria." Among the distinguished authors who are now writing for the screen will be found many who, but a short time ago, thought so lightly of the picture as to refuse to admit that it was vested with either artistic conception or idealism

Their opinion on this point was probably influenced by the fact that the growing popularity of the motion picture had considerably reduced their earnings from play-writing which had heretofore been one of the most lucrative fields of their endeavor.

Becoming convinced at last that the cinematographic industry did possess merits of its own, several of these literary lights organized a society of which the principal object was the forming of a Cinematographic Literary Trust, which was bound to publish only their own productions, each member bound himself to write three or four scenarios per annum and all agreed to pool the profits for equal division.

This trust was formed under the name of the Silentium-Film and numbers among its members Marco Paraga, Renato Simoni, Giuseppi Adami, Giovanni Verga, Dario Niccodemi, Alfredo Testoni, all dramatists, a few theatrical critics, and so far they have brought to light "Mimi and the Ragamuffins" by Adami, "Night of Tempest" by Praga, and have ready or in course of preparation "Illusion" by Simoni, "Happiness" by Testoni, "Enemy" and "Scampolo" by Niccodemi, "Angelus" by Giacomo, and "The Wolf Hunt" by Verga, which the Italian censor thought fit to suppress.

The other literary men are working on their own account or for such producing or publishing houses as may pay them best. Adami, of the Silentium trust, has also composed a work for the "Savoia-Film" which is entitled "How a Butterfly Died" and which was interpreted by the celebrated Italian lyric artiste Rosina Storchio. Ferdinando Russo, an exquisite Neapolitan dialectic poet and a celebrated novelist and journalist, has written two scenarios, "The Good Thief" and "The Memories of a Maniac," both of which have been presented with great success.

Another Neapolitan dialectic poet, Ernesto Murola, has given up the management of a dramatic company and passed also into the cinematographic literary world with an original work entitled "O Sole Mio ((My Sun)," portraying the Neapolitan surroundings, with musical accompaniment by the well known Maestro V. Valente.

Carlo Zangarini, known as a librettist, has given up part of his activity to cinematographic work. Among his most recent productions may be mentioned "From Dawn to Sunset," written for the Luna-Films."

Mario Corsi, the keen dramatic critic of the Tribuna, has already written for the Tespi-Film "The Woman Without a Heart," and is now preparing "Friar Sole," a cinematographic vision of the life and epoch of Saint Francis of Assisi.

Count Luciano Zuccoli has given up for the time being novel writing and journalism in order to write "The Old Flame," the interpretation of which he has intrusted to the celebrated French actress, Suzanne Armelle.

Even one of Italy's most eminent parliamentarians, who has also been more than once a minister, has specially composed for a cinematograph film "The Ruler" of Venice, a political and suggestive subject, "The Song of the Flowers."

Other important original works are promised by Sem Benelli, Roberto Bracco, Mario Settimelli, Luigi Barzini and many others.

The writer, however, who has really distinguished himself in a very short time for quantity and quality of his productions is the well known journalist, Lucio D'Ambra, who in less than a year has written "Miss Cyclone," "The Chess King," "The Towers," "The Alfieri," "They Called Her Cosetta," "Emir Circus Horse," and recently "The Wives and the Oranges," a subject which is out of the ordinary run for the strange nature of its conception and originality of its form, which were all well received by the public.

The public taste is on the verge of changing from bloodthirsty films, that have not as yet totally disappeared from the Italian cinematographic scene, such as the doings of the Apaches, the clever and shrewd deeds of the detectives.

Side by side therewith, and with the tendency to abolish them, there flourish subjects in which art is evident in the conception. Perhaps it may be that the reform of Italian cinematographic art is at hand, which at the same time will determine the reform of public taste. The Italian authors have at last condescended to enter the cinematographic field, which but yesterday they scorned and despised, tempted more by the aspect of lucre than by the desire to ennoble this form of art.

It is an unchallengeable fact that the entrance on the cinematographic scene of the above mentioned well known writers will at all events greatly influence the taste and habits of the public, however, always assuming that the literary and artistic productions of these gentlemen be not swayed by the dictates of a false and damaging commercial spirit, which means appealing to the public by pandering to its vilest instincts.

A proof of the tendency of the Italian public of today to break from the old style of the cinematograph is illustrated by the good reception given to the American films and especially those of the "Triangle Company." It is not the writer's object to draw comparisons between the films of other American companies which have been circulating in Italy and those of the Triangle that have been put on the Italian market but recently; but it must be admitted that the result of this enterprise is beginning to exceed the expectations of the Triangle manager in Italy. Ernest Bru, and his agent for the sale of the concession Kodato Rossi.

The enterprise has been well prepared with excellent advertising, and any new films which appear on the screen are accompanied and frequently preceded by articles in the Italian dailies, wherein are found unconditional praise instead of criticism.

Milan led and Rome followed, in according a magnificent christening to the Triangle, suffice it to record that within a fortnight no less than eight projections were given in presence of packed houses and an enthusiastic press. The debut took place with the film "The Coward." The local press at once recognized in this work, as well as in all the other productions of the Triangle, an unconditional superiority over the Italian productions and they also admired the novel method of advertising the trade mark of the Triangle, which is everywhere conspicuous, adorning hoardings at every street corner. It has been announced in print that the Triangle is the gospel of the cinematograph, and more particularly in Rome, the announcements bear a text similar to that of the National Loan: "Do Your Duty, See the Triangle Film!" and the people rushed and admired.

Perhaps the public does not admire completely and unconditionally, as the Italian public are still accustomed to the old familiar faces, real Italian types, such as Bertini, Borelli, Menichelli, divas of the Italian silent art; but the die has been cast, with the works of the Italian literature on one side and the films of the Triangle on the other, although elements in direct competition as it were, still they serve together to raise the Italian public taste, and to launch the national output in a field in which hitherto it had no competitors, and in which it now feels the necessity of fighting merely for existence and the necessity of improving.

"QUEEN OF THE SEA" NEW KELLERMANN PICTURE.

"Queen of the Sea" is the title decided upon for the new sub-sea picture in which the marvelous Annette Kellermann will be presented by William Fox as his premiere for the season of 1917-18.

Miss Kellermann and a company are now at Bar Harbor, Maine, and work has begun under the direction of John G. Adolfi. The new picture of which George Bronson Howard is the author will be entirely different in action and story to "A Daughter of the Gods."

"Efficiency Edgar's Courtship"

The First Venture of Taylor Holmes in the Silent Drama Pronounced Success—Ably Supported by Virginia Valli, Ernest Maupain and Rodney LaRock.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE stage creator of the roles of Bunker Bean and Frank Craven, which won him high favor among dramatic theatergoers will capture a fine following among photoplay theater fans by his first essay before the camera, if my opinion is worth anything. In "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," by Essanay, Taylor Holmes has not only given us a delightful and mirthful characterization of "Efficiency Edgar," but he has succeeded in "putting over" comedy points and subtle humor in a singularly effective way before the camera. In this Mr. Holmes is aided by clever subtitles, when the pictures alone are unequal to the task of expressing the full meaning. The method of Mr. Holmes is marked by a resourcefulness that is never lacking, whether it be mobile facial expressiveness, intelligent gesture or in happy "bits" of business. He is distinctly a comedian of the higher class, who makes his appeal to the intelligence of the spectator and not to his ordinary risibilities. Indeed, in this instance, he is compelled to do so by the nature of the story itself; for a less delicate handling of the part of Edgar would deprive the photocomedy of much of its cleverness and the spectator of much of his pleasure.

Scene from "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship" (Essanay).

"Efficiency" Edgar, or Edgar Bumpus as he was christened, believes that efficiency in love-making is quite as desirable as efficiency in business, and he employs it in his pursuit of Mary Pierce whom he has selected as the adorable object of his love. Mr. Pierce, her father, a grouchy old gentleman, is made to feel sorely the effectiveness of Edgar's efficiency, as he is checkmated at every move and is finally compelled to give his blessing to the young lovers. Young Mr. Wimple, a rival for Mary's hand, self-centered and bumptious, also becomes an easy victim and drops out of the story unhonored and unsung.

The Mary Pierce of Virginia Valli is quite creditable and Rodney La Rock's Wimple is satisfying. In his characterization of Mr. Pierce, the much-tried father of Mary, Ernest Maupain has added another splendid type to his long list of character successes before the camera. His make-up in the role, as is his wont, is an artistic study.

The production was in the care of Director Windorn, who is to be congratulated for careful and highly intelligent work.

The release will be made September 3 through K-E-S-E, Inc.

"Nearly Married" for Madge Kennedy.

Madge Kennedy's second Goldwyn production will be the famous stage success, "Nearly Married," by Edgar Selwyn, Goldwyn having purchased this delightful farce comedy during the current week. "Nearly Married," when presented several seasons ago in New York, was an all-season success at the Gaiety theater and played to tremendous audiences throughout America. At the time of its stage presentation it gave Bruce McRae one of the best roles of his career and also brought the beautiful Ruth Shepley into greater prominence.

"Babbling Tongues"

Seven-Part Ivan Photoplay Is Thoroughly French in Subject and Treatment and Contains Many Tense Dramatic Moments.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ONE is at a loss at first to understand why William Humphrey and George E. Hall should have laid the scene of their seven-part Ivan photoplay, "Babbling Tongues," in France and made all the characters French. The mystery is cleared up, however, before the end of the picture. In fact, most spectators will recognize, as soon as the story is well under way, that only in the land of the tri-color could such a combination of incidents flourish even in screen fiction. This is not to say that "Babbling Tongues" is devoid of merit. It is quite the reverse.

The story is peopled with high-strung individuals who seem to care a great deal more for "dramatic values" than for common sense, and who never lose an opportunity to make the most of the acting possibilities of their lives. Once started, however, it moves smoothly along the track approved of by the novelists and playwrights of France and contains many tense dramatic moments. So well does it hold the attention that it seems nothing short of impertinent to be told calmly, at the finish, that the thing never happened at all, that our sympathy has been obtained under false pretenses and the almost tragic denouement is the trick of a writer for the stage. The theater is the dwelling place of illusion—why shatter the illusion with one stroke of the pen?

The finish is led up to in this wise: An elderly French gentleman, who has been saved from financial ruin by a friend, marries a young wife, and then discovers that the son of his benefactor is living in a garret and undergoing the usual struggle of the unknown dramatist. He takes the young man into his home, and his relatives, friends and servants try to make him believe that the playwright and the young wife are betraying his trust. He will not listen at first, and he is justified in this; but the tongue of scandal is too strong for even innocence to counteract and keeps manufacturing apparent evidence until the husband drives both wife and playwright from his door and forces them into each other's arms. Before they can reach the outer door, however, the scene shifts and shows husband and wife and playwright sitting at a table and smiling happily at one another. The dramatist has been reading his last play to them, and made himself the hero of the story. The thing never really happened at all!

The picture has been given a liberal production, and is artistically directed by William Humphrey. The cast is an able one, James Morrison, Grace Valentine and Arthur Donaldson acting the playwright, the wife and the husband, respectively. Other capable members of the cast are: Paul Capellani, Louise Beaudet, Gladden James, Carolyn Birch, Richard Tucker and Robert E. Hill.

"The Bride of Fancy"

Little Mary McAlister, Supported by a Cast of Children in the Latest Episode of Essanay's "Do Children Count?" Series.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

LITTLE MARY M'ALISTER'S latest episode in Essanay's "Do Children Count?" series is full of children and it is about children. Yet it is a picture that is too sophisticated for an audience of children. It will afford unlimited enjoyment to adults. It is the kind of picture that keeps lovers of children in a continual ripple of laughter from beginning to end. This episode was released August 15. The screen time is twenty-five minutes.

Scene from "The Bride of Fancy" (Essanay).

The picture is a fantastic dream of Little Mary's. But it is much better than most dream pictures. After her mother has kissed her good-night and left the room, Little Mary gets up, steals to her mother's room and comes back with her mother's new dress and hat. She is always at her best when she is trying on grown-up clothes. Then she lies down on the bed in all her finery and dreams.

The dream is a delicious burlesque on the story of high society life where the multimillionaire betroths his daughter to a count. The daughter's true lover fights a duel with the count; afterward sets detectives on his trail, and at the betrothal banquet breaks in to announce that the count is an imposter. Jack Paul and Ellis Paul are the children who take the leading parts in this burlesque. They are made up with false whiskers in burlesque style. Even Little Mary wears shoes too big for her. When the count takes her for a joy ride it is in a child's auto propelled by foot power. The children maintain the spirit of the burlesque with great realism. They make believe without half trying and get good fun out of it.

Little Mary's awakening from her dream occurs when she is dreaming that she has fainted and is lying on a couch and that her true, soldier lover is bending over her and kissing her back to consciousness. She awakes to find that the true and only Bo-bo, her bull pup, has climbed on the bed and is licking her face. As this picture dissolves, the audience is as much surprised as Mary.

The sub-titles are very good. In the scene where the father is discussing the marriage settlement with the count, the count asks for a million dollars and then accepts ten dollars on account. The children act this picture better than adults could do because they maintain a serious demeanor through it all. This is the essence of true burlesque acting.

"The Law of the Land"

A Complete Piece of Paramount Artistry with Madame Petrova in the Leading Role.

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

"The Law of the Land," a Paramount subject released on August 12, has a basic idea which will be popular as long as there is rigid enforcement of laws originally enacted for elastic interpretation; its remarkable similarity to the De Saulles case acts as stimulant to close attention, and its artistry of directing and interpretation may be called complete, though there are some minor errors and a motif denied as modern by many critics, the old motif of many stage plays, that of woman's sacrifice in marriage for the honor of the family. In spite of its tendency to theatricalism, the mood of "The Law of the Land" is so admirably preserved by the fine cast and by exceptionally appropriate settings, many of the latter being works of art in themselves, that the whole effect, the illusion, is delightfully preserved. This is more difficult than producers realize, for we are in an era of serving dried fruit, whose live flavor has been evaporated in some other kind of performance, at the dawn of an era when people will demand the fresh article.

Madame Petrova is entirely at home in her emotional role, but her eloquent eyelids lose effectiveness at times from a common studio fault, that of a make-up too obviously artificial, in this case ageing her and wholly unnecessary. She is otherwise in an almost constant state of mental revelation, an impressive exponent of screen psychology, at all times a marvel of dignified grace in movement. It would require an artist like Madame Petrova to portray a character rarely seen as yet, that of the modern woman of high intelligence, of as acute sensibilities as the traditional stage heroine, yet with a high-strung nervous temperament under the control of a sound, normal and well-trained mind. She exhibits many of the subtle half-disclosures of thought and feeling so essential in an interpretation of the up-to-date American woman, demonstrating a higher capability than is called for in any but the most recent stories of human life. In other words she rises to the opportunity afforded her, and goes beyond it with the unfailing intuition of a true artist.

There is a romantic setting at the outset announced to be a scene in the Riviera—by this is generally meant the French Riviera—with a back drop portraying a promontory like that of Monaco, or of Cape Ferrat near Nice. It is entirely appropriate and very well done, but it plants the locality. There is only one gambling casino of note in that neighborhood, that of Monte Carlo, familiar to an enormous number of good Americans, and the games there are roulette and trente et quarente. The latter only is a card game, and the pack is handled by the dealer. The old lady could not cheat at cards there, nor would she be exposed if she attempted to cheat at the tables—it is tried every hour. The proper location for such a scene would have been a private villa. But this is of small importance—it is remarked in the way of suggestive criticism—it does not mar the story, even to the initiated. The whole effect is one of superior and complete artistry, highly creditable to all engaged in the production.

"Durand of the Bad Lands"

Fox Makes Burlesque With Dustin Farnum as Wild Western Hero—It Amuses and Will Entertain.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THERE is in the screen writings of Maibelle Hikes Justice, who has furnished the script for "Durand of the Bad Lands," Fox five-reel picture, released August 12, a marked feeling for character and liveliness of humor. Both of these traits are noticeable in this offering. Its hero, Durand, is played by Dustin Farnum, and it is he who performs the exploits. The background is modern with railroads and macadam highways. This bandit is wanted by the sheriff for many high crimes and misdemeanors. Both these men love the same girl and in the end the bad man proves the most desirable. It is he, for instance, who drives off a band of Indians who have jumped a caravan of settlers. That they should have taken the train is part of the humor. These bad reds have killed just exactly nineteen sturdy whites when Durand comes along in time to save three kids. The sheriff finds his holster on the field, and for the added crime of wholesale murder another thou' is added to the reward for his head.

The Governor of the State is inspecting the border, probably as a military precaution, when the same band of Indians race the train and hold it up. The sheriff is on board, but he too has to hold up his hands. The chief runs away with the Governor's daughter, but not until Durand appears—it is he who makes them scamper. He, too, is the man who races after the chief and saves the girl. The sheriff thereupon takes him up, pleas of the Governor notwithstanding. The trial is a comical bit, with the Governor waiting to reprieve the culprit after he has been condemned to "kick off from the nearest tree." The Governor sits there melodramatically to turn the trick at the right time. There is a good deal of freshness in the "comic relief," and that parson must not be forgotten.

"Through Fire and Water"

Episode of Stingaree with a New, Breezy Story Makes Entertaining Picture—Has a Delightfully Humorous Incident.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THERE is distinctly good quality in the story told by this episode of the Stingaree series, "Through Fire and Water." Its humor is the real article, freshly thought up, breezy and quite enjoyable. It's a picture that takes a spectator out of himself with a care-free tale.

The ugly bad-man villain is seen crossing the desert. He lights a cigarette and drops off to sleep while his coat takes fire. Stingaree, the bad-man hero, sees his predicament and gives him the famous white coat to wear. A little group of incidents helps the bad man to recognize Stingaree, and he goes to the police to try for the reward. Howie's bucking horse takes him to a cabin where a pretty young woman gives him a meal. Stingaree, looking for Howie, learns that the man with the coat is helping the police. The girl in the cabin, who helped Howie, turns out to be the wife of the ugly bad man, who has deserted her with all her money, 500 pounds, just the amount of the reward. Stingaree goes out and sees the chief of police and the bad man looking for him. He leads them a chase till at night they fall asleep, one on one side of a stream, one on the other. Then Stingaree changes horses with the chief and leaves his hat. The policeman, by the way, has the 500 on him. Then on the other side of the stream he makes the ugly bad man look, in the distance, like himself, Stingaree. When the sun rises and the two awake to go about their business, they look across and each thinks he sees Stingaree. There's a rifle fight and the ugly bad man, who needed killing, is shot. The reward is taken to the little woman. It's her money.

Official British Government War Pictures

"The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras" the Fourth Installment of These Remarkable Views From the French Battle Front.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE latest installment of the Official British Government War Pictures consists of ten thousand feet of remarkable views from the French battle front, and are entitled "The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras." The large number of persons that have witnessed the previous pictures sent to this side of the ocean by our Allies in Great Britain need only to be assured that the latest films from the seat of the war are as interesting as the others to insure them equal success in all the picture theaters in this country. Actual warfare as it is now being carried on with the aid of big guns, "tanks," airplanes, bicycle corps and all the marvelous modern machinery that human skill has placed at the disposal of the millions of men now fighting for universal freedom is shown in these pictures, many of the views being taken during the heat of battle. Hundreds of thousands of feet of film were secured, some of it of so ghastly a nature as to prevent its being shown. Enough realism, in the shape of wounded soldiers being treated at a dressing station near the front, has been retained, however, and the joy with which the inhabitants of a village vacated by the retreating Germans welcome the advance guard of victorious English soldiers furnishes further proof of how rapidly the camera has followed the march of events.

The pictures taken from an aeroplane are especially interesting. Views showing the enemy's trenches and camps are included among them. As a finish the spectator is shown how the face of the earth looks to an airman when he is spiraling downward at the rate of seventy miles an hour.

It is the purpose of the British Government to make these views constitute a pictorial history of the British forces in the Great War, and every care is being taken to secure the best material possible. Another interesting fact in connection with these pictures is that over $200,000 has been contributed to the American Red Cross from the proceeds resulting from their exhibition in this country.

"Transgression"

Five-Part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature With Earle Williams Is Fairly Interesting Melodrama.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

MELODRAMA with a society atmosphere classifies "Transgression," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature written by J. Stuart Blackton and Cyrus Townsend Brady. The story turns on a situation that is hardly plausible, but, once it is accepted, it leads up to a well sustained climax, and competent acting by the entire cast, under the direction of Paul Scardon, insures the bringing out of the best points in the picture.

Hal Page, whose brother is mayor of the city, falls in love with a lady who is no better than she should be, and throws over an old admirer in order to accept an invitation to become Mrs. Hal Page. Hal's rival, whose name is Staley, meets him one night at the home of the lady and attempts to shoot him. The mayor's brother seizes a pistol belonging to the cause of the trouble, and when the smoke of battle clears away Staley is lying dead on the floor. Stephen Page arrives at this moment and takes charge of affairs. He hurries his brother off to Spain and tells the woman that the secret must be kept for all their sakes.

The next morning Staley's body is found in an alley. Later on the Shrefton woman marries a crooked politician, and when the District Attorney is about to convict him, his wife goes to the mayor and threatens to tell who killed Staley if Stephen Page does not have the case against her husband stopped. The mayor will not agree, and subsequent developments prove that Hal did not fire the fatal shot, but took the blame in order to shield the woman, Staley being killed in a struggle with her. A love affair which the mayor has with the daughter of the District Attorney is also brought to a happy end. The doubtful point is in having the woman about to give information that would lead to a searching examination into a case of manslaughter of which she herself is guilty.

The acting honors of the drama go to Billie Billings as Caroline Shrefton. Edwards Davis is excellent as the District Attorney, and Earle Williams, Webster Campbell, Mary Maurice, Corinne Griffith, Denton Vane and Jack Ellis keep the performance up to the mark.

"Hashimura Togo

A Paramount Drama of Japanese Character Admirably Pictured by Wm. C. DeMille, with Sessue Hayakawa in the Leading Role.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

HASHIMURA TOGO is a very intelligent character portrayal with exquisite settings, both Japanese and American, in a story of attempted sacrifice on the part of Togo to save his family honor, while he becomes the unwitting instrument of saving an American heroine from a sacrifice at the altar to save her family honor. That both are saved is due to the acumen of an unheroic American newspaper reporter. The villainous trustee of an American girl's property attempts hypothecation by forging a note from her father to himself for the sum of $350,000.00. He uses this note to force a promise of marriage from the girl, although she is already engaged to a man she loves. On receiving her verbal promise to marry him, the villain tears the forged note up in her presence and throws the scraps in a waste basket.

Scene from "Hashimura Togo" (Paramount).

Togo, who has sacrificed his own future to save a guilty brother in Japan is employed in the girl's household. He patches the note together, writes in his own vernacular to the newspapers about it, and, in this way, the matter comes to the attention of a plain ordinary reporter, who places it before the district attorney. Togo is taken before his own father, now an American consular officer, and ordered to commit hari-kari. He is saved when about to plunge a knife in his body by the real culprit's confession, while the young American girl is saved at the altar by discovery that the villain she is about to marry is a forger, and all turns out happily in the end. The release is remarkable for a clear glimpse of Japanese character and for the artistic manner in which it is handled by Mr. DeMille.

Triangle Productions

"Wooden Shoes," Five-Part Photoplay Starring Bessie Barriscale, and "A Pawnbroker's Heart," One-Part Keystone Comedy Featuring Chester Conklin.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE story which J. G. Hawks has utilized in "Wooden Shoes," five-part Triangle photoplay starring Bessie Barriscale, is set against a picturesque background of Dutch scenery that has been reproduced with pleasing fidelity. The canals, bridges, quaint shops and quainter customs and costumes of the people are all there, just as they have been sketched and painted by a long line of famous artists. Faithfulness to local color is one of the chief virtues of this comedy-drama which serves Miss Barriscale as an interesting medium for the display of her ability to enact a pretty little Dutch maiden in queer pointed cap, stomping around in a pair of wooden shoes. At first sight the unusual vivacity shown by Pampy seems a trifle inconsistent to the character, but when it is known that she is one-half American the objection disappears.

The explanation of how this member of the Holland-American line came to be reveals the fact that Pampy's father was an American tourist, who married a native of the Dutch village of Diepenveen and was disowned by his wealthy father. The death of Pampy's mother and the loss of her father's health forced the young girl to become the wage-earner of the family. Just previous to her father's death Pampy and a young American artist fall in love with each other. The girl's grandfather relents shortly after his son's death and sends for Pampy. The schemeing mother of another Dutch maiden contrives to pass off her own daughter as the wealthy heiress, but Pampy arrives in time to secure her wealthy grandfather and the artist for herself.

Not a novel story by any means, but clean in theme and entertaining throughout. The care with which it has been produced has already been mentioned, and Bessie Barriscale as Pampy fits the part most becomingly. Jack Livingston as the artist, J. J. Dowling as the bad man of the group, and Lon Likes as Hans Dunkelberger constitute the star's leading support. Thomas S. Guise, Howard Hickman, Will H. Bray, J. Frank Burke, Margaret Thompson and Gertrude Claire are also competent.

"A Pawnbroker's Heart."

Keystone Comedies are known by their casts. With Chester Conklin, Ben Turpin, Peggy Pearce, Caroline Rankin and Glen Cavender to take care of the acting end of this rapidly moving farce there is bound to be something, or someone, stirring all the time. "A Pawnbroker's Heart" keeps pace with the Keystone reputation, the characters being reinforced by a number of nicely behaved dummies. There is a plot that struggles manfully not to get lost in the general mix-up and just manages to do it, and a crook finish that involves the robbery of the office safe. The one object of rough house comedy is never absent, however, and that is the one recommendation that has any weight with the man out in front who has paid his money to be amused.

Pathe Pictures

"Miss Nobody," Five-Reel Gold Rooster Picture Featuring Gladys Hulette, and "Lonesome Luke's Wild Women," Two-Reel Rolin Comedy.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

AIDED by two excellent character bits in the hands of two capable players, Gladys Hulette and Director William Parke lift "Miss Nobody," a five-reel drama, several degrees above the average. The picture was produced by Astra and released by Pathe on August 19. It is a thoroughly wholesome subject and one that should make its biggest hit with neighborhood audiences. Minor weaknesses are found in the fact that the denouement is unsmooth to the point of abruptness, and that the old, old idea of a locket establishing an identity has been used. Up to the denouement the continuity is very smooth and the story unfolds in an almost unbroken succession of connected scenes. The picture is more a screened novel than a screen drama. There is much that appeals in the picture.

The story tells of a girl who knows nothing of her antecedents. She only knows that the kindest folks in the world are "Daddy" Crespi and "Uncle" Malone, pawnbroker partners. The two old men send the girl to a fashionable school. Finally pressed by her as to her identity, the kindly men lie and tell her she is the daughter of a deceased English Earl. This leads to many logical plot complications, and matters finally are straightened out when an English Lord discovers through a locket that the girl is his daughter. Thus the romance between her and the Lord's ward is consummated.

Scene from "Miss Nobody" (Astra).

Miss Hulette seldom has been seen in a more atractive role than that of Roma. Cesare Gravina and H. G. Andrews have the parts of the pawnbrokers. Their characterizations help the production immeasurably. William Parke, Jr., is the hero; Sidney Mather the heavy.

Director Parke has injected the same convincing and pleasing atmosphere into this picture as he has injected into previous productions. He is especially to be commended on his lightings. The writer seldom has seen better or more effectively lighted scenes than a few darkened room scenes in "Miss Nobody."

"Lonesome Luke's Wild Women."

Harold Lloyd and his co-workers have succeeded in presenting a very good comedy number in the two-reeler titled "Lonesome Luke's Wild Women." Especial note must be made of the exteriors in this number. So beautiful are some of them that they would need no human action at all to make them good screen entertainment. But the action is there, too. Hal Roach dircted the piece. Luke is aided in his comedy capers by Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. Most of the scenes are laid in an Oriental palace. These sets are sumptuous, and it is on the thickly-upholstered divans that the "wild" women are found. Luke and his pal, sailors, get into all sorts of complications with the palace guards. It is not so much the story as the incident and individual work of the players and director that make this comedy worth-while.

"Pay Me"

Five-Part Western Melodrama on Jewel Productions Program Has Strong Story and Is Excellently Played by Dorothy Phillips and Supporting Company.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is good, red blood all through "Pay Me," a five-part western melodrama written and directed by Joseph De Grasse for Jewel Productions, with Dorothy Phillips as the featured player. The story is full of primitive romance and its movement is, for the most part, steadily forward. Joe Lawson and Hal Curtis are partners in a mine, at the opening of the drama. Both men are married, Lawson's child being a boy and Curtis and his wife having a baby girl. Joe deserts his family and runs off with a young girl, after a row with his partner in which Hal's wife is killed and Hal himself badly wounded. Through force of circumstances Hilda Hendricks, the woman for whom Lawson leaves his home, takes the Curtis child with her. Seventeen years later finds Lawson known as "Killer" White and the proprietor of a gambling house and dance hall. Marta, the Curtis girl, who thinks Lawson is her father, has been taught to deal faro in Joe's saloon, but has been protected from worse evil by her foster mother. A young lumber boss arrives in town and is attracted by the girl, until he discovers her in the saloon and thinks she is like the rest of the women inmates. This man is the son of Lawson, but he does not know White's real identity.

Hal Curtis, who is still looking for Lawson and his stolen child, also turns up at Joe's place, and the two men recognize each other. This starts a bloody battle in which Lawson takes a prominent part and rescues Marta at the risk of his life. Joe dies without letting his son find out the truth, and the children of the two bitter enemies learn to love each other.

The atmosphere, construction and stage direction in this melodrama are very much to the credit of the producer. The acting also is of merit. Dorothy Phillips is appealing as Marta and almost convinces one that a pure, innocent-minded woman such as she depicts might be found dealing faro in a gambling hall. Wm. Stowell has the breadth of shoulders and also of mental grasp required for the character of young Lawson. Lon Chaney makes the bad man of the plot a little too palpable, but is forceful nevertheess. Evelyn Selby is practically faultless as Hilda, and William Clifford keeps Hal Curtis up to the mark. Ed. Brown, Tom Wilson and Clare De Brey complete the cast.

"Mr. Opp."

Bluebird Presents Excellent Picturization of Alice Heagan Rice's Story—Arthur Hoyt and Neva Gerber Featured—Directed by Lynn F. Reynolds.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

BLUEBIRD proves "The Play's the Thing" in "Mr. Opp," a five-reel visualization of the novel of the same title by Alice Heagan Rice, also authoress of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." Without a big star, but with none the less capable players, Director Lynn F. Reynolds has succeeded in transferring to the screen a story whose humanness and substantiality is made evident in every foot of the five reels. As a whole the piece is a character study drawn with words by a master of her craft and limned on the screen by a master of his craft. No human note that could have been struck has been left unsounded; the uppermost chord is one of sympathy for vain, optimistic, lovable, self-sacrificing Mr. Opp. Arthur Hoyt takes the title role. He might have stepped from the pages of the book, so well does he fit and play the part.

Scene from "Mr. Opp" (Bluebird).

The story deals with plain folks in a small town. Mr. Opp becomes the guardian of his half-witted sister. Through many vicissitudes he is optimistic, hoping for the best and fighting for the right. He starts a small newspaper, living more on the plaudits of the few inhabitants than on material pay. Finally he makes the supreme sacrifice—he gives up the girl he loves so that he may live a life of service to his sister. The picture follows the story of the novel closely with the exception of the ending, which, in the photoplay, is made more happy than that in the novel.

Director Reynolds' work cannot be too highly complimented. His atmosphere is always flawless and his artistry made evident at all times. His choice of types shows a keen and sympathetic knowledge of the needs of the story. The titles are exceptionally good. Neva Gerber takes second acting honors. She has the difficult role of the half-witted girl and does splendid work, as do also George Chesbro and George Hernandez.

Triangle Program for August 26.

Bessie Love in "Wee Lady Betty," a play of Irish life, and Jack Devereaux and Anna Lehr in "Grafters," will be the screen luminaries on the Triangle program for the week of August 26. Miss Love, whose characterization in "The Sawdust Ring" was credited as being one of the best recorded on Triangle film, has in "Wee Lady Betty" another part designed for her abilities as an interpreter of juvenile characters.

Frank Borzage has the chief role opposite Miss Love in this play, which was written by J. G. Hawks and directed by Charles Miller. The large cast of principals includes Charles K. French, Walter Perkins, L. Jefferies, Walter Whitman, Aggie Herring, Thornton Edwards, Alfred Hollingsworth and J. D. Lockney.

"Grafters" is a farcical treatment of swindlers who swindle themselves. Jack Devereaux appears as the "silk-stockinged" youth who buys more blue sky than can be located in the universe, and Anna Lehr is the alluring young person who connives to defraud him, according to plans made by the young man's uncle, who aims to teach the boy a few lessons in business sagacity. Jack turns the tables and proceeds to teach the uncle, the young lady and her conferedates. Frank Currier, Irene Leonard, George Siegmann and Robert Crimmins are among the supporting players. Arthur Rosson, assisted by Dick Rosson, directed the production under the supervision of Allan Dwan. The play was picturized from a story by James W. Adams.

Constance Talmadge at Work in "Scandal."

The first picture in which Constance Talmadge, who is the latest addition to the Selznick Constellation, will make her appearance as a film star is a powerful screen version of Cosmo Hamilton's sensational serial "Scandal," now appearing in the Green Book.

The role of Beatrix Vanderdyke, "the worst spoiled woman in America," gives Miss Talmadge a most unusual opportunity to show her talents. Indeed, it is a rare thing for a young screen star to be intrusted with the creation of a character sc imbued with personality and abounding with opportunity for individual expression.

Cosmo Hamilton, whose "Blindness of Virtue" and "Sins of the Children" place him in the forefront of British novelists, has not only done his most powerful piece of work in "Scandal," but has also written a novel which abounds in the most remarkable way with elements which make for popularity.

Miss Constance Talmadge will therefore make her first appearance as a Selznick star in a play the sheer power and scope of which provide her with an ideal vehicle for her initial stellar venture.

The screen version of "Scandal" is being directed by Charles Giblyn, and in the notable company which has been collected in support of the young star are Harry C. Browne, J. Herbert Frank, Aimee Dalmores, W. P. Carleton, Ida Darling and Gladden James.

Work on the production has been going along steadily for the past two weeks in the Selznick Studio in the Bronx and on the beautiful estate of Commodore E. C. Benedict at Greenwich, Conn. Commodore Benedict has not only placed his mansion and grounds at the disposal of Director Giblyn and the "Scandal" company, but has also graciously played host on his famous steam yacht the Oneida, on which a number of the more important scenes of the play have been photographed.

Harry Keepers at camera, Wesley Ruggles, assistant director reading script; Frank Berresford, technical director, Dell Henderson, stage director; Harry Redmond, chief electrician, preparing for opening up the lens on the first scenes of the Charles Frohman stage succecss, "Outcast" in which Ann Murdock will be presented by Empire All Star Corporation.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

THROUGH FIRE AND WATER (Kalem) A continuation of the Stingaree series in two reels. It is a delightfully fresh and breezy story and is sure to make many friends among those who see it. For a longer notice see elsewhere in this issue.

DON'T LOSE YOUR COAT (Black Cat). This is a two-reel, slapstick written and directed by the leading actor, Ameedee Rastrelli. He is a farmer's son who comes to the city to marry an heiress. A funny situation comes at the end, where he gets his foot caught in a water pitcher.

THE MAINSPRING (Falcon).—This is an excellent four-reel mining story. It was directed by Henry King, the young man who plays the leading part. The beginning is strong, and action that holds the interest fills each reel. Seldom are so many good situations used in a single picture. It starts off as if it might be a detective story, but quickly changes to a story of adventure. The direction and acting is excellent. The fire in the mine, with which the picture ends is handled with plenty of thrills. Careful workmanship abounds in this picture Ethel Pepprell plays opposite Henry King.

THE FURNISHED ROOM (Broadway Star) A two-reel O. Henry story. This is not as good as its immediate predecessors. It is a tragedy with a moving picture happy ending tacked on. The shock we get when we think that the boy has committed suicide by gas in the same room in which the girl did, is not corrected by seeing their meeting in the hospital with the prospect of both recovering. The story of the picture is merely a series of happenings. The girl goes from one theatrical agency to another searching for work and finds none. The only dramatic element is the final situation, the suicide And this is not an entertaining situation on the screen. The boy is J. Frank Glendon; the girl is Agnes Eyres.

THE SOLE SURVIVOR (Selig).—A two-reel story of adventure in the jungles of Central America. This picture is a long time getting started. The early scenes are poorly directed. But from the time the hunter finds a girl, a prisoner in one of the mad scientist's cages, the interest is strong. When the hunter is put in a cage with a lioness who puts her paws on his chest as he lies on the ground, the interest is stronger. The story-within-a-story construction clogs up the action somewhat. The girl makes a startling change of clothes at the end while she is still in the jungle, where she was shipwrecked and has been a prisoner for two years. She changes from a wild animal's skin, in which she is very attractive, to up-to-date shirtwaist and skirt. In its best scenes, this is a bully wild animal subject.

HER HEART'S DESIRE (Selig).—A one-reel story of the old-fashioned type. It is full of incident but little else. At the reception after the girl's marriage to her first husband, the bride is fondled by one of the men guests. This scene does not look quite right. A flock of sheep in the latter part of the picture makes an attractive background for the girl and her shepherd lover. At the beginning, a little child is knocked down by the girl's first husband in showing that he does not like children. This picture is only fair in its entertainment value.

Art Dramas, Inc.

THINK IT OVER (U. S. Amusement Corp.), August 13.—Catherine Calvert is featured in this five-part comedy-drama, supported by Richard Tucker. He is a middle-aged bachelor. She is a school girl with a wicked guardian. A review was printed in last week's issue.

Bluebird Pictures Corp.

THE SHOW DOWN, August 13.—A desert island and a shipwreck are important features in this five-part photoplay starring Myrtle Gonzales and George Hernandez. The story is pleasing and has been given a careful production. A longer review was printed on page 1231 of the issue of Aug. 25.

MR. OPP, August 20.—An excellent picturization of Alice Heagan Rice's novel of the same name. Lynn F. Reynolds' direction has made the photoplay as good a picture as is the book. Arthur Hoyt draws a fine character. There are smiles and tears in the picture, which is recommended to every exhibitor. A longer review is printed in the review columns.

Fox Film Corporation.

DURAND OF THE BAD LANDS, August 12.—A five-reel burlesque on the once popular wild west melo. It has some things in it that are quite new and most of it is refreshing. It is not an ambitious picture, and one hardly worthy of any specially high commendation, except that it interests and amuses. It is not a scream; but surely it is entertaining. For a longer notice see elsewhere in this issue.

THE SOFT TENDERFOOT, August 12.—A lively comic burlesque with Tom Mix as the astonishing tenderfoot at the ranch. It is a picture to kill worry and will furnish a good time. We can safely say that there isn't a dead yard in its two thousand feet. It is just stunts, but they are often very amusing.

Greater Vitagraph.

TRANSGRESSION, August 20.—A five-part Blue Ribbon feature with Earle Williams, this picture is a fairly interesting melodrama and is well acted by the entire cast. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

BOBBY, THE PACIFIST, Aug. 27.—A very good addition to the one-part Bobby Connelly comedies, this release shows that there are times when the most ardent pacifist finds that the only thing to do is to fight. The small star acts with his usual effectiveness.

WORRIES AND WOBBLES.—A comedy number, by Lawrence Semon and Graham Baker. This centers about a married man who comes home with a jag and finds his wife waiting for him in anger and tears. A burglar appears and the police are called out. This has no particular plot and develops only a fair amount of humor, though well handled for this type of humor.

CHUMPS AND CHANCES.—This is an amusing one-part, rough-house farce, written by Lawrence Semon and Graham Baker. Everyone works with a will all through the reel and risk life and limb with equal abandon.

Ivan Film Corporation.

BABBLING TONGUES, August.—William Humphry and George E. Hall are the authors of this seven-part photoplay, which is French in story and a good example of its class. The cast, headed by Grace Valentine and James Morrison, does it justice. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Jewel Productions, Inc.

PAY ME, August.—Dorothy Phillips heads the cast of this five-part western melodrama, written and directed by Joseph De Grasse. The picture is red-blooded and is admirably acted and produced. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay

EFFICIENCY EDGAR'S COURTSHIP (Essanay), September 3.—A high-class comedy of excellent merit. Taylor Holmes, in the title role, makes a pronounced hit and he is ably supported by Virginia Valli, Ernest Maupain and Rodney La Rock. On another page, in this issue, will be found a detailed review.

THE LITTLE CHEVALIER (Conquest No. 5).—This is the four-reel dramatic feature of this program. The story is by M. E. M. Davis. Shirley Mason plays the leading part. The action of the story takes place in Louisiana before the Revolutionary War. The boy and the girl are representatives of French families. The girl's father killed the boy's father in a duel in France. The girl, dressed as a boy, is The Little Chevalier, who defends the honor of her family. Later, when she is dressed as a girl, the boy meets her and falls in love with her. The part of the boy is played by Ray McKee. Richard Tucker is the villain, a secretary of the Governor of Louisiana, who attempts to prevent the marriage. This is a fairly interesting costume play.

GOLD AND DIAMOND MINES OF SOUTH AFRICA (Conquest No. 5).—This is a half-reel showing how gold and diamonds are taken out of the earth in South Africa, with instructive street scenes in large cities of the district.

THE DINOSAUR AND THE BABOON (Conquest No. 5).—This is a half-reel manikin play by Willis H. O'Brien. The figures are very jerky in their movements. The comedy is low, but not vulgar. It is not especially interesting.

BIRDS OF A FAR-OFF SEA (Conquest No. 5).—This is a half-reel showing the bird life on an island three hundred yards square off the southern tip of Africa. There are Solan geese, cormorants and penquins. These are interesting scenes and beautiful, too.

SOLDIERS OF THE SEA (Conquest No. 5).—This is a full reel showing the activities of the U. S. Marines, interspersed with many strained patriotic sub-titles.

THE BRIDGE OF FANCY (Essanay), August 15.—A 25-minute episode in the "Do Children Count?" series. Little Mary AcAlister heads a cast of children, among whom are Jack Paul and Ellis Paul, in a burlesque on the high society story of the millonaire's daughter, who is betrothed to a bogus count. This is an excellent picture for lovers of children. It is reviewed in this issue.

OPEN PLACES (Essanay), August 20.—This is a five-reeler written and directed by W. S. Van Dyke. Jack Gardner is a constable of the Royal North West Mounted Police. The story is about life on the northern border of the United States. Ruth King is a school teacher in Montana. She marries a bad man, but does not find out how bad he is until afterwards. Carl Stockdale is the husband. This photoplay lacks interest.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

MISS ROBINSON CRUSOE (B. A. Rolfe), July 30.—The star of this five-part comedy is Emmy Whelen, the English musical comedy star. The scenes are laid among the Thousand Islands and are often picturesque. The story is frothy and passably well acted. A longer review was printed on page 1228 of the issue of Aug. 25.

Odgen Pictures Corporation.

THE LUST OF THE AGES, August.—A pretentious subject in seven parts, featuring Lillian Walker. It is a preachment against the love of gold and the money power. The story branches in so many directions there is a failure to consolidate interest. The picture is reviewed on another page.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE VARMINT (Lasky).—Jack Pickford and Louise Huff are co-stars in this five-part story of colloge life taken from Owen Johnson's well-known novel. The picture duplicates the success of the printed book. It was reviewed at length on page 1230 of the issue of Aug. 25.

HASHIMURA TOGO.—A story of Japanese character, with exquisite settings by Mr. DeMille and an admirable portrayal of the leading role by Sessue Hayakawa.

THE LAW OF THE LAND.—An unusually successful adaptation, artistically done throughout, of strong interest and with Madame Petrova very effective in the leading role.

Pathe Exchange Inc.

MISS NOBODY (Astra), August 19.—A five-reel Gladys Hulette subject that has all the elements that appeal. It is an especially good picture for neighborhood audiences, in that besides being entertaining it is thoroughly wholesome. The story tells of a girl who is educated by two old pawnbrokers. They tell her she is a lady, which leads to many amusing complications. It later develops that the girl really is a lady. A longer review is printed in the review columns.

THE DICE OF DEATH (Astra), Sept. 2.—Episode No. 9 of "The Fatal Ring" serial. The instalment moves rapidly and contains its full quota of excitement. The story develops to the point where the spectator is led to believe that Pearl has been stabbed by the plotters and closes at the most exciting moment.

LONESOME LUKE'S WILD WOMEN (Rolin), Sept. 2.—A two-reel comedy number, with Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. It is a good number. The exterior scenes are very beautiful in themselves and the interiors, which show an Oriental palace, quite sumptuous. The release relies more on incident and the individual work of the players and director than the story. It tells of two sailors who reach a shah's palace and harem. Reviewed in the review columns.

CENTRAL COLORADO (Combitone), September 2.—A one-reel scenic-educational release of merit. Most of the footage of the reel is devoted to instructive and beautiful scenes showing gold mining in the Cripple Creek section of Colorado. Through the agency of the camera the spectator is brought through every interesting point of a gold refinery. The latter portion of the reel is devoted to footage containing well-photographed scenic views of the same general geographical section.

FINE FEATHERS (International), September 2.—A split-reel embracing an educational-industrial and a "Jerry on the Job" cartoon. The first sections shows from beginning to end the processes by which ostrich-plume fans and boas are made. The cartoon is especially funny. It shows Jerry in the uniform of a National Guardsman and his trials and tribulations in guarding the Mexican-American border.

OFFICIAL BRITISH GOVERNMENT WAR PICTURES.—The fourth installment of the Official British Government War Pictures is called "The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras," and is equal in interest to the previous numbers. A long review will be found on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation.

GOLDEN RULE KATE, August 12.—This is a five-part Western melodrama in which the title role is excellently played by Louise Glaum. The story is full of interest and its possibilities have been fully realized by the producer and the cast. It was reviewed at length on page 1231 of the issue of August 25.

A PAWNBROKER'S HEART, August 19.—Chester Conklin and Ben Turpin are the principal peace-disturbers in this one-reel Keystone comedy, directed by Eddie Cline. It moves with the regulation Keystone speed and has its share of amusing situations. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

WOODEN SHOES, August 26.—The scenes of this five-part photoplay are laid in Holland, and the star, Bessie Barriscale, plays the owner of the pair of wooden shoes charmingly. The production is complete in every detail. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

WHY THEY LEFT HOME (Joker), Week of August 72.—A comedy number, by C. B. Hoadley, featuring William Franey, Zasu Pitts, Lillian Peacock and Milburne Moranti. The country youth and his sweetheart join a show troupe and some entertaining comedy ensues. This contains a number of quiet chuckles and is quite amusing, though not unusual in plot.

THE HANDS IN THE DARK (Star Featurette), Week of August 27.—A two-reel subject, by E. M. McCall, featuring E. N. Wallack, Rex Roselli, J. Warren Kerrigan and Edith Johnson. This is a melodramatic offering, in which the hero quarrels with the girl's father. The butler, taking advantage of this circumstance, kills the old man and steals the jewels. The hero is sentenced to death and on the eve of execution a chase ensues to obtain a pardon from the governor on the grounds of new evidence. This has been done so often that it is hard to put new thrills into the situation. It is well handled and has the advantage of strong presentation. On last reel is also a short scenic, "Old French Towns."

THE HOUSE OF SHADOWS (Universal Special), August 27.—Episode No. 10 of "The Gray Ghost." This installment introduces a number of weird and mysterious happenings, in which The Gray Ghost appears simultaneously in two places. He first disappears from the place where he is lying, presumably dead, and then shows up in the house of mystery and at the police station. These new developments stir the interest considerably and keep the observer wondering what the solution will be.

BUSTING INTO SOCIETY (Joker), Rel. Week of August 27.—A comedy number, featuring Gale Henry and Milton Sims. The former is a poor girl with social aspirations and her lover is a hod carrier. The father wins a lottery prize and they break into social life. This has not a very strong plot, but contains some good burlesque touches and will bring numerous smiles.

JUNGLE TREACHERY (Bison), Rel. Week of August 27.—A two-reel subject, by W. B. Pearson, featuring Fred Church, Eileen Sedgwick, Fred Montague, Charles Brinley and others. The hero goes with a party to make a survey of some African jungle land. Adventures with wild beasts and war with the natives are interesting features. The night photography is good. This is stronger than the average two-reel subject.

THE WINNING PAIR (Gold Seal), Rel. Week of August 27.—A three-reeler featuring Ruth Stonehouse. It is unfortunate if she is to become associated with parts which requires the telling of a number of falsehoods. Her hobby in this picture is collecting many pairs of boots for herself. At a country hotel she is mistaken for a "female drummer." She acts out the part with great success. The entertainment value of this picture is not high.

SCANDAL EVERYWHERE (Victor), Rel. Week of August 27.—A comedy number, by R. A. Dillon, featuring Max Asher as chief of the bell boys in a hotel. He flirts with the wife of one of the guests, who turns out to be a sleep walker. The humor is slightly rough and not particularly strong, though inoffensive. The closing scenes, where the characters bound up and down the skyscraper, are novel and interesting.

THE NIGHT CAP (Nestor), Rel. Week of August 27.—A one-reel comedy subject, by Virginia Kirtley, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts. The young men retire, on the eve of Eddie's wedding day, and Lee wears a girl's night cap. He is mistaken for a girl and trouble follows. A slightly risque situation, presented with just the right sort of juvenile humor to keep it from being offensive. A good comedy of the type.

PROPS, DROPS AND FLOPS (L-KO), Rel. Week of August 27.—A two-reel comic, featuring Gladys Varden, Bert Roach, Walter Stephens and Harry Griffith. The first reel introduces a number of stage hands and some chorus girls behind the scenes of a theater. Some of the incidental business is funny, but none of it very strong. The action in the second reel is better and holds the attention closely. There is a lot of good knockabout business and a number of interesting features, including the knife throwing and fire scenes. This will succeed with audiences who like plenty of comic action without much plot.

World Pictures.

THE LITTLE DUCHESS (Peerless), August 20.—The juvenile star, little Miss Madge Evans, contributes largely to the success of this five-part photoplay which deals with an orphan who becomes a member of the English aristocracy. The production is an all around good one. A longer review was printed on page 1229 of the issue of August 25.

PATHE PROGRAM FOR SEPTEMBER 2 FULL OF GOOD THINGS.

Baby Marie Osborne in a five-part Gold Rooster play, "Tears and Smiles"; Pearl White in the ninth episode of "The Fatal Ring"; Mollie King and Creighton Hale in the first episode of "The Seven Pearls"; "Central Colorado," which is the 21st installment of the "Know America" Pathe-Combitone series; Harold Lloyd in a two-reel "Lonesome Luke" comedy called "Luke's Wild Women'"; a split reel international cartoon and scenic and the Hearst-Pathe News Numbers 72 and 73, make up the Pathe program for the week of September 2. In diversity of subject matter, quality of content and box-office value of the stars it would be hard to excel this program.

Independent Producers Meet

Discuss Formation of Buyers' Organizations—Lee Organization Rapidly Forming—Final Meeting of Lesser Organization Called.

IMPELLED by the knowledge that two organizations of state rights buyers were forming, virtually every representative independent producer attended a meeting held in the Hotel Astor, New York, on Saturday, August 18. The meeting was held behind closed doors, and no definite announcements were made. It was learned, however, that the meeting was called by the producers of state rights pictures for the purpose of considering ways and means of "protection" against any possible attempts at arbitrary price-fixing or any other factor detrimental to their interests that might result in the event that an organization of buyers became powerful enough to dictate.

It was not given out just which of the producers attended or were represented at the meeting. It is known, however, that, since the formation of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and the imminent formation of the organizations promoted by Sol L. Lesser and Joseph F. Lee, the producers have had their ears to the ground ready to "unionize" at short notice if need be.

Conjecture has it that the producers, if they organize formally and if the occasion arises, will fight as a unit to protect their interests against any possible dictatorial terms laid down by any organization of buyers. The life of the state rights market, they say, lies in its competition. If any group of buyers form a "trust," they say, they in turn will have to unite for strength.

As the situation looms up at present everybody on the producing side of the fence is marking time waiting for the buyers to start playing the music, and everybody on the buying side, besides watching each other, as a body is waiting for the producers to start playing the music. The situation may be likened to two boys ready to fight, each with a chip on his shoulder, but each too good a friend of the other to knock the chip off.

Lee Organization Rapidly Forming.

Joseph S. Lee announces rapid progress in his endeavor to bring together prominent state rights men in all parts of the country. The organization work has progressed to such a point, it is stated, that a representative has left New York on a tour that will, according to Mr. Lee, result in the acquisition as members of several of the biggest men in the field.

During the week there have been several conferences in which Louis B. Mayer, of Boston; Harry Crandall, of Washington, and Mr. Lee were the leading figures. Indications point to an early announcement of future plans.

Meeting of Lesser Organization Called.

The final meeting of the National Organization of State Rights Buyers—the organization promoted by Sol L. Lesser—has been called for Wednesday, August 22. It is announced that at this meeting all details that must be worked out before the organization begins active operations will be concluded.

Mr. Lesser still is confined to bed with typhoid fever, but is convalescing rapidly and is expected to be about in a few days. He is in constant touch with his lieutenants and despite his illness is directing the work of organization.

NETTER GETS "REDEMPTION" FOR OHIO.

Leon D. Netter, of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Cleveland, has purchased "Redemption" for Ohio. Netter closed the "Redemption" deal almost at the same time that he purchased for the same territory "The Cold Deck," the new Hart picture. Masterpiece also controls in Ohio "The Garden of Allah," "Beware of Strangers," "The Ne'er-Do-Well and several others.

Hart Picture Selling Rapidly

Stephen A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., Sell Big Block of Territory—Mayer, Lesser, Rosenberg and Netter Among Purchasers.

WITH about as little blaring of trumpets as a picture ever was given, the Stephen A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., already have disposed of a great bulk of territorial rights to "The Cold Deck," a seven-reel Western subject in which William S. Hart is the star. The picture is the last one made by Hart while he was with the Triangle Film Corporation. Its production was supervised by Thos. H. Ince.

Louis B. Mayer, of Boston, has purchased the rights to the feature for Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont and Connecticut. Sol L. Lesser, acting for his All-Star Features Distributors, Inc., of San Francisco, directed from his sick bed the purchase of the film for California, Nevada and Arizona. Rights to "The Cold Deck" for Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana have been purchased by M. R. Rosenberg, of the De Luxe Feature Film Company, Seattle. Leon D. Netter, of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Cleveland, purchased the subject for Ohio.

"DEEMSTER" SOLD FOR EIGHT MORE STATES.

The Arrow Film Corporation, through its president, W. E. Shallenberger, has disposed of "The Deemster" for two more territories, comprising eight States. D. P. Davis, acting for the All-Star Features, Inc., of Jacksonville, Fla., bought six Southern States, including North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida and Mississippi, and A. H. Blank, president of the Mid-West Photoplay Corporation, of Des Moines, purchased Iowa and Nebraska.

The Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, showed "The Deemster" last week and achieved wonderful results, it is reported. Cleveland critics waxed eloquent over the manifold beauties of story and production. Cleveland, it should be noted, has the largest Manx population in the world—not even excepting the Isle of Man. And by reason of this fact, rather than in spite of it, the financial returns in Cleveland mounted high.

WOLFBERG GETS "ON TRIAL."

It is announced at the offices of the Harris P. Wolfberg exchange, 602 Lyceum building, Pittsburgh, that the First National Exhibitors' releases would be distributed in Ohio through the Wolfberg exchanges. So far these releases consist of Essanay's "On Trial" and forthcoming Chaplin pictures.

Mr. Wolfberg, who also owns "The Crisis" and "The Deemster" for Ohio, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, will open offices in Cleveland and Cincinnati immediately.

Members of the Exhibitors' Circuit state that the distribution of their pictures was intrusted to Mr. Wolfberg because of his reputation for honest methods and square dealing with the exhibitor, and the high degree of efficiency of his exchanges.

SHORT FEATURES GETS OLD BIOGRAPHS.

Short Features Exchange, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, has purchased 50,000 feet of Biograph film. It is announced that the 50,000 feet are the pick of 300,000 feet examined. The pictures obtained include short subjects featuring Mary Pickford, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Dorothy Gish, Blanche Sweet, Robert Harron, Henry Walthall and the whole list of other stars who had their start with the old Biograph company. Many of the pictures were directed by David W. Griffith and Mack Sennett. The exchange reports that the purchase included paper and other advertising matter.

HORSLEY STATE-RIGHTS MARY MacLAREN FEATURE.

Mary MacLaren Photoplays, made under her new contract with David Horsley, will be sold on the state rights basis. This is the announcement made by David Horsley in New York, where he has closed negotiations in four States for the first of her new seven-reel features, "The Counterfeit Soul." Mr. Horsley reports contracts signed for New York, New Jersey, New England and Pennsylvania.

BUYS "REDEMPTION" FOR NORTHWEST.

M. R. Rosenberg, of the De Luxe Feature Film Company, Seattle, has purchased "Redemption," with Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, for Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana.

Unique One-Reel Star Series Announced

Photoplay Magazine Will Present Films Showing Big Stars Away From Studios—James R. Quirk Tells of Plan.

TWELVE single-reel subjects—one reel per month—of bizarre and unique views of the foremost players of cinemaland shortly are to be presented by the publishers of Photoplay Magazine under the title of Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement. The twelve subjects will, in the very near future, be offered state rights buyers in the various territories.

Picture to yourself the contents of Photoplay Magazine come to life and you will have a fairly accurate idea of the nature of the newest novelty in motion pictures. Imagine scenes and closeups of such favorites as Mae Marsh, William S. Hart, Henry Walthall, Charlie Chaplin, Lucille Lee Stuart, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Antonio Moreno, Bessie Love, Warren Kerrigan and a host of others in their homes, playing with their pets, swimming, motoring, fishing, making up in their dressing rooms and you will still further comprehend the sort of material that will be presented in Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement. Exhibitors will not find it hard to appreciate the box-office possibilities that lie in this sort of an offering. These subjects will literally transport the fans to the homes of their favorites and permit them for the first time to actually behold their idols doing the hundred and one things of which they are reputed to be fond, but which never heretofore have been seen on the screen.

James R. Quirk.

"I am sure we have something wholly new, wholly different, to offer," said James R. Quirk, publisher of Photoplay Magazine, in discussing the forthcoming series presenting "The Stars As They Are." "It is not an idea conceived in a moment and executed the moment afterward, but the result of an idea which has been growing gradually and rounding into shape as time passed. We could have launched our first release months ago, but have refrained from doing so until we were sure of our ground—until we had collected material enough for months in advance and knew that the high standard we hit in our first release could be consistently maintained and even improved in subsequent issues. Right now we have on hand material enough for our first nine releases and our cameramen are supplying it at a rate that will easily enable us to keep that far ahead of our release schedule.

"In offering these films we are going to give big exhibitors a chance to secure them for certain zones or territories, as well as state rights buyers. By that I mean if we receive a more attractive offer from John Doe, who conducts a string of fifteen or eighteen theaters in a certain territory, than we do from Richard Roe, who always snaps up a state rights bargain in that territory, John Roe, the exhibitor, will be given careful consideration when it comes to placing our franchise in that zone. Exhibitors controlling theater chains will thus be offered a chance to show the films in their houses as first-run offerings and then to sub-lease them to other exhibitors in the territory at a price which will enable both the original lessees and the sub-lessees to make a profit.

"The trade is aware that Photoplay Magazine has always stood for quality—that it has begged, demanded and boosted for the better class, higher-grade type of photoplays—higher standards of direction, better photography and the employment of the foremost artists of the world. Now, therefore, its own debut in the film world as a manufacturer of films will have to bear out its past stand as a quality medium, and the trade may rest assured that nothing short of the best in every technical detail will be acceptable to it. The stars, of course, will be top-notchers—kings and queens of the cinema world. The camera work is in the hands of experienced, proven men of ability. The developing, tinting, toning and printing of Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement will be handled by experts. The sub-titles will be as near perfection as money and brains can make them. In short, neither time, money nor effort will be spared to make our venture a real step in advance of anything that has gone before.

"The definite release date of our first Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement has not yet been set, but within a week or two at most announcements will be made."

More "Parentage" Territory Allotted

Seng Will Inaugurate Bigger Campaign—"Parentage" to Go to Responsible Persons Only.

FRANK J. SENG, owner and distributor of "Parentage," announces that the Peerless Feature Film Exchange, of Philadelphia, will handle his unique feature in Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia.

"Parentage" has been selected by the Stanley, the finest photoplay theater in Philadelphia, as its big attraction for the third week in September.

Commenting upon the large volume of direct inquiries for "Parentage" received from practically every buyer and exchangeman of prominence in the country and his reasons in particular for closing with the present holders of territorial contracts, Mr. Seng says: "When an exhibitor advertises he usually gets what he ought to receive—increased business. But his returns do not stop there. Every advertisement, rightly executed, creates good will and tends to establish his house as a factor in his community. In like manner do I regard the advertising that has already appeared and will continue to appear, featuring 'Parentage.'

"I am most sincere in my desire to create good will among state rights men and among exhibitors," says Seng, "hence my determination to spend exactly ten times more in each territory as it is disposed of than was set aside for the initial marketing campaign. And I would also like to impress the trade with the sincerity of my statement when I tell you that I have been more interested in the capabilities of the organizations who are handling 'Parentage' than in the size of the offers made."

To date, Mr. Seng says, he has found it advantageous to dispose of certain territories on a percentage basis, but a great many outright sales will be made and made as rapidly as the purchasers satisfy the owner of "Parentage" that they want to help the exhibitors make money and will co-operate with them to that end.

Exhibitors in the area of Greater New York who desire to book "Parentage" are referred to Lewis J. Selznick, of 729 Seventh avenue; those of New York state outside the metropolitan district should communicate with Veribest Pictures, Inc., 47 Swan street, Buffalo; those of Northern New Jersey should get in touch with Frank Gersten, Inc., 707 Times building, New York City; those in Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia must look to the Peerless Feature Film Exchange of Thirteenth and Vine streets, Philadelphia, and Illinois and Wisconsin exhibitors should address their applications to the Lewis J. Selznick Productions, 110 South State street, Chicago.

"Garden of Allah" Sold for South

William N. Selig Also Announces Other Productions That May Be State-Righted.

THE All-Star Features Company, of Jacksonville, Fla., are the latest buyers of territorial rights for "The Garden of Allah," having purchased the rights to Georgia, Alabama, Florida, South Carolina, Mississippi, Tennessee, Louisiana and Arkansas.

Following the exploitation of state rights for "The Garden of Allah," the Selig Polyscope Company is turning its attention to several other big features which have been completed or are nearing completion. While William N. Selig has not definitely announced his plans concerning these latest features, it is presumed that several may be marketed along the lines of state rights successes such as "The Crisis," "Beware of Strangers," "The Garden of Allah," etc.

"Who Shall Take My Life?" a Selig feature combating the evils of capital punishment, is said by those who have seen private presentations to be an absorbing drama. The play was written by Maibelle Heikes Justice. The production features Thomas Santschi, Fritzi Brunette, Bessie Eyton, Eugenie Besserer and other well known stars. Colin Campbell was the director in charge.

"The Railroader" is another gripping drama bearing the diamonds trade-mark and presenting George Fawcett, the well-known star, as the lead. Mr. Fawcett takes advantage, it is said, of a large number of opportunities to perform clever character work. "The Railroader" was adapted by Gilson Willets from "Caleb Conover," the world-famous novel written by Albert Payson Terhune. Colin Campbell also directed this drama, which is said to carry some wonderful effects.

"The City of Purple Dreams" is another story filmed by the Selig Company and pronounced wonderful by those who have seen the play. It is adapted from the novel of the same name. Thomas Santschi stars and Colin Campbell was the director in charge. The scenic effects are said to be beautiful.

THIRD COMMONWEALTH COMEDY FINISHED.

"His Watery Waterloo," the third of the Commonwealth Comedies, was completed this week with Lou Marks playing the leading role supported by George Humbert, Leon Miller, Iva Edmondson, Leo Daly, Dorothy Gorden, Pauline Taylor and Irving Browning. The pictures were directed by Frank Donovan. Hughie Mack and Lou Marks are the Commonwealth stars. Both are famous for their comedy work and known throughout the world of motion pictures. A new one-reeler is being produced each week at the Commonwealth Studios in Cliffside, N. J., for early release.

Malitz Heads Piedmont Corporation

Is General Manager of Concern That Takes Over Hawk Film—Personnel of Piedmont Augurs Well for Future.

PIEDMONT PICTURES CORPORATION of New York, Paris, London, and Tokio, have taken over the business of the Hawk Film Company, and have opened new headquarters at 729 Seventh avenue, New York. Piedmont Pictures Corporation, as successor to the Hawk Film Company, operates now with a stronger and entirely paid-up capital, it is announced. Its object is to represent prominent producers as exclusive selling agents, and at the same time act as confidential purchase agents for prominent buyers throughout the world.

Felix Malitz.

Felix Malitz, general manager, has a splendid reputation. As organizer and commercial manager of Pathe Freres, for whom he has handled their entire American business as vice-president and general manager, he built up the entire Pathe Exchange organization in this country, and has for many years been generally connected with the film business in America and abroad. Assisting him are Joseph Lamy, export manager; Arthur Ziehm, Mr. Lamy's assistant; G. A. Enugler, manager of the distribution and service departments, and Harry Rubin, manager of the film and technical departments. These men are virile and young, yet long enough in the business to be thoroughly conversant with its various needs.

The Piedmont Corporation purposes to be an outlet for any manufacturer who will offer pictures which are sufficiently interesting to command the approval of the Piedmont expert export staff at the New York office. Their headquarters here acts as the dynamo whose power for real, live motion extends to every nook and corner of the world. Scores of salesmen and foreign correspondents in all the capital cities of Europe, North and South Africa, East and Far East assure a quick, courteous and satisfactory response to all.

The Piedmont Pictures Corporation also handles foreign productions in the United States. It is just about to put on the market a series of interesting British features dealing with the war viewed from the British side. These productions have met success all over England and the Allied countries, and should also appeal to the American public.

Noble Completes Feature

Director Finishes Special Length Picture Under Own Management Showing Son.

AFTER ten weeks spent in the making of a special picture which represents his idea of the acme of motion picture production from the standpoint of direction, acting, story and photography, John W. Noble has completed his first important contribution to the state rights market.

The drama, which is a bold treatment of a large and pertinent subject, is said to promise to cause a sensation by its clever presentation of a phase of the war little understood by persons as far removed from the trenches as Americans. It was the discovery of the story which prompted Mr. Noble to produce a special feature under his own management.

Mr. Noble's record as an army officer, who was promoted for brave and meritorious service in the face of the enemy while fighting for Uncle Sam in the Philippines, is as well known in army circles as his record for staging such productions as "Romeo and Juliet," "The High Road," and "The Awakening of Helene Ritchie," is known in the world of motion pictures. He has been on the lookout for an exceptional story ever since the beginning of the world war, because of his belief that a powerful drama inspired by the conditions in Belgium and France was sure to make its appearance sooner or later. The story selected suggested to him the drama he sought, and as soon as he had read it, he decided to make it the basis of a special state rights production staged under his own management, so that he could devote all of the time and money necessary to the creation of a picture worthy of a great subject, and also carry out his own ideas of what constitutes effective stage direction.

Jules Burnstein, who has sole charge of the business management of Mr. Noble's special feature, promises that it will interest producers and dramatists as much as it does exhibitors and the general public.

Lillian Walker Signs With Ogden

Eight Pictures Starring Her Will Be Made—Other Plans Announced.

LILLIAN WALKER has signed a two-year contract with the Ogden Pictures Corporation to appear in sixteen super-productions to be produced eight a year, at a salary said to be one of the largest ever paid to any star. The contract contains every detailed provision, providing for the proper exploitation of the productions. It requires that on each release a minimum sum of $12,500 shall be expended in advertising.

The company has placed at the disposal of Miss Walker a complete dressing room installed in a limousine. A provision unusual in contracts with stars appearing in motion pictures, but which is contained in Miss Walker's contract provides that she shall expend out of her own moneys a sum sufficient to provide a minimum of four new gowns and a complete change of wearing apparel suitable to each gown, for each production. All plays which are to be staged with Miss Walker are first to receive her approval and she is to have an equal voice in the casting of her leading supports.

Further plans of the Ogden corporation are made known in the announcement that four of the eight Walker productions to be made during the next twelve months will be made in the East and four in the West. The entire studio and technical staff will be employed by the Odgen studio in preparing the third production, while the second production is being made in the Eastern studio.

Work has already commenced on the second release, which promises to be as big a production as "The Lust of the Ages." No details as to the supporting cast or the character of the story are forthcoming and will not be given publicity until the company has completed the taking of the scenes. No expense will be spared in any of the operations connected with the Lillian Walker productions; a technical staff from the director and his assistants down to the merest property boy stand engaged for both studios. Lester Park, general manager of the company, will divide his time between the Western and Eastern studios.

HONEYMOONERS BEGIN WORLD TOUR.

For the purpose of obtaining a novel series of films, the Peter Pan Film Corporation is sending on a trip around the world E. Richard Schayer, formerly publicity manager for Lewis J. Selznick, and Mrs. Schayer. H. C. Allen, president of the Peter Pan Corporation, has adopted this method of producing pictures of especial interest. The party that is making the trip includes besides, the two principals, W. F. Aldrich, the cameraman, and Mrs. Aldrich and "Bill," Mrs. Schayer's Irish terrier.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Schayer.

The pictures will not be ordinary travelogues in any sense, it is announced. The idea is to get off the beaten track, and to make the films a record of personal, human experiences — not merely a series of views of foreign lands. They will be taken from the angle of the traveler trying to do and live as the natives of other countries, and will be full of humorous and human interest. The by-paths of the world are overflowing with ungathered picture material, and the best way to get it is not by making it but by really living it.

The new releases will be entitled "The Honeymooners," and while no definite time has been allotted to their production, it is expected that they will be completed in about two years. The party left New York on August 1 for San Francisco, from which place they sailed for Honolulu on the Matsonia, where they arrived on August 16. The first picture will be made in Hawaii and Mr. Schayer will recruit what company he needs from the natives.

BUD FISHER AN EXECUTIVE.

Bud Fisher, who has left his office to go to the Plattsburg Officers' Training Camp, came into the industry only a little over a month ago, knowing nothing about the distribution end of the business, and in that short space has accomplished an almost unprecedented sale of territory for the Mutt and Jeff Comedies. In fact, with the exception of a few straggling territories, he has sold out the entire world for the new series. He did this solely by the application of common sense and sound business principles of other commercial enterprises.

He has shown a keen perception of the intricate conditions of the industry, not only disposing of his cartoons to the advantage of the film corporation, but also to the advantage of the exchange. By selecting exchange men in harmony with his ideas, he has made it possible to work side by side and to obtain the most efficient results. Of course the exchanges have a tangible asset in addition to the films themselves in the tremendous advertising campaign that Mr. Fisher has inaugurated, whereby the Mutt and Jeff cartoons appear in 278 of the best dailies in the country and are seen daily by an audience of 17,000,000 people. This is a large campaign.

FOREIGN BUYERS VISIT STUDIO.

One of the largest groups of foreign film buyers ever gotten together gathered at the King Bee Studios at Bayonne on Tuesday, August 14. Their activities practically cover the world of the industry. The party was organized by Mr. Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., and consisted of Mr. Wainright, buyer for the English cinematograph trade; Mr. Mattsonn, the representative of the trade for Scandinavia and Northern Europe; Mr. Ono, representing Japan and the Far East; Mr. Cropper, who buys for the Middle West in the United States, and Madame Schuepbach, buyer for the Mundusfilm Company of Paris. Nat Spitzer, general manager of the King Bee Company, and Mr. Bernstein, the president of the same corporation, acted as hosts with Mr. Garrett, who is known intimately to all.

Foreign Buyers at King Bee Studios.

They met at the Brockliss offices and motored out to the studios at Bayonne, where they saw the comedian, Billy West, at work. Interesting entertainment was provided for them by Mr. Gildstrom, who directs the Billy West Comedies. He had concocted a scene in which the whole party appeared in conjunction with the company. Billy West himself entered into the spirit of the thing and was at his best. This scene Mr. Gildstrom promises to release in one of his forthcoming pictures.

SPITZER RETURNS FROM EXCHANGE TOUR.

Nat H. Spitzer, sales manager for the King Bee Company, has returned from a trip covering all the exchanges handling Billy West Comedies through the West and South. Mr. Spitzer is delighted with the outlook for the Billy West releases, and feels that conditions for them could hardly be better.

In an interview he gave a summary of his ideas on the situation in the Western and Southern markets.

"I found that the demand of the majority of the exhibitors who are guided by the likes and dislikes of their patrons was for booking short feature subjects, particularly comedy. Two-reel comedies of the better class are extremely popular throughout every section of the country, and since the various exchanges are demanding exorbitant rentals for their long features, which are beyond the reach of the average exhibitor, they are making up their programs from the shorter subjects, primarily a number of two-reelers and one-reelers. This is corroborated by the fact that the independent exchanges are demanding more and better shorter subjects. As an example of this our Chicago exchange has booked our pictures with the Lubliner-Trintz circuit, the Ascher Brothers and the Hamburger chain of theaters of that city. That shows the present prevailing tendency.

"I am well satisfied with the progress that the Billy West Comedies are making at present, but in order to advance them to the highest point of efficiency we have mapped out a national advertising campaign, the details of which are now being completed. This will include a series of novelty ideas for exhibitors, and for the exchanges, unique poster, and advertising matter as well as some new ideas in publicity."

BROCKLISS GETS FOREIGN RIGHTS TO LION COMEDIES.

The A. Kay Company announces that it has consummated a deal with the firm of J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., whereby the latter secures the exclusive foreign rights to the Lion Comedies and the picturized versions of the famous Walt Mason stories.

The Lion Comedies, which are of a slapstick nature, are made by Masterpictures of Houston, Texas, under the supervision of Mr. Harold J. Binney, who for many years has been active in the production of comedies. The Filmcraft Corporation, which has arranged with the George Matthew Adams Service to picturize the famous Walt Mason stories and rhymes, recently entered into an agreement with the A. Kay Company to give the latter the world rights to their product to be known as the Walt Mason Stories.

Keenan and Edeson to Star

They Will Appear in "The Public Defender," to Be Produced by Harry Raver.

FRANK KEENAN and Robert Edeson have been engaged by Harry Raver to appear in a special production of "The Public Defender," by Mayer Goldman and Frank Harris of the New York bar. Alma Hanlon will be seen in the leading female role. An exceptionally strong cast has been secured for the new Goldman-Harris story, including John Sainpolis, Florence Short, William Green, J. K. Roberts, John O'Keefe, Irving Southard, Mrs. C. M. Heaten, Harry Mack, Jane Newcombe, J. J. Turner, Robert R. Lawrence, Louis Sterns, Blanche Thode, Edith Hartman, J. J. Tanner, James Gaylor, C. A. Ellwood, John Martin and James Sullivan. Burton King will direct.

The story is based on Mayer Goldman's book of the same name. It discusses a subject which seriously affects the rights and liberties of the masses. The basic idea is that it is as much the function of the state to shield the innocent as to convict the guilty, and that the "presumption of innocence" requires the state to defend as well as to prosecute accused persons.

Frank Keenan will be seen as the ambitious district attorney who has promised himself a seat in the Governor's chair. Robert Edeson will interpret the "Public Defender" who gives the accused an even break under the law. John Sainpolis is "The Murderer" of the story and Alma Hanlon is the girl who moves heaven and earth to save him from the electric chair.

Mr. Raver announces the production as the first of a series of exceptional pictures to be issued by him on an open-market basis under the brand name of "Important Productions."

STANDARD FILM BUYS COMEDIES.

The Standard Film Corporation, of which R. C. Cropper is president, has purchased distributing rights to the Christie Comedies for Iowa, Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska. These are a class of photoplays known as "society comedies," having as their principal ingredients attractive, youthful players, including in the case of the Standard's purchase, Betty Compson, Neal Burns and Billie Rhodes, and depending for their appeal on a certain freshness and breeziness of plot rather than upon the "eternal slapstick."

Mr. Cropper, in speaking of his purchase, said that he fully anticipated a remarkably strong demand for this class of film, and that his anticipations were being fully borne out by the eagerness of exhibitors to book the Christies. It will be remembered, in this connection, that the Standard recently bought the Middle West rights on the Billy West comedies also.

The Standard Film Corporation is one of the largest independent film exchanges in the Middle West, with offices at Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Omaha and St. Louis. Phil L. Ryan, the sales manager, is at present making a flying visit to the St. Louis office, as an exceptionally strong demand is expected in the territory of that office for the Billy West and the newly-purchased Christie Comedies. He is conferring with "Barney" Fegan, the genial and highly efficient manager who has succeeded J. Erwin Dodson in the St. Louis territory of the Standard.

LOCAL ADVERTISING FOR "THE LUST OF THE AGES.

In connection with the sales work of selling the territory of the Ogden film "The Lust of the Ages," in which Lillian Walker is starred, much attention is being devoted to sales ideas and plans for use among exhibitors. The theory behind this effort is that a picture provided with a sales plan is a picture many times more valuable to its state right owner and to its exhibitor.

So the enterprises which succeed in winning the rights on "The Lust of the Ages" for any given territory will find themselves in a position to let the picture practically sell itself. There will be prepared, in advance, everything that the exhibitor will want to know. There will be given to the exhibitor little stunts of all kinds, which he can use in his lobby, on his billboards, in his local newspapers for both editorial and advertising use. There will be ideas for his magazine, if he prints one, suggestions for envelope stuffing which can be sent out in his weekly mail announcements, and moreover, and perhaps of greater importance, there will be plans suggested for creating a local excitement.

In this connection it is interesting to note that the A. M. Swedy Company, who have been engaged to prepare the advertising for "The Lust of the Ages" is headed by Charles D. Isaacson, who was responsible for the campaign on "The Exploits of Elaine."

WARNER BROTHERS GET MUTT AND JEFF.

The Warner Brothers, who have been closely associated with all branches of the motion picture industry, last week acquired the rights to the new Mutt and Jeff Comedies for New York and northern New Jersey from the Bud Fisher Films Corporation. They announce very successful booking for these comedies already, and predict great popularity for them in the new territory.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

American Bids for Laboratory Work

Will Develop and Print for the Trade—Offers Ample Facilities.

MANY manufacturers of film will be interested in learning that this week the American Film Company, Inc., announces the opening of its huge laboratories to any in the trade desiring printing and developing work of the highest class. A weekly capacity of more than 1,500,000 feet of film is claimed by the American plant in Chicago and apparatus of the latest type is available now for all who care to make use of it.

Manager Richard R. Nehls.

The American's productions, released through the the Mutual Film Corporation, have long been notable for their technical perfection. The same staff of experts which supervises the handling of the pictures in which are starred such screen favorites as Mary Miles Minter, Helen Holmes, Gail Kane, Juliette Day, William Russell, Charlie Chaplin and Margarita Fischer will have charge of all the commercial work undertaken for patrons of the American laboratories,

"Times without number we have been begged, implored and entreated by film manufacturers, state rights men, etc., to handle developing and printing for them, but have always had to refuse," said Manager Richard R. Nehls of the American Film Company, Inc., in discussing the matter with an interviewer in his Chicago office. "The increase in our facilities permits us, for the first time, to offer our laboratories to outsiders. Manufacturers who are spending huge sums for famous stars, high salaried directors, noted authors and stage settings that run into thousands of dollars, can now rest assured that the technical work on their productions can be handled by experts with all the care, skill and attention to detail that have made our own attractions notable in the motion picture field.

"Believing that a number of film makers are really seeking technical work of the highest class and will be satisfied with nothing short of that, we have arranged to offer our vast resources in the way of printing and developing to such of the trade as are seeking quality work. American film productions have always been praised for their tinting, toning, printing and developing. They are uniform in quality throughout. Every stage of the work is handled by experts. Ten years of experience is back of every print we turn out today. Our mechanical equipment is unexcelled. Every bit of apparatus in our huge laboratories is of the very best. The films that are offered us for development and printing will be handled by the same corps of experts that handle our own productions—the American features starring such favorites as Mary Miles Minter, Gail Kane, Juliette Day, William Russell, Margarita Fischer and Charlie Chaplin.

"In addition to all the above advantages, the central location of the American Company's plant (Chicago being the hub of the whole country) alone would justify any film manufacturer in placing his developing and printing work with us, purely on account of the saving in time and money in shipping his positive prnts to the exchanges. Hours of time and hundreds of dollars in transportation charges can be saved by printing and developing in Chicago and distributing positive prints from the most central point of the country."

Three Essanays for September

Larger Subjects Will Feature Taylor Holmes, Mary McAlister and Jack Gardner.

TAYLOR HOLMES, the stage star, heads Essanay's schedule of feature releases for September in "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," released September 3. Little Mary McAlister will follow him in "Pants," and Jack Gardner will complete the month's program of five-part pictures with the fourth of his series of Westerns, entitled "Men of the Desert."

"Efficiency Edgar's Courtship" will mark Taylor Holmes' first appearance as a screen star. His most recent stage production, "His Majesty Bunker Bean," ran an entire season in Chicago, duplicated that success on Broadway, and then toured another season throughout the country. "The Third Party," "The Million" and "The Commuters" were among his previous hits.

Trade showings of the picture are now in progress at all branch offices of the K-E-S-E Service.

"Pants" will be released September 10. The production is the first five-reel picture in which Mary McAlister has been starred. The idea of the story is that it takes something more than wealth to make a child happy.

"Men of the Desert" will be released September 24. Like its predecessors, "Land of Long Shadows," "The Range Boss" and "Open Places," this picture presents a story of the red-blooded West. Mr. Gardner is supported by Ruth King, Carl Stockdale and Essanay's original Western company formed for this series

NEWARK UNIVERSAL IN NEW OFFICE.

The Newark office of the Universal Film Exchange of New York has moved to 25 Branford place. Here they are in more commodious and convenient headquarters and are in the position to give real service to exhibitors. M. H. Goldstein, formerly manager of the Mutual in Jersey, has been installed as manager.

DOROTHY BENHAM IN NEW WARREN SUBJECT.

Little Dorothy Benham, daughter of Harry Benham, who played one of the leads in Edward Warren's "The Warfare of the Flesh," is an industrious little lady in spite of the fact that she is only five years old on her next birthday. Ever since war was declared she wished to help wherever she could and she has recently turned her energies towards knitting for the "Sammies."

Little Dorothy is playing quite an important role in Mr. Warren's coming production, the title of which has not yet been announced, and when she appeared at the studio the other day she not only brought her knitting with her but she insisted on working on it in her scene, although the scenario didn't exactly call for it. Mr. Warren did not want to discourage the little patriot and as it fitted in right well with her posing for the day he allowed her to continue her knitting. The incident not only adds a touch of novelty to the scene as shown on the screen, but is quite inspiring as well.

Goldwyn Names First Eleven Pictures

Mae Marsh Figures in Five, Maxine Elliott and Madge Kennedy in Two Each.

WHEN Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, almost a year ago, announced its intention of making a large number of costly productions, perhaps as many as a dozen, in advance of its first release the following September, few were willing to believe the new company.

With release of its first picture, "Polly of the Circus," but three weeks distant, Goldwyn announces the definite completion of seven productions, besides two other pictures in course of production and a tenth huge picture, with Mary Garden as the star, to be under way in a fortnight.

Considerably more than one million dollars has thus far been invested in the pictures made or in the making, this amount not being inclusive of any of the cost of distribution overhead or the operation of the Goldwyn branch offices.

Organization has been effected throughout the United States; Goldwyn Pictures Ltd. of Canada is actively operating in the Dominion, and arrangements are virtually completed for prompt operation of Goldwyn organizations in England, Australia, South America and other more distant lands.

To date, and as applied to future extensions, Goldwyn expects to own outright or control its offices in all parts of the world, so that Goldwyn Pictures will not at any time pass out from under the solicitous attention of the factors who produce them in America.

Thus far the completed Goldwyn Pictures are: Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus," by Margaret Mayo; Madge Kennedy in "Baby Mine," by Margaret Mayo; Maxine Elliott in "The Eternal Magdalene," by Robert McLaughlin; Jane Cowl in "The Spreading Dawn," by Basil King; Mae Marsh in "Sunshine Alley," by Mary Rider; Maxine Elliott in "Fighting Odds," by Roi Cooper Megrue and Irvin S. Cobb; Mae Marsh in "Fields of Honor," by Irvin S. Cobb.

Pictures now in the making at Goldwyn's New Jersey studios are: Mabel Normand in "Joan of Flatbush," by Porter Emerson Browne; Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married," by Edgar Selwyn; Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man," by Edward Childs Carpenter. And, early in September, Mary Garden, just returning at that time from France, will begin work on "Thais," by Anatole France.

The order on which the productions have been named above is not necessarily the order in which they will be released. The thing of biggest import, perhaps, is the fact that not one penny of exhibitor money has been received or applied to production costs from the day the company was formed down to the present moment, and there will be no alteration of this policy. Goldwyn, from the outset, was, through its owners, prepared to finance itself. In pictures it has been more or less customary to expect the exhibitor through deposits, advances or money paid for franchises to provide producers with the money with which pictures were made. President Goldfish and his associates disapproved of this method from the start.

Next in importance is the Goldwyn policy of distribution and salesmanship which has resulted in the application of real merchandising principles to film renting and distribution.

"A TRIP TO CHINATOWN" (Selig).

"A Trip to Chinatown" is considered one of Charles Hoyt's merriest comedies, and the Selig Polyscope Company promises that not a laugh has been lost in the two-reel Hoyt comedy, "A Trip to Chinatown," released in K-E-S-E on Monday, August 20.

Scene from "A Trip to Chinatown" (Selig).

The comedy has to do with the adventures of a race track tout and policemen, the tout's enemy. Giving wrong tips on the races, the tout seeks the seclusion of a "Chink" laundry, hits the pipe and is immediately transported to the Orient, where he meets a beautiful Oriental princess. And oh, joy! the policeman is discovered to be a slave in the palace.

Then things begin to happen. Seeking revenge on the policeman, the tout persuades the princess to match the slave with a gigantic wrestler, a swordsman and a fierce lion. The slave overcomes them all and wins the admiration of the princess. The tout makes his escape, is pursued, discovered, and—he awakens in the laundry and finds the policeman is again after him!

The all-star comedy cast that has proven so popular in previous Hoyt comedies contribute to the merry action of "A Trip to Chinatown." The players include Amy Leah Dennis, Wm. Fables, James Harris and Fanny Cohen. J. A. Richmond directed the production.

MAE MURRAY BUSY ON INITIAL BLUEBIRD.

Mae Murray and her director, Robert Leonard, are busy at Bluebird's studio in Universal City, Cal., preparing Mr. Leonard's screen version of "Princess Virtue," drawn from Louise Winter's magazine story of the same title. The principal members of Miss Murray's support have been conscripted by Production Manager Henry McRae because of their established reputation for excellent achievements. For Miss Murray's leading man Wheeler Oakman was selected as one of the most popular of the younger leading men of the screen.

Mr. Oakman has built up an enviable reputation for himself during an engagement of more than two years with Kathlyn Williams at the Selig studios. He played the leading juvenile role in Selig's "The Rosary" and "The Spoilers" and was the principal player in "The Ne'er-Do-Well." More recently he has been playing opposite Mabel Normand.

Another well known screen actor who has been engaged to support Miss Murray is Harry Von Meter, who had been with the American company for nearly four years before joining the Bluebird players. Paul Nicholson, Jean Hersholt, Gretchen Lederer, Clarissa Selwin will be others in Miss Murray's support.

EDITH STOREY COMMENCES WORK FOR METRO.

Metro Pictures Corporation has chosen as Edith Storey's first Metro vehicle "The House in the Mist," a novel by Octavus Roy Cohen and J. U. Giesy, authors of "The Matrimaniac" and other successes. A six-reel special production will be made of "The House in the Mist," work on which will begin immediately at the Metro studio, 3 West Sixty-first street, New York, under the direction of Ted Browning.

The role of Carma Carmichael affords Edith Storey boundless opportunities. In "The House in the Mist," in addition to her magnificent acting, Miss Storey will ride, shoot and swim. "The House in the Mist" is frank, out-and-out melodrama—a real mystery story—with a wonderful girl as its heroine.

A notable cast has been chosen to support Miss Storey in her initial Metro production. Bradley Barker will play Jack Carrington, the hero who shares the adventures of the heroine. Harry S. Northrup, Metro's popular "villain," well known on both stage and screen, will have an important role in "The House in the Mist." Another player of importance will be Frank Fisher Bennett, the Francois Leblanc of "The Jury of Fate." James J. Dunne, formerly of Thanhouser, where he was associated with George Foster Platt, will assist Tod Browning in directing "The House in the Mist."

SPLENDID OUTLOOK ON THE COAST.

Reports from Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle branches of General Film just to hand give a most promising outlook for motion picture business. Writing from the field, General Sales Manager S. R. Kent, who has been on a tour of inspection, says:

"I find conditions on the West Coast have much improved, and I think that our three offices out here are going to do a corking business in the next ten or twelve months. Also I find many exhibitors are trying to get away from the burden of high prices for over-rated features and are taking up our 'Variety Day' service."

The "Variety Day" service of General Film is the recently suggested idea of reserving one or two days a week for short subjects of feature quality to compose the whole show, instead of headlining a five-reel feature. The plan has been adopted with great enthusiasm by General Film exhibitors in many parts of the country. It seems to be particularly well liked on the Pacific Coast, where it has been longest in vogue. This is hailed as a sign of enduring popularity for the idea.

RUSHING WORK ON "MAGDA."

Clara Kimball Young is working fast on "Magda," her initial production with her own new organization under the management of Harry I. Garson. This haste and long hours is the result of the shift in plans to first produce "The Marionettes," over which a question as to the American rights was brought forth by the Charles Frohman Estate.

Supporting Miss Young is Thomas Holding, who was brought to this country by Hugh Ford, appeared in the Famous Players productions of "The Eternal City" and as leading man for Pauline Fredricks, covering a period of three years. Mr. Holding also played the lead with Jane Grey in "The Fighting Chance," "The Great White Trail," and others of this successful production. Others in the cast are Edmund Fielding, George Merlo, Edward Kimball, Alice Gale, Kitty Baldwin, Maude Ford and Valkyrian, all well known artists.

Emile Chautard, whose successful productions have rapidly brought him to the front as one of the foremost directors in America, is enthusiastic over the results already accomplished.

Mutual Offers Two Features a Week

President John Freuler Announces Schedule Involving $5,250,000 Worth of Pictures a Year to Commence September 3.

FIVE and a quarter of a million dollars worth of feature productions per year will be marketed by the Mutual Film Corporation, according to a policy effective September 3, it is announced from the Chicago offices of John R. Freuler, president of that concern. The Mutual has adopted a policy of "big stars only" for its feature productions, which, beginning in September, will be issued to exhibitors at the rate of two a week. Mr. Freuler also announces the complete schedule for two months of releases at this rate, including:

SEPTEMBER 3.—Mary Miles Minter in "Charity Castle," the first of a new series of Mutual-American productions starring the delightful actress and the first Minter picture under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham, late of Fine Arts.

Edna Goodrich in "Reputation," the first of the series of Mutual star productions, featuring the celebrated stage beauty. "Reputation" is the story of a small town girl who went to the city, met a he-vampire and came back with a Reputation. It was directed by John B. O'Brien.

SEPTEMBER 10.—Gail Kane in "The Specter of Suspicion," the fifth of the series of Mutual-American star productions in which the beautiful and talented Miss Kane plays the leading role. "The Specter of Suspicion" deals with a bride whose family closet is the abiding place of a skeleton and furnishes the basis for a thrilling drama. It was directed by Henry King, who scored such a big success with "Souls in Pawn," Miss Kane's latest photoplay.

Ann Murdock in "Outcast," the first of the Charles Frohman stage successes in motion pictures. Miss Murdock is one of the most famous of American actresses, the product of the school of the celebrated genius of the drama. "Outcast" is a picture adaptation of the Broadway hit. Miss Murdock is supported by an all star cast. The production is the first to be released from the Empire All Star studios.

SEPTEMBER 17.—Juliette Day in "The Rainbow Girl," which is the first of the Mutual-American productions starring the Broadway star, Juliette Day. Miss Day scored her most recent stage success in "Upstairs and Down" and has been at the American-Mutual studios since early in the summer working under the direction of Rollin S. Sturgeon.

Margarita Fischer in "The Girl Who Couldn't Grow Up," the fifth of the series of Pollard-Mutual star productions featuring Margarita Fischer. Miss Fischer has not appeared on the screen since the release of "The Devil's Assistant," early in the spring, closely following the completion of which she was taken ill.

SEPTEMBER 24.—William Russell in "Sands of Sacrifice," a corking five-reel drama starring the heroic Mutual-American star. "Sands of Sacrifice" is the first of a new series of William Russell productions directed as were the pictures of the previous series by Edward S. Sloman.

Julia Sanderson in "The Runaway," the second of the Frohman productions and the first of the series featuring Miss Sanderson. "The Runaway" is the picturization of the stage success of the same title in which Miss Sanderson scored on Broadway. It was produced under the direction of Dell Henderson.

OCTOBER 1.—Mary Miles Minter in "Her Country's Call," the second of her new series of Mutual-American star productions in which Miss Minter carries the role of a patriotic little girl. "Her Country's Call" was directed by Lloyd Ingraham.

Edna Goodrich in "Queen X," the second of the series of productions starring Miss Goodrich. "Queen X" is from the story by Edwin M. Stanton, assistant United States attorney of New York, who conducted a crusade against smugglers and put his experiences into a five-reel photodrama. The picture was directed by John B. O'Brien.

OCTOBER 8.—Gail Kane in "Southern Pride," sixth of the Mutual-American series starring the Broadway favorite, in which she plays the role of a beautiful Southern girl. The production was under the direction of Henry King.

Anita King in "The Girl Angel," first of a new series of Mutual Horkheimer productions starring the popular motion picture star. Miss King has played leading parts in "The Heir to the Hoorah," "Maria Rosa," "The Race" and "Golden Fetters." She has been engaged by the Horkheimer studios to produce a series of star productions for release on the Mutual schedule.

OCTOBER 15.—Juliette Day in "Betty and the Buccaneers," a story of pirates bold, produced at the Mutual-American studios under the direction of Rollin S. Sturgeon. "Betty and the Buccaneers" is Miss Day's second production under the contract for which she deserted Broadway for the camera.

Margarita Fischer in "The Miracle of Life," sixth of the series of productions starring the well-known and popular screen star.

OCTOBER 22.—William Russell in "The Sea Master," the second of the new series of William Russell productions, in which he appears as an entirely new sort of a hero. The picture was directed by Edward S. Sloman, who is responsible for staging the successful series of recent Russell productions.

Ann Murdock in "The Beautiful Adventure," the second of Miss Murdock's productions and the third release of the Charles Frohman stage successes in motion pictures. "The Beautiful Adventure" gives Miss Murdock a role admirably suited to her abilities. It was staged under the direction of Del Henderson.

"This collection of pictures, now complete and ready for delivery to our half a hundred exchanges, represents a year of planning and effort and the most careful consideration of the picture market," observed Mr. Freuler.

"I am convinced that the motion picture theaters will find this fall and winter a particularly prosperous season. The circulation of money is lively and despite high living costs the people who constitute the big majority of motion picture patrons have more money to spend than ever."

THE WEEK'S WORK IN THE FOX STUDIOS.

Gladys Brockwell has just completed "The Soul of Satan," to be released August 20, for the William Fox productions. She will begin another feature shortly under the direction of Bertram Bracken. In the supporing company appear Bertram Grassby, Charles Clary, William Burress, Joseph Swickard, Gerard Alexander, Norbert Myles, Lucille Young, Frankie Lee and Marie Kiernan.

The Foxfilm comedy issued on August 20 will be "A Domestic Hound." Hank Mann is the featured player.

Owing to changes which were imperative in George Walsh's "The Yankee Way" several additions have been made to the cast. The new line-up will consist of Enid Markey, Josef Dowling, Charles Edler, James O'Shea, Edward Sedgwick, Edward Cecil and Tom Wilson.

Part of the cast has also been selected for the first of the series of Standard Pictures in which Jane and Katherine Lee are to appear. Richard Turner, William T. Hays and Robert Vivian have been chosen for leading roles.

Valeska Suratt's newest William Fox feature, on which work was begun a short time since, has been titled "A Rich Man's Plaything." Randolph Lewis wrote the story and Carl Harbaugh is the director.

To make for the increasing comedy output of the organization two more "lots" and stages have been added to the grounds the company already occupies in Hollywood, Cal.

HARRY CAREY IN "STRAIGHT SHOOTING."

Harry Carey, widely known for his vigorous handling of western types, will make his first appearance in a Butterfly production on August 27, when he will be starred in "Straight Shooting," a drama of the cattle country. Molly Malone will be featured in Carey's support.

"Straight Shooting" has been written by George Hively and produced by Jack Ford. It tells the story of the warfare that used to be so common between the cattle barons of the "open range" and the incoming settlers, or "nesters" as they were contemptuously called.

"Thunder" Flint, overlord of a vast grazing territory which he holds in defiance of law and order, has sent forth the ukase that all settlers on land that he desires for his steers must vacate without delay or suffer the consequences. Flint is a power in the territory, one that no man has ever dared offend. But when his messenger delivers this ultimatum at the home of "Sweetwater" Sims, leader of the nesters, he meets with an unexpected rebuke from Joan Sims, the fearless daughter of the household.

As a result of this questioning of his authority, Flint has Ted Sims, the girl's brother, shot from ambush, and at about the same time he hunts up "Cheyenne" Harry, a notorious gunman of the plains, to lead an attack upon the nesters which will put them to rout. While the plans for this cowardly attack are maturing, however, Cheyenne meets Joan and her father by accident. Their desperate plight appeals to his latent manhood, and in a denouement which brings all of the range vagabond's better instincts into play, we find his talents for straight shooting and hard riding used to defeat the designs of his former chieftain. Carey has never had a role better suited to his straightforward style of acting.

Important Plans for "O. Henry"

"The Defeat of the City" Opens Four-Reel Series of the Famous Author's Stories.

ALL the curiosity that has been accumulating in regard to General Film's forthcoming O. Henry stories in more elaborate picture form is now to be satisfied. The title and release of the first four-reel O. Henry has been determined. It will be "The Defeat of the City," scheduled for September 1.

Other details of the plan for O. Henry pictures include the information that one four-reel picture is expected to be presented every two weeks, and that a series of at least ten may be expected.

Another bit of welcome news to the trade emanates from General Film in this connection. It is that the two-reel O. Henry pictures will continue, owing to tremendous demand for short-length features of high merit. Confirming hints that have been given already, Western O. Henry stories are being produced. These will be put into the two-reel division, and one of them will alternate every two weeks with a four-reel O. Henry. Many of the O. Henry stories with Western atmosphere were published in his "The Gentle Grafter" series, and for the initial release "The Atavism of John Tom Little Bear" has been chosen, it being one of the favorite Jess Peters adventures.

Three most competent Broadway Star Feature directors are now working to provide the O. Henry pictures for General Film. At the Eastern studio Thos. R. Mills, the first of several clever people to be made famous with O. Henry productions, and who directed over a dozen of the first twenty releases, has finished "The Defeat of the City." Also working at the Eastern studio is Martin Justice, who did "A Departmental Case," "The Coming Out of Maggie" and "The Discounters of Money," three already current two-reel subjects. At the Hollywood studio David Smith is doing the "Jeff Peters" stories and others with a Western setting.

HELEN HOLMES IN NEW MUTUAL SERIAL.

Helen Holmes, fearless daredevil of the screen, in the early chapters of the newest Mutual chapterplay, "The Lost Express," is going to set the nerves of even the most blase and thrill-hardened exhibitor atingle by her utter recklessness, performed with an apparent nonchalance that bids defiance to death.

In one of the earliest chapters of the new mystery serial dealing with the total disappearance of an express train while passing from one station to the next, down a perfectly straight stretch of single track line, Miss Holmes fights a hand-to-hand battle with three men on top of a rapidly moving passenger train. Just as she seems certain to be defeated in her struggle, she escapes by jumping and catching an overhead warning signal such as are placed on either side of low bridges, tunnels, etc., and thus is left dangling in midair while the passenger train bearing her enemies is whisked away from beneath her.

Announcement of the exact release date of the newest Mutual-Signal chapterplay starring Helen Holmes, and directed by J. P. McGowan, will be made within a few days. Exhibitors are already besieging Mutual Exchanges with applications for bookings on this forthcoming Helen Holmes thriller, for past Helen Holmes successes have thoroughly demonstrated the drawing power of this star and the theaters which have "stood 'em out" for night after night with previous serials built about the dare-devil personality of Miss Holmes are anxious to again line up the crowds in front of the box-office.

President John R. Freuler, Herbert Holmes, Florence Holmes, J. P. McGraw and Thomas Lingham.

"THE DEAD LINE" FEATURES BEATRIZ MICHELENA.

In the role of Star Dowell in "The Dead Line," Beatriz Michelena is said to evidence a wider variety of Western accomplishments than shown in any of her previous photodramas of the untamed frontier. Horsemanship, for which she has always been renowned, is, according to studio reports, the very least of her troubles in this latest and most strenuous of her Western productions.

She whirls a revolver around her finger with all the nonchalance of a true cowboy and throws a lasso with undeviating accuracy. When she ropes and "hog-ties" the boastful sheriff that rides into the mountains to arrest her she goes about it in a business-like manner that can leave no doubt as to the genuineness of her Western schooling. The producer is announcing her as the female "Bill" Hart, and predicts that her proficiency in "The Dead Line" will make the original "William" look jealously to his cowboy laurels.

Scene from "The Dead Line."

The picture is being filmed in the Santa Cruz mountains and is scheduled for independent release early this coming fall. William Pike, Albert Morrison, Clarence Arper, Cliff Thompson, Jeff Williams, D. Mitsoras and Katherine Angus are among those who make up the supporting cast. George E. Middleton is the director.

"BETWEEN MAN AND BEAST" (Selig).

"Between Man and Beast," the two-reel jungle drama released by the Selig Company in General Film service on Monday, August 20, was directed by Colin Campbell from the story written by W. E. Wing. One thrilling incident in the drama is the care given a lost baby by a gigantic ape which carries the little one into a tree in search of food and then makes a home for the baby in a cave. Other animals of the jungle also participate in the action of the drama.

"Between Man and Beast" is the tale of the adventures in the heart of the jungle of a young man and his wife and baby. Pursued by a villain who plots their deaths, the little family becomes separated and then it is that the ape cares for the lost child.

Bessie Eyton is starred in the drama and is ably supported by Wheeler Oakman and others. The photography and wild animals' jungle scenes are said to be all that can be desired.

Exhibitors are demanding realistic dramas of the jungle and the Selig Company is releasing a series of jungle pictures in General Film service that are not only produced by the best directors, but also exploit stars whose names bring in the money at the box office.

"HONOR SYSTEM" OPENS IN CHICAGO.

William Fox's stirring cinemelodrama, "The Honor System," which has been playing to capacity in the New York and New Jersey territory, will open its first engagement in the West on Monday, August 20, when it takes the screen at the big Studebaker Theatre in Chicago.

On August 26 this production will be available to exhibitors everywhere. Bookings for it can be made now at the nearest William Fox exchange. As "The Honor System" is a Standard picture, the policy that "You cannot book it until you see it" will apply.

LOEW SIGNS FOR CONQUEST PROGRAMS.

Marcus Loew has signed in behalf of eight New York theaters of his circuit, to show Conquest picture programs produced at the Edison Studios and released through George Kleine's K-E-S-E distributing organization. The theaters selected by Mr. Loew to show these pictures are: The New York Theater, Greeley Square, Lincoln, National, American, Orpheum, Boulevard and Avenue B.

Drama and Comedy in "U" List

President Carl Laemmle Writes Amusing Skit for William Franey—J. Warren Kerrigan Is Starred in Strong Tabloid Drama.

"THE Winning Pair," a Gold Seal comedy drama, featuring Ruth Stonehouse and Roy Stewart, heads Universal's regular schedule of releases for August 28th. August 27th is Butterfly Day, as usual, signalized by the releases of "Straight Shooting," in which Harry Carey is starred. Eugene B. Lewis as author and L. W. Chaudet as director are responsible for the "Winning Pair." The story details the adventures of Jack Croft and Beatrice Moore, son and daughter, respectively, of two gouty and grouchy shoe manufacturers, formerly business partners, but now bitter enemies, following some trivial difference in which neither would admit himself at fault. There are many amusing turns to the story which move at a rapid pace.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran will also be seen on the same date in a Nestor comedy entitled "The Night Cap." This rib-tickler was written by Virginia Kirtley, who has recently become the bride of Eddie Lyons in real life. It details the unusual consequence following the night "at the lodge," when Eddie and his pal return home to find that the former's wife has gone out for an evening's entertainment with her mother. The boys are forced to break into the house, but are mistaken for burglars by an over-zealous policeman. Having finally cleared themselves to retire to bed only to find themselves in a still worse predicament. Roy Clements directed the production.

"Props, Drops and Flops," a two-reel L-Ko comedy, will be the offering for Wednesday, August 29th. This riotous sketch of life behind the scenes in a burlesque theater will add to the prestige of Neal Smith and J. G. Blystone as director and supervisor, respectively. In this unreal domain behind the footlights the head property man reigns an absolute monarch over the destinies of manager, artists, stage director and other workers of humbler sphere. When the assistant property man rebels chaos reigns until the fire department finally comes to the rescue with a watery but effective solution. The 87th issue of the Animated Weekly will be released on the same date.

J. Warren Kerrigan is the star of "Hand in the Dark," the feature scheduled for release Thursday, August 30. This tabloid thriller was written by E. M. McCall and William Parker and was personally directed by Henry McRae, production manager at Universal City. Kerrigan is supported by Edith Johnson. The story has to do with a young man who is in love with the daughter of an immensely wealthy miser. When the father is mysteriously murdered circumstantial evidence makes it apparent that Kerrigan is the author of the crime.

The manner in which the girl in the case solves the mystery of her father's death, incidentally saving her lover's life, adds several unusual thrills to a well acted and adequately directed production. William Franey will be seen on the same day in a Joker comedy, entitled "Why They Left Home." This clever burlesque was written by Carl Laemmle during a recent visit to Universal City at Franey's special request, and bears witness to Mr. Laemmle's versatility. It is a caricature of life behind the scenes in a theater, and depicts the events that take place during the production of a melodrama with the rather significant title, "The Salary of Sin." Franey is capably suppressed by Lillian Peacock and Milburn Meranti. W. W. Beaudine is credited with the direction.

"Scandal Everywhere," featuring Max Asher and Gladys Tennyson, bears the date of Friday, August 31st. A Victor comedy, written by R. A. Dillon and produced by Craig Hutchinson in this production shows in a realistic manner the dire fate that overtakes a trifler with more susceptibility than discretion. The 34th issue of the Screen Magazine released simultaneously with the Asher Comedy will contain many timely subjects, including picture of the new food conservation work for the Government.

On Saturday, September 1, Eileen Sedgwick and Fred Church will be featured in a two-reel Bison, entitled "Jungle Treachery," written and produced by W. B. Pearson and Rex Hodge. An unusually gripping story in an exploring expedition in Africa, this production has been widely heralded as a thriller with several wild animal scenes of great novelty. Gale Henry and Milton Sims will also be seen in a Joker Comedy known as "Busting Into Society," written by Tom Gibson and directed by Allen Curtis. The 16th issue of Current Events will make the third release for the day, bringing a week to a close with up-to-the-minute scenes of important happenings in the world of work and play.

NO RAGGED CLOTHES IN NEW FREDERICK PICTURE.

From the part of a scrubwoman, toiling with mop and brush in a seven-story office building to the young wife of a successful husband, playing about in Long Island summer society, Pauline Frederick makes a big jump from her last Paramount picture, "The Love that Lives," to her newest one, "Double Crossed," recently completed and scheduled for release in September. In "Doubled Crossed" Miss Frederick as Eleanor Stratton, beautiful young society matron, much in love with her young broker-husband, has a chance to display her beauty and charm, as well as some wonderful gowns and jewels. Miss Frederick will be supported by Crawford Kent, of recent musical comedy fame, as a new leading man. Others in the cast include William Riley Hatch, Clarence Handysides, Harris Gordon and Joseph Smiley.

"PANTS" (Essanay).

Jealousy has no place in the make-up of Little Mary McAlister, Essanay's juvenile star, who is soon to be seen in a five-reel feature of her own entitled "Pants." At a private showing of this feature recently she was an interested spectator, closely scrutinizing every scene regardless of whether she appeared in it or not.

At the finish when asked how she liked herself in it she said, "Oh, I think I did pretty good in some parts, but wasn't my leading man just grand?"

Scene from "Pants" (Essanay).

She had reference to a boy about ten years of age who recently applied at the studio and stated so persistently that he felt he would make good if given a chance that he was finally cast for a part in "Pants." His work proved a surprise to everyone except Director Berthelet, who stated after the day that he considered the youngster a perfect foil for the little leading lady.

The combination of these two forms such an appealing team that in all probability they will work opposite each other in several of Mary's future photoplays.

MISS MINTER IN "CHARITY CASTLE."

Truly a sparkling production is "Charity Castle," the American Film publication of September 3. Of delicate texture, beautiful settings, tasteful appointments, rich in good humor, this first of Mary Miles Minter's productions under her new contract and directorship of Lloyd Ingraham, is offered by Samuel S. Hutchinson as something out of the ordinary even in high-standard American enfilments.

The story is by C. Doty Hobart; the screen adaptation by Doris Schroeder. In a word the plot may be stated as: How a happy little girl sets a certain little world aright after it had all but dried up through chronic grouchiness. As Charity, Miss Minter appears in a role different from any before given her—a combination role—that of an orphan, ward of a rich young spendthrift who knows the joys of living, and general peacemaker in aristocratic misunderstandings. That she is delightfully successful is the verdict of all the judges who have had previews.

In her spare time, Charity spins fairy yarns to the Prince, the four-year-old she has adopted. Clifford Callis, an endearing babe, plays the latter role.

Alan Forrest is cast as Miss Minter's chief support, the "goldcoast" youth who becomes her champion through the lure of fairyland. He is subsequently disinherited by his rich father and remains persona non grata until Charity redeems him.

Spottiswoode Aitken, the eminent character actor, is assigned an important part in the production, while Henry A. Barrows plays the grouchy millionaire.

Other members of the cast are Eugenie Forde, Aston Dearholt, Robert Klein, George Ahern and Gordon Russell.

WALLACE REID IN ROMANCE OF WAR.

War is the theme for "The Hostage," Wallace Reid's starring vehicle to be released by Paramount in September. Beulah Marie Dix, who wrote the internationally famous war sketch "Molloch," has again taken the war note as her subject and woven into a thrilling story a romance that is said to suit Reid especially well.

Reid is admirably suited for the part of the young lieutenant. His physical prowess and good looks are said to stand him in good stead in a most exacting role. Dorothea Abril in the part of Nathalia is Mr. Reid's new leading woman. She is one of the cleverest of the Paramount ingenues and her splendid work in "The Little American" with Mary Pickford is a matter of recent remembrance. In the cast supporting Mr. Reid are C. H. Geldert, Guy Oliver, Noah Beery, Gertrude Short and others.

H. H. Cudmore in New York

Is Introducing the Sheck Invention—An Improved Mazda Lamp for Theaters.

H. H. Cudmore.

H. H. CUDMORE of Cleveland, Ohio, well known in electrical circles through his connection with the Mazda Lamp Industries and recently made general manager of the Argus Lamp & Supply Company of Cleveland, will be in New York this week to personally superintend the installation of the New Sheck Adapters, by which motion pictures may be projected with Mazda incandescent lamps, in several of the larger motion picture theaters in the city. Motion picture people throughout the country are keenly interested in the practical demonstrations of the new Sheck Adapters, for they promise to revolutionize the motion picture business from the exhibitor's standpoint.

The new appliance which Mr. Cudmore will personally introduce in New York is the invention of Oscar M. Sheck of Cleveland, one of the best-known electrical engineers in the country. By his invention it is possible to use the Mazda incandescent lamps with the ordinary equipment in any motion picture theater.

In discussing the merits of the Sheck invention with a number of electrical engineers who visited the Argus Company's plant in Cleveland recently, Mr. Cudmore said he was confident that the new device was the most important step that had been taken ahead in the motion picture business in a number of years.

"We are of the opinion," said Mr. Cudmore, "that the development of this new Mazda lamp and the co-incident invention of the Sheck Universal Adapter will revolutionize the entire field of motion picture projection. We have had lamps running in theaters for more than a year, and the proprietors of these theaters are enthusiastic over them.

"We claim that we give better screen illumination; that we do not tire the eyes; that we entirely eliminate flicker on the screen, and that we materially lower the cost of projection. One item of greatest importance is the fact that the new lamp method of projection does away with all the poisonous gases in the projection booth which have been proven so injurious to the health of operators."

The New York theaters where the new projection method will be demonstrated will be announced later, and the entire motion picture trade invited to see for themselves just what the lamps can and will do.

STRONG K-E-S-E PROGRAM FOR SEPTEMBER.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay program for September looks unusually attractive and was arranged, K-E-S-E's Publicity Department states, with a view of giving exhibitors every opportunity to "make good" with their patrons with the inauguration of their fall and early winter campaign.

"Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," released September 3, produced by Essanay, featuring their newest star, Taylor Holmes, who is credited with several big hits on the speaking stage, is the first September K-E-S-E release.

This will be following September 10 by another Essanay feature, "Pants," presenting fascinating little Mary McAlister, as star. "Pants" was written especially for this little girl who is scoring such decided success in the Essanay series, "Do Children Count?"

Mr. Kleine will announce the name of the K-E-S-E September 17 release in a few days and promises that it will be an exceptionally strong production.

"Men of the Desert," featuring Jack Gardner, an Essanay production, will be presented September 24.

LONGACRE DISTRIBUTING CHANGE OFFICES.

The Longacre Distributing Company, distributors for Alice Howell Comedies, has moved from the seventh to the fourth floor of the Mecca building. On August 20 the big subway and elevated station advertising campaign goes into effect. Mr. Kelly, the sales manager, feels that this campaign will go a long way toward gaining the popularity that Alice Howell Comedies are worthy of.

COMING FOX FEATURES.

Forthcoming Fox features include "Every Girl's Dream," a picturesque romance of old Holland with June Caprice in the stellar role. This will be released on August 27, and in it Harry Hilliard appears opposite Miss Caprice. This is the dainty Fox star's first production under the direction of Harry Millarde. In addition to Mr. Hilliard Miss Caprice's support includes Kittens Reichert, Margaret Fielding, Marcia Harris, and Dan Mason.

On September 9 Mr. Fox will release the latest Virginia Pearson picture. This is "When False Tongues Speak," a gripping story by George Scarborough, known to every playgoer as the author of "The Lure," "At Bay," and other stage successes. In it Miss Pearson is said to have abundant opportunity for the exercise of those artistic abilities with which she is so highly endowed. In addition to an unusual and thrilling story, and a star of first magnitude for its interpretation, "When False Tongues Speak" was directed by Carl Harbaugh, which, in itself, is a guarantee of excellence. And Miss Pearson is supported by an admirable cast. This includes Mr. Harbaugh, Hardee Kirkland, Claire Whitney, Carl Eckstrom and William E. Meehan, famous as the comic crook in "Turn to the Right," and who portrays another crook in "When False Tongues Speak."

GRAND OPERA STAGED IN "THE LUST OF THE AGES."

The Ogden Pictures Corporation's initial release, "The Lust of the Ages," contains almost every element that enters into an extraordinary attraction; extraordinary photographic effects and camera work, dramatic scenes, light comedy, heart interest and pathos, and even grand opera is portrayed. One and a half acts of the opera "Faust" is portrayed in the production, and Harry Revier, the director, was fortunate in securing the entire troupe of an Italian Repertoire company, then playing a short engagement at Ogden. The entire troupe was transported to the studios of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, together with that company's scenery and orchestra, and one act and a half of the opera "Faust" was photographed. This practical working out of another problem saved a tremendous amount of time and expense in rehearsals and completing the scenery necessary to be used in the scenes. It is this fidelity to details that is one of the marked characteristics of "The Lust of the Ages," and no subterfuge was resorted to to substitute the sham for the real.

"REPUTATION," EDNA GOODRICH'S FIRST MUTUAL PICTURE.

Edna Goodrich, famous beauty of the stage, will return to the screen September 3 in "Reputation," the first of her series of star productions for Mutual. Miss Goodrich has been at work for months on the series of photodramas which she is making under her contract with John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation. The first of the series was finished some months ago, but it was decided that the third must be well under way before the date of the first release was announced.

In the meantime great interest has been aroused in the forthcoming Goodrich pictures. In addition to "Reputation," "Queen X" has been completed and "A Daughter of Maryland" is so far under way that it will be finished before "Reputation's" release. The fourth of the series will be "American Maid," preparations for the production of which are already started. Miss Goodrich will be directed in "American Maid" by Albert Capellani, the noted stage manager who has but recently come into the Mutual organization.

Scene from "Reputation" (Mutual).

Miss Goodrich is as well known as any woman who has appeared on the American stage in the last ten years. She is celebrated in America and Europe as a beauty. She is one of the wealthiest women of the stage and is commonly acknowledged to have been the highest salaried showgirl who ever appeared on Broadway.

Stage Plays in Pictures

Brady Says "Stage Hits" Make Most Enduring Screen Successes and Offers Some.

"THE history of motion picture success," said William A. Brady, director general of World-Pictures Brady-made, "that the biggest and most enduring hits are screen adaptations of stories which have been highly favored by the public in the speaking theater. This applies not alone to program features but to special price pictures, and the fact accounts for the oral theater. Between Sept. 17 and Oct. 15 we shall publish rights to stage plays.

"The World corporation has been exceptionally fortunate in acquiring these productions heretofore, and they have invariably turned out so very well as to more than justify our faith in them, going to show that there is little, if any, difference between the tastes of moving picture audiences and those that assemble in the 'regular' playhouse.

"All this is preliminary to the announcement that World Pictures will immediately present an altogether remarkable series of screen versions of dramas which have enjoyed big careers in the oral theater. Between Sept. 17 and Oct. 15 we shall publish no less than four such productions, and I desire to invite the closest of scrutiny as to their quality.

"The first of this series is 'Betsy Rose,' the title role of which is acted by Alice Brady. This story by H. A. Du Souchet, author of 'My Friend from India,' not alone had a notable stage career, but was widely circulated in book form. It carries a strong dramatic plot and faithfully reproduces certain events of importance in the history of our country.

"The second of the quartette is 'The Corner Grocery,' in which Madge Evans is featured with Lew Fields. The original of this comedy with serious touches was produced by Adolph Philipp in New York, where it had a record-breaking run, although under the disadvantage of being interpreted in a foreign tongue.

"Third in the set is 'Shall We Forgive Her,' the central personages of which are assumed by June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley, with John Bowers playing an important part. The stage version of 'Shall We Forgive Her' was written by Frank Harvey, a very well known contributor to the literature of the theater, and it has been played repeatedly throughout the country.

"Finally comes 'The Burglar' with Carlyle Blackwell, Evelyn Greeley and Madge Evans at the head of a particularly effective company. The story first appeared as a novel from the pen of Frances Hodgson Burnett, who was also the writer of 'Little Lord Fauntleroy.' It was made into a drama by Augustus Thomas, and quite possibly contributed more to the popularity of that justly famous author than any of his other plays.

"The qualities which made 'The Burglar' one of the very greatest successes in the history of the American stage have been fully preserved, and perhaps emphasized, in its transference to the screen. Certainly it never was played better than by Mr. Blackwell, Miss Greeley, little Madge Evans and the other members of the silent cast.

"I am willing to let my judgment of values stand or fall upon the assertion that 'The Burglar' is the best picture play in five reels that ever was published.

"Indeed, I will go further and donate ten thousand dollars from my personal funds to the Red Cross if within a space equal to that consumed in the production of these four World Pictures the same number of special price pictures of as good quality have been made—the decision to rest with a jury of exhibitors. This is a challenge for a comparison between regular World program fair price features of five reels each and an equal number of special price pictures no matter how long or pretentious."

SELIG PRODUCING "THE STILL ALARM."

"The Still Alarm," that sterling melodrama, known to thousands of theatergoers of the past decade, will be produced on a lavish scale at the Selig studios, Los Angeles, under the direction of Colin Campbell. Always a play of spectacular appeal on the legitimate stage, it will prove much more so in the screen version, where effects not possible to producee on the stage will be shown in realistic vividness. This is one of the few successful stage plays that lends itself admirably to picturization, having a splendid plot and allowing much of the action to center about thrilling fire runs and other spectacular effects. The cast, which is a large one, will be headed by Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton and Fritzi Brunette. Whole streets of substantial-looking buildings are being erected on the Selig lot for the forthcoming production for the sole purpose of being burned down.

RELEASE OF "RED ACE" AND "GRAY GHOST."

Owing to the great demand for serials in the fall the Universal Film Exchange of New York has decided to release the "Red Ace" and "Gray Ghost" in close proximity to each other.

On August 27 the "Red Ace," starring Marie Walcamp, will be available to exhibitors, while the "Gray Ghost," starring Eddie Polo, will be open for bookings on September 17.

An advance showing on the "Red Ace" has been arranged for Monday, 11 a. m., at the Broadway theater. Universal announces that while Marie Walcamp did some very clever work in the famous serial "Liberty," in the "Red Ace" she surpasses all past efforts.

BRENON FINDS ACTOR TO PLAY KERENSKY.

Up in Yonkers there lives a young man named W. Francis Chapin who has been acting in pictures and plays in a small way for some time, but now is in a fair way to become famous. Herbert Brenon is finishing his feature "The Fall of the Romanoffs," which as the title indicates is an authentic version of the recent Russian Revolution interwoven with a charming romance and story of adventure and action. All of the central figures in the present Russian situation necessarily play parts in "The Fall of the Romanoffs," for the picture scenario is by such famous writers as the Czar, Czarina, Rasputin, Grand Duke Nicholas, Iliodor, Prince Felix and the other real characters who figure either in the Revolution or the events leading up to it.

Scene from "The Fall of the Romanoffs" (Brenon).

The outstanding figure of the Russian Revolution, the one character whose prominence demanded an equal position in the picture was the new-found "Man of Iron," premier and military dictator, Alexander Kerensky, the absolute one man force holding the myriad of puzzled factions in Russia together. For weeks Brenon employes sought the actor for this role. Agencies have been combed and players by the score have been examined and rejected by the Brenon Studio, since the director insisted upon an exact double of "The Man of Iron." Finally the right actor was found—his name is W. Francis Chapin. He is not a Russian, but his resemblance to Kerensky is so startling that "The Man of Iron" seems to have stepped from the Sunday photogravure sections right to the Brenon screen. Mr. Chapin has been posing before the Brenon camera for the past week and with the taking of his scenes the big feature will be ready for assembling.

MACK SENNETT BEAUTIES WILL BE IN FRONT.

Mack Sennett's first Paramount comedies to be released the latter part of September will feature all the famous Sennett comedians and beauties—they call the bathing suit girls "Sennetts" out on the Pacific coast. The easts give slight idea of what to expect. In "Roping Her Romeo," Polly Moran plays a girl sheriff, Ben Turpin a wealthy waiter, Slim Summerville a gambler, and Ethel Tearle a girl from the city. Fred Fishback is directing.

In "A Bedroom Blunder" Charley Murray plays a "good natured husband who likes to flirt with the girls." The girls in the case are some more Sennetts whose bathing suits add a touch of interest for the tired business man. Mary Thurman, also with some remarkable attractive costumes, plays a "young wife who loses her necklace." Wayland Trask plays her simple husband and Eva Thatcher plays Murray's equally simple wife. Eddie Cline is doing the directing.

"The Pullman Bride" features Gloria Swanson as "the girl in the case," a beach maiden of imposing and impressing beauty Mack Swain as a "waiter posing as a man of wealth," and Chester Conklin as an adventurer. Clarence Badger is the director.

"THE CINDERELLA MAN" FOR MAE MARSH.

Goldwyn has purchased from Oliver Morosco and Edward Childs Carpenter, the author, the famous all-season New York success, "The Cinderella Man," and without any loss of time whatever Mae Marsh began work before the camera in this production this week.

The director of this production is George Loane Tucker, the successful English director, whose recent film productions under his own auspices have attracted widespread attention in the industry. Mr. Tucker's affiliation with the Goldwyn directorial forces has been impending for a long time, and his work with Mae Marsh may be expected to add still further to his reputation.

Triangle-Keystones of All Variety

Human Interest Comedies as Well as Slapstick Will Be Offered With Well-known Keystone Players for September Release.

THE Keystone plant is the busiest picture foundry in California at the present moment, more than twelve companies being engaged in turning out comedies for the Triangle company. An innovation in this famous brand of entertainment is promised in a series of comedies to be made by Director Henry Kernan and Jay Dwiggins, the veteran character comedian.

Dwiggins has been prominent in Keystones for a year and was for some time associated with the late John Bunny. He will write all his own stories and appear in the leading roles. The series will be devoid of the slapstick stunts which characterize most of the comedies. They will present human interest stories of a comic nature, described by Dwiggins as "lessons in how to enjoy living at the age of fifty." Caroline Rankin, the straw-figured Keystoner, will be the leading woman in these productions.

Other comedies now in the course of production will present the old-time riotous sort of entertainment which has become the steady diet of picture fans. Director Robert Kerr has just completed one of this type with Bob Milliken, Fritz Schade, Claire Anderson, Jack Henderson and little Joey Jacobs, and is ready to start another with the same cast.

Aileen Allen, the diving nymph, who captured another medal for high diving at championship contest held at Ocean Park, California, will be featured in several aquatic stunts with the famous Keystone bathing girls in forthcoming releases.

The first September Keystone release is "A Shanghaied Jonah," presenting Billy Armstrong, Maude Wayne and Guy Woodward as the chief fun-makers.

Louise Fazenda, Charlie Murray and Slim Summerville head the company of "His Precious Life," scheduled for September 9.

The Keystone beauties will be out in force with the release of "Hula Hula Land" on September 16. Billy Armstrong, Maude Wayne and Guy Woodward are the featured players.

"The Late Lamented" is the lugubrious title of the September 23d issue, Mary Thurman, George Binns and Claire Anderson acting as the chief mourners.

A production built along the lines of "Oriental Love" is listed for the week of September 20. It bears the title of "The Sultan's Wife" and presents Bobby Vernon, Gloria Swanson and Joseph Callahan in an Oriental laugh mixture.

INITIAL ELSIE FERGUSON SUBJECT FINISHED.

With the completion of the big Algerian street scenes for Elsie Ferguson's initial picture, "Barbary Sheep," early last week, the production of this super-photoplay drew to a close at the Famous Players-Lasky studio in Fort Lee. For practically two months work on this gigantic production has been in progress under the direction of Maurice Tourneur and it is announced that the film is the most elaborate ever staged at this studio in New Jersey.

Advance reports indicate that Elsie Ferguson will score an immediate triumph as a photoplay star. One of the most beautiful women of the speaking stage, she has always been identified with the true dramatic art such as evidenced in her many famous stage characterizations. Her rare personal charm is faithfully reproduced by the camera, it is announced, and that her popularity of stageland will more than be duplicated on the screen is readily anticipated. Supporting her is an exceptional cast, including Lumsden Hare, Pedro de Cordoba, Macy Harlem, Alex Shannon, Maude Ford and many other talented artists of the cinema.

Scene from "Barbary Sheep" (Artcraft).

SELIG'S "A TRIP TO CHINATOWN."

Monday, August 20, is the release date in K-E-S-E for "A Trip to Chinatown," the merry comedy written by Charles Hoyt and presented by the Selig Polyscope company. The comedy cast includes Amy Leah Dennis, Wm. Fables, Charles Harris, with J. A. Richmond the director in charge.

The story of Hoyt's "A Trip to Chinatown" is one full of fun. A follower of the race track touts the wrong horse to the visitors. He is chased out of the betting ring by a policeman.

The tout is penniless and finally seeks comfort in a Chink's laundry, where he sniffs a narcotic and falls asleep and dreams. He dreams that he is transported to a palace where he meets a beautiful princess. Granted a personal slave, he recognizes in that attendant the policeman who chased him out of the betting ring. He thirsts for revenge.

First there comes a gigantic wrestler, who, after a fierce match, is overcome by the slave. A swordsman is produced. A brief but sharp engagement, and again the slave proves the victor. A potion causes the slave to fall in love with the old maid attendant, who really wishes the race course tout to attend her.

And then the slave is thrown to the lion, but makes the lion eat out of his hand. The bravery of the slave wins the love of the Princess, and the tout escapes just in time to awaken in the "Chink's" laundry and to be thrown out by the Chinaman. He falls right into the arms of the policeman and is jailed.

There are said to be a succession of clever situations and funny episodes, while the photography is all that can be desired.

"THE WAR AND THE WOMAN" (Pathe).

In "The War and the Woman" Thanhouser has contributed to the Pathe program a picture that is beyond all question the best that Florence La Badie has ever starred in—a picture that is justly entitled to the much abused word "big." It will be released as a five-part Gold Rooster play the week of September 16. Ernest Warde, son of Frederick Warde, the famous actor, not only directed the feature, but plays in it an important role so capably that his honors are even as actor and director.

"The War and the Woman" is a timely story, dealing, as it does, with a girl who, despite her alien parentage, is a true blue American. Her stepfather is suspected by the Secret Service of being a spy.

For intensity of dramatic action, for excellent acting, for artistically staged production, this picture is sure to be highly praised. Exhibitors showing Pathe Gold Rooster plays may be certain that their audiences will be highly pleased with it. It will undoubtedly play many "repeats."

"THE SPREADING DAWN" JUST COMPLETED.

After nearly three months of most exacting effort through the very hottest season of the year, Jane Cowl finally has emerged, tired but triumphant, from her first screen production for Goldwyn Pictures. Her vehicle, "The Spreading Dawn," from the story by Basil King, author of "The Inner Shrine," has just been completed at Goldwyn's Fort Lee studios.

For this picture Miss Cowl has been surrounded by an excellent cast, very largely of her own selection. It comprises players of note who have achieved success with her in some of her notable plays such as "Within the Law" and "Common Clay." Orme Caldara was engaged for Miss Cowl to play the leading male role opposite to her as in the two plays mentioned. In addition there are Henry Stephenson, Charles Hammond, Edith McAlpin, Lettie Ford, Marion Knapp and Antoinette Erwin in the cast.

CHANGES IN UNIVERSAL SCHEDULE.

Universal announces changes in its weekly schedule of releases which are designed to strengthen the list and meet the demands of a majority of exhibitors.

The Powers' cartoon that has been released on Saturdays will be withdrawn, and a two-reel Bison will be released regularly in its place. The plan of releasing a three-reel Bison on alternate Tuesdays will also be discontinued. All three-reelers shown on Tuesday hereafter will be of the Gold Seal brand. Victor comedies will be made in single reels instead of double-reel lengths, as heretofore. They will continue to be released on Friday, together with the Universal Screen Magazine.

These changes will be put into effect beginning the week of August 27.

GARSON ORGANIZES COMEDY COMPANY.

The Fun-Art Film Company has been organized by Harry I. Garson, who is also personal manager for Clara Kimball Young, to produce a series of two-reel pictures. Mr. Garson has signed a contract for five years with the well known and youthful vaudeville team of Ray and Gordon Dooley. These comedies will be known as the "Dooley series" and it is Mr. Garson's belief that he has a real find in his team of clever artists, who are nineteen and twenty years of age, respectively. The first release will be sometime in September.

Paramount Announces September Releases

Exceptional List of Stars and Authors Selected for Second Month of Star Series Distribution.

WITH the announcement of its September releases Paramount establishes more firmly than ever its determination to improve the quality of production and to place before the exhibitor under its new Star Series selective booking system an even higher grade of photoplay than that upon which it has established its reputation in the motion picture field.

For September there will be seven Paramount pictures starring Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, Fannie Ward, Julian Eltinge, Mme. Petrova and George Beban. Among the authors of the August Paramount releases there appeared such international celebrities as Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, Owen Johnson, Wallace Irwin and George Broadhurst. The authors of the September productions are equally prominent, Gelett Burgess, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Charles Kenyon, Carolyn Wells, Beulah Marie Dix, Dolf Wyllard and Hector Turnbull being among those who contribute the basic stories for the month's selections.

September will mark the advent of Mary Roberts Rinehart upon the screen as an author, the adaptation of the first of her celebrated "Sub-Deb" stories, starring Marguerite Clark, being scheduled for release in the latter part of the month. This production will be called "Bab's Burglar," and the titles of the others in the series will be announced later.

The first production for the month will be George Beban in "Lost in Transit," which was written for Mr. Beban by Kathlyn Williams, the well known photoplay star. Wallace Reid follows Mr. Beban in "The Hostage," a timely story written by Beulah Marie Dix, well known playwright and author of "Molloch."

Charles Kenyon, whose "Kindling" made him world famous as a dramatic author and who has already written successful productions for Paramount, is the author of "On the Level," in which Fannie Ward will appear. Pauline Frederick, leaving her rags and tatters far afield, appears as a society belle in a powerful drama written especially for her by Hector Turnbull. It is called "Double Crossed," and has to do with political intrigue in high circles.

The next production in the list is "Exile," written by a poet and artist of literature, Dolf Wyllard. This is a story of the Far East starring Madame Petrova, which has been staged in an extremely comprehensive and absorbingly interesting manner by Maurice Tourneur. Gelett Burgess and Carolyn Walls furnished the literary inspiration for Julian Eltinge's first screen appearance. This, "The Countess Charming," written especially by these two celebrated authors in collaboration for Mr. Eltinge, is of course designed to give full scope to the remarkable dual personality of Mr. Eltinge which arises from his ability as a feminine impersonator.

As has already been stated, the seventh production to be listed for the month is Marguerite Clark in "Bab's Burglar," the first of the Mary Roberts Rinehart "Sub-Deb" stories.

Dwan Favors Timely Topics

Triangle Director Believes in Subjects Dealing With Current Life of American People.

ALLAN DWAN, who supervises all Triangle productions made in the east, is gradually putting into operation a distinct policy of picture making, which he correlates with the editorial policy of the Saturday Evening Post insofar as he aims to specialize in pictures treating of timely issues touching on the every day life of American people.

As indicative of his general policy of production, "The Food Gamblers," recently issued, is a striking example. It is entertainment that treats constructively of a national evil, and one which is receiving the attention not only of one class of people, but virtually every family in America. "A Successful Failure," "The Man Who Made Good" and "American, That's All," all treat of some particular phase of business life as faced by young America. "Grafters," which is scheduled for the August 26 program, is an amusing arraignment of the idle youth who believes he knows all the tricks of business.

Dwan does not take up masculine problems exclusively, as demonstrated by the announcement that "The Man Hater," the Saturday Evening Post story by Mary Brecht Pulver, is shortly to make its appearance in picture form with Winifred Allen in the leading role. It presents an entertaining study of feminine psychology.

Another Saturday Evening Post story now in the course of production is "Cassidy," by Larry Evans. Dick Rosson will appear as the boy of the streets to whom the author says, "There's many a man with God's own soul who never had a chance." Larry Evans in this story has depicted as vividly the squalid phase of New York life as did Dickens that of his London.

"The Haunted House," which will be released in September with Winifred Allen in the leading role, presents a picture of striking contrast to that of "Cassidy." The locale is a little New England village where bigotry and false prejudices still find root. Miss Allen appears as the housekeeper for a sullen, reticent uncle who works for the railroad.

A number of other plays are being put into production at this studio, situated on the old Clara Morris estate near the Hudson, and all of them are said to have subjects of actual news value.

Triangle Divides Exchange Work

One Branch to Have Charge of Sale and Release of Program Productions; Other to Handle Paralta Plays and Hart-Fairbanks Series.

DUE to the volume of increased business, the New York exchange of the Triangle Distributing Corporation has announced that hereafter the exchange will be divided into two separate departments, one having charge of the sale and release of productions appearing on the Triangle program and the other to handle special productions. The former will be known as the Program Department, and the latter as the Series Department.

The Series Department will have charge of all Paralta releases, and also the Fairbanks and Hart reissues, which are to be released September 2 and 16 respectively. Entirely distinct sales and service representatives will be located in each department, devoting their time exclusively to the special work of the respective branches. It had originally been planned to keep the exchange as one office, handling both the program and the specials from there, but the volume of business already undertaken made this arrangement impossible.

"THE CITY OF PURPLE DREAMS" (SELIG).

"The City of Purple Dreams" is the latest of Selig film features to arrive in Chicago from the Pacific coast. The drama is a faithful version of the book of the same name. Colin Campbell was the director in charge and Gilson Willets wrote the scenario. Some of the features of the film drama as described by those who have seen the play are said to include a succession of wonderful lighting effects, including a bird's eye view of Chicago after nightfall; a succession of elaborate interiors of a millienaire's home; the night at the opera and other effective details.

The plot of "The City of Purple Dreams" is laid in Chicago and many familiar scenes in the Windy City are presented. The players include Thomas Santschi, Fritzi Brunette, Frank Clark, Bessie Eyton, A D. Sears, Eugenie Besserer, Cecil Holland, Harry Lonsdale, and others. The continuity of the story is said to be all that could be hoped for and the acting clever in every detail.

Colin Campbell staged "The City of Purple Dreams."

EFFICIENCY VIA EXPRESS.

In the 82d release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, the "magazine on the screen," the subject, "Efficiency by Express," is a graphic story of the development and operation of one of the most important industries of this country. The Bray Studios, Inc., producers of this release, were privileged to have the co-operation of the greatest of all express companies, and many of the scenes were taken in the busiest express office in the world, where thousands of express shipments pour through daily, and where efficiency of the highest order is needed to keep the influx and outflow of parcels on the move.

VICTOR MOORE IN "EGGED ON."

Victor Moore releases August 20 his latest comedy by Lois Zellner, called "Egged On." Vic. is entrusted with a gunpowder formula, which has been put into egg shells to take to the American munition manufacturers. It is supposed to be the most deadly weapon of its kind invented, so in order that nothing should happen to the eggs, Vic. puts them in a hand-bag, which he keeps close to his side.

On arrival in the States he loses the bag and his wallet full of money. He is unable to cable home, so he takes a job for five dollars as a sandwich man, advertising a clothing concern, to enable him to cable home for money. He is met by other sandwich men, who insist that he show his Union card, which he cannot, so they make him join the union. This costs him five dollars, and he is left flat again. Other misadventures overtake him. This farce is in line with the best pictures Moore has made.

Bluebird Features

Shifting of Stars and Directors Necessitates Change in Schedule.

WITH the prospect of a general shifting around of stars and directors in the Bluebird program, there comes from the city department of that organization reference to several productions either complete or under way that will be of interest to the exhibitor who includes "Bluebird Day" as a part of his weekly arrangements. The list of stars to be consistently presented in the series embraces Mae Murray, Dorothy Phillips, Violet Mersereau, Franklyn Farnum, Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford, and Carmel Meyers. There will be occasional offerings by other prominent players, to provide variety and consistency to the program.

Franklyn Farnum will become a lone-star with the presentation in October of "The Maverick," a production by Joseph De Grasse. Mr. Farnum and Brownie Vernon will be seen together for the last time in "A Stormy Knight," to be released Sept. 17, and Miss Vernon will shortly appear as co-star with Herbert Rawlinson in "Sky High," directed by Elmer Clifton.

Dorothy Phillips, who has heretofore been directed alternately by Ida May Park and Joseph De Grasse, will have Miss Park as her sole director in future, starting with "Bondage," a prospect for the October schedule. Miss Park and Miss Phillips have begun work at Universal City upon "The Boss of Powderville," a story written by Thomas Addison.

Violet Mersereau is working on "The Girl by the Roadside," at the Bluebird Leonia (N. J.) studios, and Mae Murray is preparing her first Bluebird under direction of Robert Leonard on the West Coast. Rupert Julian will make a select number of features in which he will co-star with Ruth Clifford. These offerings will result in establishing the Julian productions among Bluebirds.

Carmel Meyers will become a new star in the Bluebird group when she is presented in "The Dynast," a production directed by Harry Solter, who has also prepared "Bitter Sweet," an Ella Hall feature for release among autumn Bluebirds. Kenneth Harlan and Charles Hill Mailes will be prominent in Miss Meyer's supporting organization. Among other features to become Bluebirds will be "The Man of God," directed by E. J. Le Saint and featuring William Stowell; "It's Up to You," a feature for Herbert Rawlinson and Brownie Vernon, and "The Cricket," produced by Elsie Jane Wilson, who gets credit, along with Ida May Park, as woman director of Bluebirds.

"THE BANKER" (Selig).

Charles K. Harris, the noted writer of songs and stories, claims that his best work is "The Barker," the Selig Red Seal play released on Monday, August 13, in K-E-S-E service. Lew Fields claims "The Barker" is one of the best productions he ever appeared in. William N. Selig shared no expense in doing the picture, and with adequate support and good photography which are promised, "The Barker" should prove an unusually meritorious release.

"THE MARTINACHE MARRIAGE" (General Film).

The second of the new four-reel dramas from General Film comprising the Falcon Features is primarily a "heart" story. It is from a magazine romance by Beatrix Demarest Lloyd. Margaret Landis is featured as the heroine and Philo McCullough as the hero. The love interest is enacted against a strongly dramatic background.

Scene from "The Martinache Marriage" (General Film).

In "The Martinache Marriage" the title refers to the name of the bridegroom, but there are two Martinache men to reckon with as eligibles for the hand of the girl. A very novel triangle is introduced, there being no problem, but a wholesome competition that is worked out in a human and pleasing way.

An excellent cast and production have been given "The Martinache Marriage" under the supervision of H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer. Mollie McConnell, Leota Lorraine, Julien Beaubien, Vincent Beresford and Frank Brownlee are other members of the cast.

"THE AUCTION BLOCK," BY REX BEACH.

One of the country's most successful newspaper editors owes much of his success to the fact that he never overlooks the weather. When it is very hot and everybody knows it's hot, he has a first page "story" setting forth the hourly temperatures and other data of sweltering interest. When there is a big storm or a cracking cold spell his readers are put in possession of all the details. The editor scores by telling his readers what they know all about.

Scene from "The Auction Block" (American).

Rex Beach has followed the same psychological process in making a motion picture from his splendidly successful novel of New York life, "The Auction Block." This picture, now undergoing the final polishing process, is to be released throughout the country by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation under the terms of contract recently entered into between Mr. Beach, Benjamin B. Hampton, president of the Rex Beach Film Corporation, and Goldwyn.

MYSTERY PICTURE ON BLUEBIRD PROGRAM.

Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford will be stars of the Bluebird release for week starting Sept. 17—a study in psychology, written by Elliott J. Clawson, and produced by Mr. Julian, and entitled "The Mysterious Mr. Tiller." There are so many unusual twists to the plot, plus a surprising outcome, that Bluebird believes the feature will create an unusual interest when shown to the public.

Mr. Julian and Miss Clifford will be supported in "The Mysterious Mr. Tiller" by Lloyd Whitlock, E. A. Warren, Fram Brownlee, Wm. Higby, Harry Rattenberry and Wedgewood Nowe. Another Rupert Julian picture, "The Desire of the Moth," arrived from the West Coast last week and was shown to Bluebird executives and will be prepared for release later on.

"Triumph," starring Dorothy Phillips, and "A Stormy Knight," having Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon as stars, will be Bluebirds for Sept. 3 and 10, respectively. In "Triumph," William Stowell and Lon Chaney, who have always supported Miss Phillips in Bluebirds, will appear together in her company for the last time, other plans having been made for their future employment on the program.

"A Stormy Knight" will present Mr. Farnum and Miss Vernon as joint stars in Bluebirds. Mr. Farnum will hereafter go it alone, and Miss Vernon will have as her future screen-mate Herbert Rawlinson, who will be added to Bluebird's list of stars. There is a strong element of mystery in "A Stormy Knight" to precede the arrival of "The Mysterious Mr. Tiller."

L-KOS FOR SEPTEMBER.

General Director J. G. Blystone of L-Ko Comedies has issued a series of merrymakers for September that promise, according to President Julius Stern, to maintain the best traditions of that popular program of comedies. Phil Dunham, who lately gave up acting as a featured L-Ko comedian, has supplied two subjects, and Noel Smith and Vin Moore have each directed one of the September shows.

"Backward Sons and Forward Daughters" is the title of Phil Dunham's release for September 5, with Lucille Hutton and Billy Bevan featured. The same director also produced the September 26 release, "Entangled Tanglements," with Miss Hutton and Mr. Bevan also featured.

Noel Smith directed "From Cactus to Kale," the September 12 release, in which Gladys Varden and Walter Stephens are supported by Katherine Young, Harry Griffith and Bert Roach. "From Ranch to Riches," the L-Ko for September 19, was produced by Vin Moore and will have Myrtle Sterling and Al Forbes featured.

Triangle Announces Features for September

Plays Starring Louise Glaum, Olive Thomas, Bessie Love, Dorothy Dalton, Margery Wilson and Others, Listed for Release Soon.

TRIANGLE opens the fall season with a flourish of stars in production of unusual stories, some of which have appeared in national magazines or in book form. Notable among these is "The Man Hater," by Mary Brecht Pulver, published in the Saturday Evening Post of June 9. It will reach the public in picture form on September 2 with Winifred Allen in the leading role, and will be shown first at the New York Rialto Theater. Jack Meredith had the role of the rugged blacksmith, the first man to attract consideration from the girl. A number of scenes in which the little star appears with the four children of which she is guardian gives a humorous, human appeal to the play. Albert Parker directed the production under the supervision of Allan Dwan. The cast includes, beside Miss Allen and Mr. Meredith, Harry Neville, Jessie Shirley, Marguerite Gale, Robert Vivian and little Anna Lehr.

Dorothy Dalton will appear the same week in "Ten of Diamonds," adapted for the screen by L. V. Jefferson from the story by Albert Cowles. Jack Livingston, J. Barney Sherry, Billy Shaw and Dorcas Matthews support the star. The story is designed to show how a woman's life may be directed by the man or men with whom she comes in contact. Miss Dalton vivifies the role of Neva Blaine, a cabaret girl in a cheap resort.

Jack Livingston has the leading male role. Other important parts are presented by J. Barney Sherry, Billy Shaw and Dorcas Matthews. Raymond B. West was in charge of the direction.

A play that will be heralded by the Triangle company as an extraordinary program feature, warranting special attention from the exhibitor because of its unusual box-office value, is "Idolaters," starring Louise Glaum, which is scheduled for the week of September 9. It is similar in action to "The Wolf Woman," which is said to have been one of the most valuable box-office propositions ever put out by the company. George Webb was secured for the leading male role opposite Miss Glaum, and Hugo Koch was engaged for another important part. Other prominent players who appear are Thomas S. Cuise, Milton Ross, Dorcas Matthews and Lee Hill.

The production was placed in charge of one of Triangle's best directors, Walter Edwards, who carefully rehearsed the play with Miss Glaum.

"The Sawdust Ring" indicated what Bessie Love could do in a worthy play well directed. Following "Wee Lady Betty," to be released August 26, the little star, set to work on "Polly Ann," scheduled for place with "Idolaters" on the September 9 program. The story of "Polly Ann" is woven with bright threads of humor, the star shining in the role of a happiness-giver.

Margery Wilson in her first starring play, "Mountain Dew," will come to the screen on September 16 The locale of the story is Kentucky, the home of Miss Wilson, who appears as a mountain girl brought up where law is made by feudist clans Julien Josephsen and Monte M. Katterjohn are the authors of the piece.

Belle Bennett, a new Triangle star, makes her bow in "The Judgment of the Guilty," by Edith Kennedy, on the same week that Miss Wilson appears in her first starring vehicle. It is a story of the West, presenting three forceful characters, that of two men and a woman.

Roy Stewart and William Desmond are presented on the program of September 23. Stewart in "Devil Dodger" is a Western gun man, whose daring gives him his satanic sobriquet. Desmond in the part of a young college man who turns detective, just as an experiment and because he is in need of a meal ticket, is the star of "Flying Colors," written by John Lynch.

"Broadway, Arizona," is the title of the next Olive Thomas play, now in the course of production. It will be released on September 30 on the same program with "The Hell Warrior," featuring Walt Whitman. Miss Thomas comes forth this time as a Western dance hall girl, as famous along Broadway, Arizona, as she is in real life along Broadway, New York.

BIG LINE OF ADVERTISING MATTER FOR NEW COHAN PICTURE.

An exceptional line of advertising and publicity matter for George M. Cohan's second photoplay, "Seven Keys to Baldpate," has been prepared by the exploitation department of the Artcraft Pictures corporation. A twenty-four sheet, which has been proclaimed by many to be the most attractive piece of paper prepared this season, shows the popular actor-author-producer in one of the big scenes of the photoplay. The line of lithographs includes one twenty-four sheet, two six sheets, two three sheets and three one sheets, all of unusual design and appearance. Attractive store cards, slides and a novelty key puzzle are other splendid business stimulators prepared by Artcraft for this film. A large assortment of newspaper cuts and mats of complete advertising layouts, together with special articles in mat form, have been prepared by the publicity department, and a complete press book containing ten pages of stories, ranging in size from squibs to lengthy interviews, give the exhibitor plenty of material for his local publications.

Get Roach Comedies from Pathe

Big Distributing Company Announces a Number for Immediate Distribution.

ACCORDING to an announcement from Pathe, the big distributing company has scheduled for release during August, September and October a number of unusually strong comedies produced by Rolin under the direction of Hal Roach. They are: "Lonesome Luke, Mechanic," two reels, August 19; "Lonesome Luke's Wild Women," two reels, September 2; "Over the Fence," one reel, September 9; "Lonesome Luke Loses Patients," two reels, September 16; "Pinched," one reel, September 23; "By the Sad Sea Waves," one reel, September 30; "Birds of a Feather," two reels, October 7; "From London to Laramie," two reels, October 21.

The two-reel pictures are Lonesome Luke Comedies and the one-reelers will be known as Harold Lloyd Comedies. These will alternate with the Luke two-reelers till further notice, and a Lloyd one-reeler will be announced for the open dates in October.

In the Harold Lloyd one-reel comedies the star is seen in a characterization entirely different from anything he has yet done. It is absolutely distinct from "Lonesome Luke."

In all these pictures Harold Lloyd is supported by Bebe Daniels and Harry Pollard. Bud Jamieson also appears in most of them.

"Lonesome Luke, Mechanic," is a side splitting burlesque on the modern garage with Luke using the gasoline pump as a fire extinguisher.

"Lonesome Luke's Wild Women" shows Luke and Snub in incredible adventures at the Palace of the Shah on the "Isles of Gek."

"Over the Fence" is a splendid baseball burlesque in which Harold Lloyd as a studious young man comes to bat in the nick of time and saves the game. The first part shows him as the enterprising proprietor of a tailoring establishment of the "We-Press-'Em-While-You-Wait" variety.

"Lonesome Luke Loses Patients" shows the incorrigible funmaker as the Doctor Killem of an up-to-date sanatorium.

In "Pinched" he has many an embrace in the long arms of the law, is lodged in jail for a robbery he didn't commit and escapes only after a series of laughable adventures.

"By the Sad Sea Waves" introduces Lloyd as a pseudo-life saver who makes good against his will.

There will be one, three and six sheets, a stock one sheet, and a slide on the "Lonesome Luke" two-reel comedies and a one-sheet on the Harold Lloyd one-reelers.

"THE MYSTERIOUS MR. TILLER" (Bluebird).

Several months after "The Mysterious Mrs. M." arrived at theatres where Bluebirds are shown comes "The Mysterious Mr. Tiller" to cast the spell of uncertainty and suspense upon the screen. Elliott J. Clawson wrote this combination of psychology and detective business and Rupert Julian made the production. Bluebird is starring Mr. Julian and Ruth Clifford in the net result, set for release Sept. 17.

"The Mysterious Mr. Tiller" will be the third Bluebird in which Mr. Julian and Miss Clifford have jointly starred. "A Kentucky Cinderella" served to introduce them to the regular program and "Mother of Mine," set for release Sept. 3 as a Bluebird extraordinary, in the States Right division, will further increase their vogue.

Wedgewood Nowell, Harry Rattenberry, Wm. Higby, Fram Brownlee, E. A. Warren and Lloyd Whitlock will be supporting members of a cast selected from end to end to fit the Bluebird purpose of getting the right players to fill the exactions of specific roles. Sensations and surprises are promised in the unravelling plot and a "surprise finish" caps the climax. It is declared that "The Mysterious Mr. Tiller" will be among the best of fifty-two answers in the year to the question: "Why Bluebirds?"

Exhibitors Promised Good Things

Grant Wilbur, Catherine Calvert, Jean Sothern and Marian Swayne in Coming Plans of Art Dramas.

DIFFICULTIES in revising the Art Dramas schedule, to allow the immediate release of the newly-acquired Crane Wilbur features, have at last been circumvented, and the new order of productions is here given forth for the first time. As far as is known, this order will be followed exactly.

According to the new schedule, exhibitors of Art Dramas may look forward to a rich variety of popular productions, headed by stars of ability and renown. Two Crane Wilbur Horsley pictures are promised in close succession, and there will be also Jean Sothern, Marian Swayne and Catherine Calvert, in plays of distinction.

"Think It Over," which was due for release August 13, is a U. S. Amusement Corporation production, in which Catherine Calvert is starred, supported by Richard Tucker and a cast spesially selected for the various characters. This play is a breezy, swift-moving comedy, written by H. Blache and directed by him. This was followed by "The Little Samaritan," a much-heralded play which will, according to those in authority, live up to its advance notices, if not surpass them.

With Marian Swayne as star, Joseph Lovering as director, and Reverend Clarence J. Harris as author, "The Little Samaritan" is made up of the same triple alliance which produced "Little Miss Fortune," the picture which was such a sensation all over the country.

"Behind the Mask," another U. S. Amusement Corporation Art Drama in which Catherine Calvert is starred, again supported by Richard Tucker, was directed by Mme. Alice Blache from the story by Charles Dazey, one of the most capable and clever scenario writers before the public. In this story he has constructed a plot which will astonish by its novelty. It was adapted to the screen by Frederick Rath.

The second Horsley-Art Drama starring Crane Wilbur will follow "Behind the Mask." This is "Blood of His Fathers," and is a scientifically correct study of heredity. Mr. Wilbur plays three characters in the course of the narrative. "Blood of His Fathers" is somewhat of a novelty in form in that it is told with a prologue, a device somewhat common in stage plays, but almost unknown to motion pictures. The prologue takes place during the Civil War, and Mr. Wilbur is in that period of the story a disreputable captain of guerrillas, who wander the country pillaging and destroying. The remainder of the story is modern.

"Blood of His Fathers" was written by J. Francis Dunbar and directed by Harrish Ingraham, the two men who were responsible for the strength of story and excellence of production of "Eye of Envy," Mr. Wilbur's first Art Drama.

"Peg o' the Sea," a Van Dyke picture starring Jean Sothern, will follow this. Winifred Dunn wrote the story from which this is taken. The staging of the picture has been practically completed except for a few interiors. This week the company returned from Atlantic Highlands, where the sea scenes were taken. It is expected that the remainder of the photoplay will be completed by the end of the week.

An untitled picture in which Catherine Calvert is starred will follow this. The U. S. Amusement Corporation is at present working on the new play, and it is to be finished in a week or so. More details regarding its nature will be given in a later issue.

"Unto the End," third of the Horsley Art Dramas starring Crane Wilbur, is the next in order. This is a somewhat tragic drama, deeply moving in its wealth of pathos. It relates a story of love which endures, despite all obstacles and difficulties, until the death of the lovers. The last scene of "Unto the End" is said to be one of the most intensely emotional moments ever screened. The heroine, afflicted with leprosy, has been sent to an island in the Pacific—one of the Hawaiian group. Here her lover goes in secret, for no one is permitted to visit the dwelling of the living dead. He arrives to find her dying on the shore. Picking her up in his arms, he enters the sea, and wades out toward the setting sun until he and his mate have been swallowed up by the waves.

SELIG "WORLD LIBRARY NO. 15."

Historic Monterey, California, is presented in Selig World Library No. 15, released in General Film Service on Wednesday, August 22. In 1602, Don Sebastian Vizcaine entered Monterey Bay and took possession of the soil in the name of King Philip III of Spain. Monterey was the capital of California when the latter was a Mexican province. California's first theater, first frame house, first brick building. The home of Robert Louis Stevenson. The old Custom House.

Latest African fashions include a skirt made from bamboo leaves and without the slightest waste.

Tuna fishing in the Pacific is an important industry. Tons of the fish are caught along the Pacific Coast, where they swim in shoals. Some attain a length of fifteen feet, weighing about 1,500 pounds. The fish are cleaned at sea. Here is a 50-pound salmon. Securing salmon for spawning purposes.

The silk worm came originally from China. Mulberry leaves are its chief food. The silk secreting glands. The cocoon in which the chrysalis is killed is placed in warm water to soften the gum, allowing the silk fiber to be reeled. After being properly cleaned it is ready for spinning. The weaving machine. Ready for market.

Russian Art Film Attracts

Many Inquiries Received in Response to Advertising and Inspection.

PRELIMINARY announcement, made in the Moving Picture World last week by N. S. Kaplan, that his Russian repertory of the films would soon be released in the United States, has brought hundreds of communications to the offices of the Russian Art Film Corporation, in the Godfrey building, at 729 Seventh avenue, New York City. There appears to be a widespread interest in the project of presenting to American playgoers many new personalities in stories worthy of their abilities. Mr. Kaplan is enthusiastic at the response of the exhibitors who read the advertising pages of the Moving Picture World.

"The reception given to our general announcement amazes me," said Mr. Kaplan. "I had thought that the exhibitors of America would be interested to know what was being done in Russia to further the art to which they are devoted, but I had no idea that the response would be so conclusive. My desk is literally covered with telegrams and letters asking for particulars regarding the system of release that we shall follow in presenting Russian Art films to the trade in America. To all inquiries I have replied that I don't know; the reception given to the first picture which we present on Broadway in a few weeks will determine our plan of action. In Russia we have a motto or saying: 'Be sure you're right, then go ahead.'

"The Russian Art Film Corporation intends to be right before it goes ahead. We have completed the tremendous task of sorting and assembling for American production the greater part of the fifty negatives which I brought from Moscow. From half a dozen the final choice will be made as to the initial production. We don't say it will be the best picture drama of the lot—in fact, we believe that it will not be—but we promise that it will be representative of the generally high level of the art as it has been developed in the famous Moscow theater of Russia. We shall let the critical authorities and the exhibitors who know what their patrons want tell us what our policy shall be."

PRINT OF FIRST KERRIGAN PICTURES.

Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, and other officers and directors of that corporation have seen a run of the first print of J. Warren Kerrigan's production of Peter B. Kyne's "A Man's Man." They express their approbation in very enthusiastic terms.

"A Man's Man" will be released through the Triangle Distributing corporation in September. Prior to the release a special invitation showing will be made.

"OUTCAST" (Empire-All Star).

At a final viewing of their first release, "Outcast," the Empire All-Star Corporation, who are releasing through the Mutual Exchanges, feel quite sure they have a picture that is going to be something of a surprise to those who believe that plays have to be materially altered for screen showing.

Much of the scenery was taken from the Frohman storehouse and costumes were faithfully reproduced. Miss Ann Murdock, who is starring in the film version, herself long a Frohman star, declares herself to be more than pleased. She and David Powell, who is playing "Geoffrey," the same role he played when on tour with the original "Outcast" company, often discussed various little incidents that cropped up, and their memory helped to straighten out many mooted questions.

Scene from "Outcast" (Mutual).

Dell Henderson, who directed, declares that he asks for nothing better than that all plays should adapt themselves to the screen as well as "Outcast" has. And so those who declare that a good story is equally good whether it be used for magazine, stage or screen use, win their point.

"FROM CACTUS TO KALE" (L-KO).

Under the supervision of Director General J. G. Blystone of L-Ko comedies, the release set for September 12, under the title of "From Cactus to Kale," is said to have developed some of the most ingenious ideas Director Noel Smith has presented in the L-Ko series. "From Cactus to Kale" is another angle of the art of getting laughs out of Western comedy of the swift-moving, slap-stick sort. Gladys Varden and Walter Stephens will be leaders in the fun-making, with Katherine Young, Harry Griffith and Bert Roach strong in the support. This release is expected to maintain the L-Ko average as one of the best of September issues.

Carry License Discussion to Supreme Court

In Dorchester, Mass., a Protest is Registered at the Erection of a Theater on Codman Square When Other Applications Were Turned Down.

By Richard D. Howe, 80 Summer Sereet, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—An appeal will be made to the Supreme Court of Massachusetts for a decision regarding the law giving the mayor of a city the right to issue licenses to erect moving picture theaters. This is the result of a bitter fight, which has waged in the Codman Square district of Dorchester, a suburb of Boston, between the residents and city officials.

Applications have been made for three separate sites for motion picture theaters in this section of the city. Mayor James M. Curley of Boston refused two of the applicants, but the third application from a concern, of which Patrick Bowen, a former alderman, is at the head, seems practically assured a license. Mr. Bowen already has commenced construction of a beautiful theater in Codman Square without waiting for a permit from Mayor Curley. This action on his part has provoked determined resistance on the part of residents against the license being granted.

Rev. Alfred S. Isaacs, pastor of the Dorchester Temple Baptist Church, is leading the fight of the opposition against the erection of the theater. At a public hearing conducted in City Hall, Mr. Isaacs, among other things, charged "rotten politics" having a great deal to do with the partiality being shown Mr. Bowen.

The pastor declared he would produce witnesses that the petitioners for the license for the theater had secured the signatures through misrepresentation.

He stated the procedure had been first to present the petition in favor of the moving picture house and then, if the resident refused to sign it, he was visited a few days later by other men, with a petition for the construction of "a public building" in Codman Square. The "public building" petition, said Mr. Isaacs, was signed under the impression that it did not refer to the theater.

A petition bearing 1,600 signatures, many of them from school teachers, was presented by the remonstrants.

The mayor, after declaring that he was practically powerless to withhold the license—though he had done so on two previous occasions when moving picture theaters were projected in the same vicinity—he produced a ruling from Corporation Counsel Sullivan to support his claim. He withheld his decision on the matter.

Attorney Joseph F. Warren, one of the protestants, said he would take the matter to the Massachusetts Supreme Court for a ruling on the power of mayors of cities to grant or reject licenses for motion picture theaters.

W. S. Shapiro Now Heads Fox Exchange.

Boston, Mass.—An important change has taken place in the management of the Boston Fox office. William S. Shapiro has succeeded C. G. Kingsley, who has been transferred to the Indianapolis exchange of the Fox organization to fill the vacancy left by Charles E. Phillips, who resigned and accepted a position with Harry Campbell, manager for Goldwyn in New England. Mr. Phillips was assistant under Mr. Campbell when the latter had charge of Fox's Hub office.

William S. Shapiro, the new Boston manager for Fox, has been connected with that organization for about a year and for several months was sales representative in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont. Mr. Shapiro was very successful on the road, and when Charles Phillips was appointed manager of the Indianapolis office Mr. Shapiro was elected to be assistant to Manager Campbell. He temporarily took charge of the local office when Mr. Campbell joined the Goldwyn forces, but was soon relieved by C. G. Kingsley, who was sent from the Detroit exchange to take charge of the Boston office. Mr. Shapiro was appointed manager of the Fox Standard Productions at that time, but has now been given supreme control of the local exchange. He will also take charge of the standard pictures.

J. L. Reardon Will Open Boston Office for Selznick.

Boston, Mass.—J. Lester Reardon, formerly manager of the Vitagraph, V-L-S-E local exchange and owner of the Cross Street Orpheum, a moving picture theater in Somerville, Mass., has been appointed New England representative for Louis J. Selznick. Mr. Reardon will have entire charge of Selznick pictures in New England and plans shortly to open an office in this city. He is already on the lookout for a suitable location for an exchange. Mr. Reardon reports that he has been very successful since joining Mr. Selznick.

J. L. Levine Manager General Film Exchange.

Boston, Mass.—Jefferson D. Levine, one of the best known film men in New England, has been reappointed manager of the local office of the General Film Company. Mr. Levine was first given the managership of the Boston exchange last winter, when William H. Patten resigned the position, and was in charge up to a few months ago, when Frank Shirley, of the Wilkes-Barre, Pa., office was transferred to the local exchange. He continued with the General Film under Mr. Shirley and has now been given entire control of affairs in the Hub office.

Mr. Levine has been associated with the General Film for more than six years and during that time has been a valuable asset in the local exchange. He started as a poster clerk and was soon promoted to salesman. During his period on the road in New England, Mr. Levine established a lasting friendship with many of the most prominent exhibitors in his territory and increased the sales of the company to a considerable extent. L. A. Hacking, at present a member of the Boston staff of the Vitagraph, who was formerly manager of the General in Boston, soon called Mr. Levine in from the road and appointed him assistant manager, in which capacity he continued until he was elected to take charge last winter, when William H. Patten left the organization.

Enlighten Thy Daughter Doing Splendidly.

Boston, Mass.—President Harry Segal, of the Supreme Photoplay Corporation, who is exploiting "Enlighten Thy Daughter" throughout New England, states that he has received heavy bookings and the big business seems sure to continue. He is also playing the picture on a percentage basis, with two shows now on the road in different parts of New England, both of which are doing well.

Mr. Segal is being ably assisted by his publicity manager, Robert W. Cobe, who is getting out a great line of high-class literature and advance advertising matter on the picture. Mr. Cobe is a theatrical man of known ability, having been with several big companies on the road as press agent. He only recently returned from a flying trip through Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont. He states that his trip playing the picture on a percentage basis was entirely successful and he would have continued it but for the fact that he was called early in the draft and was forced to bring his tour to a close in order to get back home and appear for examination for the new National Army.

Paramount Holds Picnic at Rocky Point.

Boston, Mass.—A number of the employees of the Paramount Boston office held a pleasant outing at Rocky Point, R. I., recently. The party traveled in an auto truck, covered with Paramount "one-sheets," which attracted considerable attention enroute to the recreation grounds. The crowd enjoyed a perfect day.

Castle Square to Open With Pictures.

Boston, Mass.—Remodeling of the Castle Square theater, for many years the home of John Craig's stock company in this city, is going on rapidly, and it is planned to open the house in the near future, showing moving pictures only. Frank Ross, manager of the Lancaster theater on Lancaster street, has been selected to manage the new house. The Castle Square is situated in the South End and should prove a good location for a "movie" house, as there is no other house nearby. The shows will be run at popular prices.

Exhibitors See "Baby Mine."

Boston, Mass.—A large gathering of exhibitors and exchangemen flocked to the New England headquarters of the Goldwyn Pictures Monday, August 13, to view a private trade showing of "Baby Mine," the new Goldwyn production. It was the unanimous opinion of all present that "Baby Mine" is a wonderful picture. The new Goldwyn office is located at No. 40 Piedmont street, Boston.

A Successful Woman Exhibitor.

MONCTON, N. B.—A successful woman theater manager is Mrs. R. H. Davidson, who for some years has been the proprietress of the Dreamland at Moncton, N. B. Mrs. Davidson has recently purchased the theater and quite a strip of land about it which makes her property come well up to the C. G. R. tracks. Later in the year she will renovate the house and improve it greatly in various ways.

As a woman Mrs. Davidson knows how to cater to an audience of women and children as well as to the many men who attend her theater. That she is fortunate in her choice of pictures is shown by the fact that her theater is so popular that special matinees are given for children or extra reels run for them on Saturdays. Mrs. Davidson uses Vitagraph, Metro, Famous Players, Mutual and other features.

Queens Rink to Be Picture Theater.

St. John, N. B.—There is to be another new theater in St. John, or rather an old building is made over into a theater. Robert Armstrong, who for many years managed the Queens rink, is turning that place of winter amusements into a motion picture theater. The theater will have a seating capacity of twelve hundred. The stage is to be very large so that special productions can be accommodated or dances given there. The admission price is to be five cents. No policy of pictures has as yet been decided upon.

F. G. Spencer Considers Building New Theater.

St. John, N. B.—F. G. Spencer of St John has leased the Hayden Gibson theater, Woodstock, N. B., one of the most up-to-date houses in the Maritime provinces The new owner takes charge September 3. Mr. Spencer now controls the Lyric and Unique theaters, St. John; the Empress, Gem and Star in Amherst, N. S.; the Peoples and Prince Edward theaters in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island; the Gem in Fredericton, the capital city of New Brunswick, and the Hayden-Gibson theater in Woodstock, N. B. The Princess (and, it is rumored, the Strand) in Truro, N. S. In fact, Mr. Spencer is a sort of theater king in the Maritime provinces He also has in contemplation a new theater (The Strand) in St. John, to be built on King square. Accompanied by Mrs Spencer and several friends, Mr. Spencer is now on an automobile tour about Woodstock and that part of the Province. We do not know how many theaters he may gather in on his travels.

March-Golding Wedding Announced.

St. John, N. B.—There is a wedding which is of great interest to members of the theatrical fraternity in St. John, to take place in August. On the 29th of August Miss Kathleen Golding will be married to Reginald March, manager of the Specialty Import company (Pathe), St. John. Miss Golding is a niece of W. H. Golding of the Imperial theater and was for some time his secretary. Both have many friends in St. John who will wish them every happiness.

Notes Gleaned About St. John, N. B.

Visiting the Metro exchange in St. John, H. H. McArthur tells me that "The Great Secret" begins in the Academy at New Glasgow, August 13, and at the Savoy, Glace Bay, the following week.

The Opera House, Pictou, N. S., used a Metro pictures and liked it so well that they sent for more. W. O. Wheaton is the manager there.

K. Keltie, of the Peoples theater, Yarmouth, N. S., is beginning to show Metro films, opening with Edmund Breeze in "The Weakness of Strength."

Harvey Watkins, superintendent for the Keith interests of Eastern Canada, paid one of his flying visits to St. John, N. B, lately.

Wm. Cranston, the Canadian manager for D. Griffith's spectacle, "Intolerance" and "The Birth of a Nation," was in St. John last week. "Intolerance" is booked at the Academy of Music, Halifax, for a three days' run.

C. A. Ganter, the general manager for Canada of the Mutual Film company, was in St. John recently on his way to Toronto Mr. Ganter has been attending a meeting of the Mutual Managers' Asociation, which met recently in Chicago and was full of enthusiasm regarding the new plans of his company. With C. Kerr, the local manager of the Mutual, Mr. Ganter spent his few hours in St. John visiting some of the theater managers. It is hoped that some of the Mutual stars may be able to attend the convention.

W. H. Golding has just returned from a visit to Halifax where he found the Halifax exhibitors much interested in the coming convention in St. John and making preparations to attend.

Parcels Post Not a Perfect Film Carrier

Several Exchange Men in Washington Have Reason to Find Fault With Post Office Present Realities—Lost Film, Slack Service and Red Tape.

Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Washington's exchange managers are somewhat disappointed in the parcel post service, for as far as they are concerned it is not "panning out," according to a number of speakers at the meeting of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association, held recently. A number of cases were spoken of where the servic failed to come up to the expectations of the managers. One case in particular covered the loss of four reels of film. It was found where the reels had left the sending office and where they had failed to be received at the Washington office. Further than that, they are "just lost." This happened two months ago and nothing has been heard of the reels in all that time. They were not insured through the error of the sender of the films, so that the exchange cannot recover their value from the Government.

For the most part, the Washington exchanges have given up patronizing the parcel post service because of the lack of "service." Despite the difficulties incident to shipping through the express companies, the latter are far more satisfactory than the former. One of the chief complaints against the parcel post additional to the dissatisfaction over the loss and damage provisions is that if a shipment be refused by the consignee, instead of the postal authorities shipping it back immediately in conformity with the instructions contained on the top of the box, they hold it up and write the shipper of the circumstances and ask that stamps be sent to cover the cost of return transportation. This means a loss of time and consequent loss of rentals.

The exchange managers declare that there is too much idle talk and red tape involved in the parcel post business. Until it can be placed on the plane of the express companies, it is useless for them to avail themselves of the mails for the shipment of films. They declare that apologies do not make deliveries, and when films are lost or there is loss of time, it means money. If any serious difficulties arise between the exchanges and the express companies, it is a very easy matter to secure an adjustment through the New York offices of the companies and by appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Nothing of this nature can be accomplished where the mails are involved.

New Selznick Offices Chosen.

Washington, D. C.—The new Selznick offices, it is understood, will be located in the building at Eighth and G streets, northwest, which is being remodeled to make it desirable as a film exchange building. This property is controlled by Edmund K. Fox, who recently sent out announcements to the effect that he intended turning the building into one that would prove to be within the requirements of the new film regulations recently adopted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

New Theater Planned for Richmond.

Richmond, Va.—Sparklin & Childs are now preparing plans for a large theater to be built in Richmond, Va., to cost about $200,000. The structure will measure 160 by 96 feet and be designed in the most up-to-date method.

Will Study Theater Advertising in South America.

Washington, D. C.—J. W. Sanger, an advertising investigator, counsel and writer of New York City, has just been chosen as the agent of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, of the Department of Commerce, to conduct an investigation of the advertising methods in vogue in Latin America. He will study all of the usual advertising methods in South America, paying particular attention, among other things, to electric sign and motion picture advertising. When the investigation is completed his conclusions and recommendations will appear in the form of a bulletin, and this bulletin, as well as his personal services in an advisory capacity when he returns to the United States, will be available to any American manufacturer or dealer who wishes to promote trade in Latin America by advertising. Any one interested in the forthcoming investigation desiring to consult with Mr. Sanger before he leaves for his trip may reach him at the Division of Commercial Agents, Room 409, Custom House, New York City.

Alaska Eager for Government Films.

Washington, D. C.—American motion picture films are meeting with fine favor in Alaska. As previously reported in this paper late last fall the Bureau of Fisheries sent 100,000 feet of motion picture films to Saint Paul Island, Alaska. The films were selected chiefly with the view to affording recreation and instruction to the natives. They were rented and must be returned this summer. Agent Fassett, in charge of Saint Paul Island, in recommending recently that a new supply of pictures be sent to the Island, stated that the value of the first lot has been almost immeasurable and that the natives would sacrifice anything to secure a continuance of the weekly entertainment afforded by the pictures. It appears that comedies, news and educational subjects are the most in demand. News pictorials on Saint Paul Island, it is said, need not be of current week's events to be of interest. Employees of the Naval radio station on Saint Paul Island have furnished the machines for showing the pictures and are willing to co-operate in this way another year. It is expected that arrangements will be made to send a second set of films for use during the coming winter season.

Philadelphia Season Opens With "Crisis"

Elaborate Arrangeemnts Made for the Opening of the Big Civil War Picture at the Garrick on August 13—Vacation Notes—Jottings.

By F. V. Armato, 144 N. Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—The opening of the new theatrical season will be marked by the first presentation beginning Monday afternoon, August 13, for an extended engagement, at the Garrick theater of the spectacular screen version of Winston Churchill's Civil War novel, "The Crisis." The picture will be shown in a manner to suggest Southern hospitality and Southern aristocracy. A double sextette of male and female voices will sing, and there will be music by a large orchestra. Miss Hazel Lee, as hostess, will receive visitors in the auditorium and will see to it that every one is made comfortable. An old Southern mammy will further lend variety to the suggestion of Southern solicitude, and she will be generous in her bestowal of temperance mint julips. A cotton-picking scene will reveal a number of Southern darkies in plantation diversions. Thus it will appear that there will be much of a picturesque character in the exhibition.

Where They All Are Spending Hot Days.

Philadelphia.—Vacations and week-end trips are at present being indulged in by the prominent film men and exhibitors. During the hot spell Stanley V. Mastbaum enjoys the cool breezes at the St. Charles, Atlantic City. Abe Einstein we find cottaging at the shore with his family. Fred and Eugene Felt of the Locust and Belmont theaters, now have easy access to the Atlantic with the aid of their new Mercer car. Lewis J. Swaab and his son Mark are commuting daily to the shore. Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Effinger of the Strand spend the week-ends motoring from one seashore resort to another. Chas. Segal of the Apollo prefers to tour with his family in the vicinity of the mountains around Lancaster. J. M. Graver of the Liberty is taking his vacation and will visit the beautiful country parts up the state and then continue on his way through Maryland. Oscar Morgan of the Paramount was seen dancing on the Steel Pier in Atlantic City last week so naturally, it is easy to guess where he spends his idle hours. George Meeker of the World Film, although very busy, also likes the seashore. George Denhow, Fox; Robert Lynch, Metro; B. R. Thomas, Mutual; Max Milder, Peerless; Harry Schwalbe, Elec.; R. Garrick and Wm. Sachenmaier, of the Interstate; A. Osborne, Pathe; Harold Rodner, Selznick, and Alen May of the Bluebird, are prominent exchange men, all of whom are owners of automobiles of various types which are busily engaged in running down to the nice cool spots near the shore or seeking the shade in the quiet of the mountains. Herbert Givens, Triangle; J. Hebrew, V-L-S-E; George Ames, Goldwyn; J. Buck, K-E-S-E, and Percy Bloch, of the General, are also prominent exchange managers who deserve their vacation whenever they may take them.

Royal Palace Theater Changes Hands.

Philadelphia.—Conveyance was made last week of the Royal Palace theater, 2716-18 Girard avenue, by Charles H. Colburn to John E. Hardy for a nominal sum, subject to a mortgage of $15,000. The property is a three-story brick structure on a lot 36.6 by 100 feet and assessed for $15,000.

Rialto Has New Organ.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Rialto theater, under the direction of the Stanley Corporation, has installed a new organ. It is one of the finest of its style and it is the intention of the management not only to have special musical scores played that accompany the big featured pictures, but talented artists will give special recitals at every performance. The new organ permits of a wide variety of imitations of various instruments and also has many other stops for voice and effects that make it complete and thoroughly enjoyable in tone and color.

A Fine Lecture on the Great War.

Philadelphia, Pa. — The Philadelphia public had an opportunity last week to hear M. Moncel Knecht deliver a lecture at Houston Hall, illustrated with moving pictures of the war direct from France. Mr. Knecht came to America with Viviani and Joffre, and is a member of the French Commission. He speaks English fluently and is an orator of rare ability. His subject was "The Effort of France and Her Colonial Empire and of Alsace-Lorraine." While the lecture was scheduled as one of the summer school entertainments of the University, the public was also welcome.

Chaplin Comedies on More Liberal Terms.

Philadelphia, Pa.—B. R. Tolmas, manager of the Mutual Exchange, announces that Chaplin Comedy releases in the future will be booked on a liberal arrangement in conjunction with their program.

Western Pennsylvania Theater Jottings.

Philadelphia.—M. Stiefel has made some improvements at the Lafayette theater on Kensington avenue, which included a new crystal fibre screen and two Powers' 6B machines.

Bryn Mawr.—The Bryn Mawr theater after extensive alterations and remodeling at the cost of $6,000, will reopen about Sept. 1 under the new management of W. H. Hassinger. A Kimball organ will also be installed as one of the many features of the house.

Allentown, Pa.—The new Strand theater, which will open here on September 1, will have a seating capacity of 1,000 and be of modern construction throughout. A gold fibre screen will be included in the up-to-date equipment.

York, Pa.—The Jackson theater here is reported to be prepared for their opening during the early part of September. The theater is of the 1,000-seat variety, handsomely furnished and of the best construction. R. C. Jackson & Co., of Lebanon, Pa., who are the owners of this house, also control a chain of theaters in this vicinity.

Charles A. Calehuff and F. R. Bloomfield will shortly start together for an extended business trip throughout the state.

Baltimore News Letter

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mount Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

Special Showing of "The Slacker."

BALTIMORE, MD.—Through the courtesy of Charles E. Ford, manager of Ford's Opera House, arrangements were made by Harry Cohen, the live-wire Metro representative from the Washington office, for a private screening of "The Slacker" on Wednesday afternoon, August 15, at four P. M. Mr. Ford went to a great deal of trouble to decorate his playhouse with the national and state colors for the occasion and 1,500 invitation cards were sent out to the British and American recruiting officers and to the state, city and national officials, the greater majority of them being accepted. Special music was furnished by E. V. Cupero and an especially arranged orchestra. Mayor Preston and his staff and many other notables attended and short speeches of a patriotic nature were made by the mayor and his former secretary, Robert E. Lee, during the intermission.

J. J. Hartlove's Big Balihoo.

Baltimore, Md.—To especially call attention to the dare devil of the screen, Tom Mix, in "Movie Stunts," on Thursday, August 9, J. J. Hartlove, manager of the Crescent theater, 1110-12 South Charles street, engaged Indian Joe and his two cowboys to appear in the lobby of the theater in their full Western regalia to balihoo the performance. The lobby was decorated with pelts, skins and banners. Five thousand handbills were issued and distributed and Mr. Hartlove states during the afternoon performance 1,000 people attended the show.

Actress Marries in Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md.—Baltimore was again the scene of a romantic marriage on Saturday, August 11, when Sarah V. Fox, of the "Follies of 1917" company, was married to Robert M. Wilson, a hero of the battle of the Marne, whose home is in Denver, Colo. The romance began shortly after Mr. Wilson returned to the United States last year, and met Miss Fox in Philadelphia.

Big Civic Auditorium Planned.

Baltimore, Md.—According to the Civic Center plans, which are now being drawn up for Baltimore, a vast municipal auditorium, which will have a seating capacity of about 14,000 people and be a one-story building, with architectural embellishments, is to be erected on the ground extending from Gay street back to the Fallsway. It is planned to have entrances both at the front and back and at the side, near the center, a smaller building will be built to seat about 3,000 people for smaller affairs.

Superba Is Improving.

Baltimore, Md.—David Braun, proprietor of the Superba theater, 908 Columbia avenue, which has a seating capacity of about 400, has had this playhouse closed for the past two weeks for alterations and improvements. A concrete floor is being placed in the theater, which is being generally renovated.

York Theater to Open.

York, Pa.—It is now announced by Professor Edward Gentzler, of this city, that he will open his East Lyric theater, which has a seating capacity of about 300, on September 1. This playhouse has been closed during the summer months and when reopened the Universal program will be used.

C. W. Sutton in Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md.—C. W. Sutton, proprietor of the Opera House in this city, visited Baltimore during the week of August 13, and called on his friends at the exchanges. While there Mr. Sutton booked "Pershing in France" for his theater.

New Theater at Buckhannon.

Buckhannon, W. Va.—About six weeks ago H. B. Young, of this city, opened up his new Main Street theater, which has a seating capacity of about 500. It is stated to be a very pretty theater.

Business Notes.

Baltimore, Md.—I. Berman, proprietor of Berman's theater, Baltimore street at High, has had his house closed for several weeks and when opened will be improved.

P. Oletzky, manager of the Baltimore Film Exchange, is now in Atlantic City enjoying a vacation in his cottage.

M. Seigel, Bluebird representative in Baltimore, is now enjoying the sea breezes on his vacation at the Atlantic Hotel in Atlantic City.

Barnett Freeman, Universal representative, has just returned from a vacation which he enjoyed immensely.

William F. Stone, treasurer of the Maryland Censor Board, has been confined to his home since Saturday, August 11, with an attack of the measles.

Miss Rose Wood, of this city, is reported to have gone to New York to join the company of players supporting Marie Doro in photoplay presentations.

Harry Woods, manager of the Garden theater, on Lexington street at Park avenue, in the heart of the shopping district, has innovated the idea of starting his performances at noon in order to give the shoppers a chance to view the full show by 4 p. m., which consists of vaudeville and pictures.

Savings Bank in a Picture Theater.

RALEIGH, N. C.—A freak picture show, the first of its kind probably in the country, will soon be seen in Raleigh. The Superba, operated by F. L. Allen, is closed for alterations and when re-opened will have built right in the center of its large lobby a savings bank—one of the both day and night variety.

Narrow alleyways on either side of the miniature bank building will furnish entrance and exit to the theater proper in the rear. In order to minimize the space occupied by the bank the vaults will be constructed underground, immediately beneath the bank, a narrow spiral stairway leading to the underground strong boxes of the banking institution.

The Superba has a very advantageous location on the busiest block in town, and this ingenius arrangement was the only method by which the day and night bank could obtain a coveted stand.

Wilmington's Royal Closes Summer Policy.

Wilmington, N. C.—The Royal theater, now presenting super-picture productions, will be closed for one week after August 25 and will reopen on Labor Day, playing vaudeville and tabloid musical comedy attractions, the super-productions after that date being transferred to the Grand theater, on North Front street. Both theaters are operated by the Howard and Wells interests.

President Warner at Wrightsville Beach.

Wilmington, N. C.—George C. Warner, of the Ideal theater, Columbia, S. C., is spending the week at Wrightsville Beach with Mrs. Warner and children. Mr. Warner is president of the South Carolina Exhibitors' Association and states that a large delegation of exhibitors from the Palmetto state will attend the joint convention at Ocean View, Va.

IN PITTSBURGH.

Harry Lande Now Controls Quality Film.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Max W. Herring has disposed of his interest in the Quality Film exchange, 404-406 Ferry street, Pittsburgh, to Harry A. Lande, who is now sole owner of the concern. Mr. Herring announces that he is continuing in the film business and has already secured a number of subjects. He will announce his location in the near future.

Lyric at Uniontown to Be Handsomer.

Uniontown, Pa.—The Lyric theater, Uniontown, Pa., is being extensively remodeled by the owners, the Penn Amusement company. A handsome new front is being installed and the interior redecorated and newly equipped. Manager McCloskey states that the Imp theater, conducted by the same company, will be closed in the near future.

Pittsburgh Revises Picture Theater Tax

Legislative Committee of the League Gets Ordinance of 1913 on Licenses for Theaters Revised—More Favorable Requirements Secured.

From Pittsburgh News Service, 6104 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—A revision of the tax on moving picture theaters in Pittsburgh has been secured through the efforts of the Motion Picture Exhibitor's League legislative committee, which has been finally successful in having the 1913 ordinance fixing the license tax or fee for all public amusements amended favorably.

The new ruling permits all theaters having a seating capacity of less than 450 to charge a maximum price of 20 cents admission without any additional tax. Heretofore all theaters were compelled to pay a license of $35 per month, irrespective of their seating capacity, provided they at any time charged more than 10 cents admission. In other words, a house having a seating capacity of 200 or less and paying a license of $10 per month would have to pay $35 per month if at any time they charged more than 10 cents admission. A house of 300 seats, which paid $15 per month license, would likewise have to pay $35, provided there was an admission price of more than 10 cents.

As the ordinance reads now the seat grading is as follows: Two hundred or less, $10; 300 or less, $15; over 300, $25, provided that when the seating capacity of the house exceeds 450 seats the maximum charge of admission does not exceed 20 cents. If the maximum charge exceeds 20 cents admission they shall pay a license of $35.

In commenting upon the new tax schedule, Secretary G. A. Sahner, of the Pittsburgh Exhibitors' League, said that the picture theaters have been paying over two-thirds of the city licenses of amusements against the large theaters, basball, skating, billiards, pool, carnivals, circuses, etc. He points out that all of these taxes come in direct competition with the picture business.

John McAleer Heads Pittsburgh F. I. L. M. Club.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—John McAleer, manager of the Independent Film exchange, local office of the Universal, has been elected president of the Pittsburgh F. I. L. M. Club, succeeding F. C. Burhans, who recently resigned. The choice of Mr. McAleer to head this thriving organization of the exchange men of the city meets with much approval, as he is exceptionally well fitted for the work. Mr. McAleer has been prominently identified in the past with various movements here, having been very active in the Pittsburgh Screen Club, and a year ago led the successful fight against a threatened censorship law in West Virginia. Although the F. I. L. M. Club has been organized only about a year it has proven of great value to exhibitor and exchanges alike, and under President McAleer's able guidance the organization is expected to accomplish still greater things in bringing about harmony in the trade.

"Jack and the Beanstalk" Pleases Exhibitors.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The notable fairy film, "Jack and the Beanstalk," the first juvenile on the Fox Standard program, was shown before a large and appreciative gathering of the trade on Sunday, August 11, at the Olympic theater, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh. About four hundred exhibitors and their friends were present. A well-attended trade showing of the big William Fox production, "The Honor System," was also held recently at the Olympic.

Press Sponsor for Battle Film.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Duquesne theater, Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, one of the city's leading legitimate houses, will open an engagement of Pathe's big war film, "The Battle of the Ancre," the week of August 27. The showing will be under the auspices of the Pittsburgh Press, which paper will spend over $4,000 for publicity in various forms. The proceeds will be donated to the Regimental Fund.

"Fatal Ring" Serial's First Showing.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Pittsburgh Pathe exchange on Sunday, August 2, gave a very successful trade showing of the first three episodes of the new Pathe serial, "The Fatal Ring," featuring Pearl White, at the Liberty theater, East End. One of the latest Luke comedies was also shown with good effect. The Pathe exchange announces some of the first run bookings on the new serial as follows: Sheridan Square theater, East Liberty, Pittsburgh, three days; Strand theater, Erie, three days; Orpheum theater, Altoona, three days; Mercer Square, Orpheum, Clarksburg; Thomas, Sharon; Colonial, Farrell; Shapiro, Mt. Union, and the Grand, Bradford.

Harris P. Wolfberg Opens More Offices.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Right on the heels of the announcement that the First National Exhibitors' Circuit will release through the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, Lyceum Theater building, Pittsburgh, and that additional offices will be opened in Cleveland and Cincinnati, it is learned that Mr. Wolfberg has purchased the rights to the Hall Caine masterpiece, "The Deemster," for Missouri and Kansas. This necessitates the establishment of offices in St. Louis and Kansas City.

W. Rhea Johnson, who has covered the western Pennsylvania territory for the Wolfberg exchange for the past six months, has gone to Cleveland, O., to open a new office for Mr. Wolfberg. Mr. Johnson will be the Cleveland branch manager

H. E. Stahler of the Wolfberg Attractions publicity department, is on a two weeks' trip over the eastern end of the territory. He will spend some time in Philadelphia, where "The Crisis" opens for a three weeks' run at the Garrick theater.

Morris Berger Ill.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—It is with much regret that the many friends of Morris Berger, of the Specialty Film company, Pittsburgh, learn that he is ill with scarlet fever in a hospital at Detroit, Mich. Mr. Berger was stricken while on a vacation trip motoring around the Great Lakes.

John Isaac Completing a Theater at Lyndora.

Lyndora, Pa.—A new theater is being completed at Lyndora, Pa., by John Isaac, who announces that it will be ready for opening about September 1. The house is an attractive one, seating 350, and will offer high-class feature productions.

Pitt Theater Closes for Redecorating.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Pitt theater, Penn avenue and Seventh street, Pittsburgh, after a successful repeat run of "The Bar Sinister," on August 11 was closed for several weeks for extensive renovating and redecorating. It is expected to reopen this house of big features about Labor Day.

Joseph Spero Joins Specialty Road Staff.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Joseph Spero, a pioneer film man of New York and formerly special representative for the Mutual, has joined the road staff of the Specialty Film company, Pittsburgh.

Loew Secures Two Big Ohio Theaters

The Stillman in Cleveland and the Valintine in Toledo, Each Seating About 1,500, Change Hands—Adolph Zukor Said to Be Interested.

From M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg. Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—Marcus Loew, the Eastern theatrical man, has invaded Ohio. He has acquired control of two of the largest and finest theaters in the state, and it is reported that he is looking for more.

The theaters are the new Stillman in Cleveland and the Valentine in Toledo. Each seats about 1,500 and are among the most beautiful theaters in the United States.

It is understood that Loew is associated with Adolph Zukor in these enterprises. Mr. Zukor has been in Cleveland twice within the last month and has conferred with Manager Emanuel Mandelbaum of the Stillman, who retains his interest in the theater and will continue to manage it. The bookings, however, will be under the supervision of Mr. Loew.

The details of the Valentine deal have not as yet been given out, but it is reported that Indianapolis capital is represented in the new deal. The theater now is undergoing remodeling and alterations and will be opened soon.

High class pictures will be shown in both theaters, arrangements having been made to book many of the popular stars.

Goldwyn Offices Formally Opened.

Cleveland, O.—The Goldwyn offices have been formally opened on the fourth floor of the Standard theater building, Cleveland, where H. A. Bandy is in charge. The Goldwyn pictures have been booked in the Temple theater, Toledo, and also in a downtown Cleveland theater, the name of which cannot be announced publicly at present.

Sam Deutsch Adds to Sun Theater.

Cleveland, O.—Sam Deutsch, manager of the Sun theater, Cleveland, arrived back in town this week from a three weeks' trip by auto through the east, and immediately set to work to rebuilding his theater.

The Sun will be enlarged by three hundred seats and an elegant marquis will adorn the entrance. The house also will be redecorated.

General Film Offices Will Be Moved.

Cleveland, O.—The General Film company, after having been located at 1022 Superior avenue, East, Cleveland, for over five years, will move about August 20 to the fourth floor of the Standard Theater building on Prospect avenue, right in the heart of the film district.

Manager Flynn expects to take along a black cat which wandered into the exchange a few weeks ago and made itself at home among the posters advertising Essanay's "Black Cat" features. Flynn says all he has to do to draw business into the office is to allow the cat to sit in the doorway for a few minutes. It's a great mascot.

Cincinnati News Letter

From Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, O.

Cincinnati News Weekly Company Expands.

CINCINNATI, O.—The Cincinnati Motion Picture Co., which has for five years been producing a regular news weekly covering the Cincinnati territory, besides engaging successfully in commercial moving picture work, is branching out into other cities. Clarence Runey is head of the company. Ira J. Hoffman, who has been with the company for some time, has gone to Louisville, Ky., and Indianapolis to open up branches in those two cities and will be permanently located in one or the other, with extra cameramen working from the two offices to cover happenings of interest in the vicinity of those cities.

Goldwyn Gives Private Showing.

Cincinnati, O.—Manager C. C. Hite, in charge of the Goldwyn offices in Cincinnati, held the first of his private exhibitions recently at the Nordland Plaza theater of "Baby Mine." Special music added to the enjoyment of the performance, and the quality of the picture created a good impression among exhibitors who saw it. "Baby Mine" and other pictures are being booked by Mr. Hite for early showing in and around Cincinnati.

The Walnut's New Policy Making Good.

Cincinnati, O.—A successful week's engagement of a new Artcraft release, "Down to Earth," shows well for the new policy and the new pictures at the Walnut theater. As recently announced, the Walnut will run Artcraft-Paramount pictures for the coming year, admission 25 cents for the lower floor and 15 cents for the balcony. Manager Libson found it rather difficult when the Walnut was first turned over to pictures to get the crowds Now they are not only coming, but are paying the highest regular scale of prices of any picture theater in Cincinnati.

The Faurot at Lima Makes Improvements.

Lima, O.—The Faurot theater, Lima's leading house, is being extensively remodeled, and when it is reopened for business, which will be the latter part of the month, it will be greatly improved. The chief change being made is the removal of the pillars which formerly obstructed the view on the lower floor. A new floor is also being constructed, and new decorations will freshen up the interior so that it will look like a new building. The work has been under way for some time and is being pushed rapidly in order to reach completion at an early date.

New Demand for Educational-Advertising Films.

Canton, O. — Educational-advertising films produced by various manufacturers for the purpose of showing how their goods are manufactured and used are coming into favor for a purpose which should be very beneficial to all concerned. Inquiries have been received by several local manufacturers who have produced such films asking that prints be loaned to the industrial department of the International Y. M. C. A., which desires to exhibit them at the various army cantonments soon to be opened The films will be transferred from camp to camp by representatives of the Y. M. C. A. without cost to the producers, so that there will be no trouble or expense connected with the work, and the manufacturers have indicated their entire willingness to meet the situation, both from patriotic motives and for their own benefit.

Toledo Men Incorporate New Theater Company.

Toledo, O.—The Valentine Theater company has been incorporated by a number of local men, including Charles K. Friedman, Jacob Kruckman, George E. Dixon and Mark M. Gates, to construct and operate a large moving picture house. The company has a capital stock of $30,000.

Louisville, Ky.—J. G. Conner, representing the Indianapolis Mutual office, was in Louisville recently and closed a deal with L. J. Dittmar of the Majestic Amusement company to run the Mutual feature, "Souls in Pawn," featuring Gail Kane. This is the first time that a Mutual feature or anything other than a Paramount release has been shown in the Majestic, and is quite a feather in Mr. Conner's cap, and also speaks well for the picture.

Buffalo News Letter

By Joseph A. McGuire, 152 N. Elmwood Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

"Italian Battlefront" Pictures at Fort Niagara.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—As a compliment to Col. Samuel W. Miller, commander of the reserve officers' training camp at Fort Niagara, "The Italian Battlefront War Pictures" were shown in the open recently before the members and officers at the camp. William Moore Patch, in charge of the pictures, sent a special set of films and a special operator from New York to give the performance at Fort Niagara. The films have been the attraction at the Teck Theater, Buffalo. A guest at the opening night at the Teck was General Guglielmotti, a hero of the battles in the Trentino and on the Carso plateau. As he entered the box and removed his high military cap, the house, filled with local Italians, arose to greet him. Au augmented orchestra played the Italian national hymn.

Among Western New York Film Men.

Buffalo.—A. W. Root, a former vaudeville agent, has taken over the Palace Theater, Olean, N. Y.

F. N. Zimmerman, of Buffalo, traveling representative of the Bluebird Photoplays, has returned from a motor trip to New York City and is spending two weeks at his cottage at Lake Chautauqua.

F. F. Peters, Hornell exhibitor, is summering at Cuba Lake. Mr. Peters and G. H. Christoffers, manager of the Victor Film, Buffalo, recently enjoyed the scenic beauties of Niagara Falls.

Mr. Hilkert, of Geneva, N. Y., is negotiating for the Johnson opera house property at Seneca Falls. He is interesting Buffalo capitalists to erect a $25,000 moving picture theater on the site.

William L. Sherry and H. F. Brink have several Western New York towns where they secured a fine lot of contracts for the new Star series of the Artcraft and Paramount services. The Buffalo headquarters of these services at 145 Franklin street have been enlarged, giving more office and shipping room.

The Colonial Theater, Rochester, is being remodeled.

Harry Marsey and Al Becker, Buffalo film men, have returned from a motor trip to New York.

A. J. Sardino, former manager of the Savoy Theater and later lessee of the Regent, both of Syracuse, has taken over the Hippodrome moving picture theater, that city. The house is being remodeled and redecorated.

It is said several of the Rochester exhibitors will use features daily after September 1, and advance their admission from five to ten cents.

F. S. Hopkins, manager of the Bluebird Photoplays, Buffalo, will also handle the Alice Howell Comedies for New York State.

"The bookings of these comedies are very satisfactory," said Mr. Hopkins.

Veribest Pictures, Inc., Moves Its Offices.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Veribest Pictures, Inc., of which George R. Matthews is Buffalo manager, has moved to 47 West Swan street, this city. The location is central and on the first floor.

Ben Fitzer Will Travel for Goldwyn.

Buffalo, N. Y.—George A. Hickey, manager of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, Buffalo, has engaged Ben Fitzer as traveling representative of that concern. Mr. Fitzer has been with the Universal and the Artcraft.

Fire in Booth of Amherst Street House.

Buffalo, N. Y.—A film at a moving picture theater at 367 Amherst street, Buffalo, recently burned. The house was emptied quickly. Charles E. Reiner, the proprietor, put out the blaze in the operating booth before the arrival of the firemen. The damage totaled $200. J. C. Koons, the operator, had his hair singed.

IN ONTARIO.

Camp Borden Theater Makes Assignment.

Toronto.—The Summer Theatres Company, Limited, operating the Strand theatre, Camp Borden, Ontario, has made an assignment to J. P. Langley, McKinnon building, Toronto, for the benefit of creditors. This theatre is a huge wooden structure seating 2,400 people, and it has been the principal place of amusement in Camp Borden, Canada's chief military camp. Last year, when there were as many as 34,000 troops in the camp, the Strand did a big business, but this season the number of soldiers in training here has dropped to a few thousand. The theater building was cut in half, but even then it proved too large for the patronage.

Toronto Visitors Will See Best Pictures

Local Theaters Have Prepared Excellent Programs for the Visitors to the Big National Fair at the End of August—Some of the Offerings.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St., Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, Ont.—As forecasted in Moving Picture World, many Toronto exhibitors, individually, have picked upon the weeks of August 27 and September 3 for the presentation of special attractions to form an opening of the season of 1917-1918.

Manager Clarence Robson of the Strand theater announces that he will have "Beware of Strangers," the seven-reel special, as his big attraction for the week of September 3. He has been changing programs three times each week during the summer months, but with the presentation of this subject he will return to his fall and winter policy of only one show for the week.

Manager Robson has just reorganized his orchestra, which is one of the best in Toronto. The new leader is Ernest Knaggs of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra and various members are solo-musicians of that orchestra. Robson has signed up his music crew for twelve months.

The Park theatre, Lansdowne avenue and Bloor street, one of the largest outlying houses here, is being painted and redecorated in anticipation of an "opening" about September 1.

Harry Pomeroy, manager of the Photodrome, is proceeding with the establishment of a dance hall, cabaret and model barber shop in connection with his theater for the coming fall and winter seasons.

These, and other "openings" already reported by the Toronto correspondent, will occur simultaneously with the holding of the annual Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto when the city will be crowded with thousands of out-of-town visitors.

"Nation" and "Intolerance" Pictures Still Doing Well.

Toronto.—B. S. Courtney of Toronto, formerly general manager of the Basil Film Corporation, has arrived in France as a lieutenant in a Canadian Forestry Battalion, according to a statement by William Cranston, the new general manager of the company. This corporation controls the Canadian rights for the "Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance," both of which are still doing big business in the Dominion.

The very first time that the "Birth of a Nation" has been shown under canvas was at Trenton, Ontario, on August 2, 3 and 4, when it was presented in the airdrome there. This airdrome has a seating capacity for one thousand persons. Incidentally, there is only one theater building in Trenton and the Nation film had never been screened there before.

A second print of the "Birth of a Nation" has been doing one and two-night stands in the Canadian West, while the one Canadian print of "Intolerance" has been screened in various Western cities during the mid-summer fairs. It was shown at Regina during the week of July 23 and at Saskatoon during the week of July 30. It was the attraction at the Walker theater, Winnipeg, during the week of August 13. The next stop will be made at Sault Ste. Marie, after which it will come back to Toronto for the two weeks starting August 25.

According to Manager Cranston, both the "Nation" and "Intolerance" pictures are good for at least another year in Canada. Mr. Cranston says that "Intolerance" has been making from $300 to $400 a day at the annual fairs in the Canadian West.

A Power's traveling outfit has been added to the mechanical equipment of the Western "Birth of a Nation" company. This was found necessary, says Mr. Cranston, because in many cases the projection machines in local theaters were in such a condition that the print was becoming damaged.

Roma Theater at Kitchener Damaged by Fire.

Toronto.—Fires in moving picture theaters in Ontario are not very frequent. The Roma theater, Kitchener, Ont., was rather seriously damaged by flames, however, on the night of August 7. The loss is estimated by L. Longo, owner of the theater, at $5,000. The fire started from unknown causes. The business at this theater had been very good all summer and the blaze will cause considerable inconvenience.

Banquet Held to Honor Ben Cronk.

Toronto, Ont.—The film people of Calgary were apparently glad to see Ben Cronk, for four years manager of the Allen theater there, leave for Toronto to assume the management of the new Allen theater here. They were not happy to lose Cronk, but they rejoiced because he was going to a big job. They liked him so well that they held a farewell banquet in his honor, the attendance at this celebration consisting of eighty-three exhibitors, exchange men, Shriners and others. They presented Ben with a valuable gold watch and a club bag, and before they were through they had said all kinds of nice things about him. Mr. Cronk has arrived in Toronto to take charge of the brand new house which is scheduled to open early in September.

Many Pictures Show Glories of Ontario.

Toronto, Ont.—One of the many features provided by the Ontario Government for the Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto, August 25 to September 8, will be a demonstration of the new educational moving picture service. Director S. C. Johnston has had a number of cameramen out for some time taking pictures of Government experimental farms, prison farms and other institutions. Among various other views will be those showing fruit-growing, mining, forestry protection and road-making within the Province. Pictures showing the new farms in Northern Ontario of returned war veterans will also be exhibited. One whole wing of the Educational Building has been turned into a moving picture theater for this demonstration.

More Business Notes.

Toronto, Ont.—Super Features, Limited, Toronto, reports record business in Canada for "The Whip." This picture has had two long runs at the Grand, Toronto, the second of which extended through the month of July.

Charles Stevens, general manager of Super Features, Limited, has purchased the entire Canadian rights for the seven-reel feature, "On Trial."

Atlanta's Rialto Reopens With Fairbanks

Will Be Suitable House for Goldwyn, Artcraft, Paramount Offerings, and Promises Many a Treat to Atlantans During Coming Season.

By Alfred M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, GA.—The Rialto theater, which has been undergoing extensive repairs, opened Monday morning, August 13, under the joint direction of Jake Wells and John G Evins. The opening of this house inaugurates the plan of Mr. Welles and Mr. Evins to make Atlanta the home of the most superior motion picture theater from every standpoint.

All of the Goldwyn pictures are to be shown with all of the productions supervised or directed by D. W. Griffith, Cecil B. DeMille and Thomas H. Inc. The Rialto will be the home of the Paramount stars. Mr. Wells and Mrs. Evins have seen to it that the already beautiful theater has been completely renovated and a number of important changes made.

The initial attraction this week is Douglas Fairbanks in "Down to Earth."

Joe Marientette, of the Goldwyn Film Co., spent several days this week in Nashville, Tenn., among theaters.

The Strand theater last week played Marguerite Clark in "The Amazons" the entire week. This theater is now under the management of Jake Wells and John Evins, who announce the Strand will in future be a theater playing a feature all week. Crowds are being turned away, the house playing to capacity. This is something unusual for Atlanta theaters for quite a while.

Nashville Elite Opens as Feature House

Crescent Amusement Company Overhauls Big Theater and Changes Program Service from Short Reels to Features—Higher Admission Asked.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—The Elite theater reopened its doors to the public on Monday, August 13, after extensive repairs and a complete renovation. Prior to its closing the Elite was one of the most popular of the few remaining five-cent houses on Fifth avenue, Nashville's leading amusement center, but with the reopening there comes into existence a new high-class feature house.

Owing to a wreck, the train bearing the initial program from Atlanta did not reach the city until many hours behind schedule time, and the formal opening was postponed until nine o'clock in the evening, by which time a large crowd had gathered at the doors.

The Crescent Amusement company, which operates the Elite, played a trump card in offering Marguerite Clark for the initial dates in the late Paramount production, "The Amazons." Douglas Fairbanks in his newest Artcraft subject is booked for the second week; both of these films run the entire six days, which in itself is an item worthy of mention in this city. Every indication points to the complete success of the Elite as a permanent feature house, it having followed the course of the Crescent and Fifth Avenue theaters in changing from short lengths to features.

In addition to an unusually attractive decorative scheme on the walls and ceiling of both auditorium and corridor, an immense typhoon fan has been placed over the entrance, augmented by a battery of wall buzzers placed at intervals of twelve feet along both sides, and the customary rotary fans suspended from the ceiling. This makes the Elite without doubt one of the coolest houses in the state.

The semi-direct lighting system is employed, which gives just the proper amount of light for easy access in and out of the aisles, without impairing the vision of the projected picture. An attractive feature of the house, which was not formerly in effect, is the use of white washable seat covers, which adds much to the comfort of the patrons, especially in summer weather. The floor has been covered with a heavy battleship linoleum, and the partitions at the back of the aisles upholstered with a durable leatherette fabric. All doors have been handsomely regrained, and heating apparatus gilded.

The large player orchestra has been removed from near the entrance and a modern Melville Çlark Apollo player piano installed at the screen end, and is operated by hand during performances. This instrument was invented by a Nashville man and distributed by a local piano concern, the F. A. Leatherman company.

Wilder Theater Opens.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—The Wilder theater, located at the military camp at Chickamauga Park, was opened to the public on August 13. This theater has a seating capacity of 3,500, being largely for the purpose of furnishing the soldiers amusement. It is under the management of Will S. Albert of the Albert Amusement Company.

Majestic Rejoices at Open Booking.

Memphis, Tenn.—The Majestic Amusement Company, operating the Majestic theaters numbers one and two in this city, recently announced through the press that it was strongly in favor of the open booking plan, setting out its many advantages to the public, and stating that the most famous productions of the day would be brought to its houses at once. Among the larger features to come to the Majestic No. 2 in the near future are William Farnum in "A Tale of Two Cities," Alice Joyce in "Womanhood," etc., with an elaborate assortment of the most popular features, starring Theda Bara, Clara Kimball Young, Douglas Fairbanks, Wm. S. Hart, Valeska Suratt, Geo. M. Cohan, Mary Pickford, etc. The Majestic company is covering a wide field in Memphis, both from a standpoint of quality service and in the number of patrons it reaches through its four houses.

The Lincoln to Reopen.

Nashivlle, Tenn. — Nashville's negro population will be afforded another high-class amusement house in the Lincoln theater, which will be reopened on August 27 with moving pictures. This theater has been opened and closed a number of times during the past several years, its doors having been closed the last time since early spring. William Hartman, owner of the house, will run it as a moving picture house exclusively for negroes, and much of the equipment has been removed from the Excel theater, another negro house, and placed in the Lincoln. The Excel did business for a long time a few doors below the Lincoln on Cedar street, and one of the main reasons for closing the latter house was due to the fact that the other theaters in the same territory interfered with a profitable patronage. However, it is expected that with the Excel out of the way, the Lincoln will enjoy a sucucessful run.

Wolfden Boosting "Hidden Hand."

Nashville, Tenn.—Mr. Wolfden, from the Atlanta office of William Fox, was recently in the city in the interests of the Fox productions, and paid a visit to several local managers. Wolfden is strong for "The Hidden Hand," which is being strongly pushed in this territory. Manager Milton Starr of the Bijou acted as escort to Mr. Wolfden over the city, and both he and the World man found him to be an agreeable sort of fellow.

Knoxville Strand Thrives.

Knoxville, Tenn.—According to local picture men the Strand, which was recently reopened here, is enjoying the best business of its existence. The Strand was formerly owned by Geo. N. Shorey, being known as the Gay, but since being taken over by the Signal Amusement company of Chattanooga has prospered under the new name. An admission scale of five cents for children and ten cents for adults has been established.

Screens Helped J. L. Steurle Pile Up Votes.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The power of screen advertising was shown in the recent race for honors in the local Democratic primary, in which Joseph L. Steurle, manager of the Walnut theater, and connected with the Broadway Amusement Enterprises, of which he is an officer, ran for city auditor on the Democratic ticket. This year the ticket was split into two factions, the machine candidate being one, while the Brumleve crowd opposed the old political machine. Mr. Steurle ran without support of either faction, being a sort of independent Democrat. However, the machine candidate triumphed with only 158 votes more than received by Mr. Steurle, while the third man was well up in the race. Mr. Steurle at first thought he had been jobbed, and announced that he would contest the nomination, but later stated that he had found no indication of fraud, and was satisfied. He has shaken hands with the nominee and congratulated him on his election.

Mr. Steurle announced last week that he had resigned from the Walnut theater and the Broadway company, the resignation effective August 18, but has reconsidered this action and will continue with the companies as heretofore. This was Mr. Steurle's first political effort and was made possible largely through the co-operation of the local photoplay houses, who, with the exception of two theaters, ran slides for several weeks in boosting Mr. Steurle for the nomination. Running within one hundred and fifty-eight votes of the machine candidate testifies to the power of the screen, and also to the fact that Mr. Steurle had many friends, although he has never been before the public to any extent in the past.

Buckingham Theater Puts Off Opening.

Louisville, Ky.—For the first time within memory the Buckingham theater, the local burlesque house, will fail to open on the scheduled time, which had been advertised as Sunday, August 19. Manager Horace McCrocklin stated that, due to a controversy between the Columbia Amusement and the Empire Circuit companies, no shows would start out on the Columbia wheel until the troubles had been adjusted, and in the meantime the Buckingham will remain dark. This theater is the only one in Louisville playing burlesque, and has the exclusive franchise at the present time. Its contract with the Columbia company has seventeen years yet to run, but as all of the burlesque road attractions of size are controlled by the Columbia people, there is small chance of any other house figuring on starting burlesque before the Eastern tangle is settled.

No Sunday Show at Nicholasville.

Nicholasville, Ky.—A pretty little row has been stirred up locally by W. C. Jackson, owner of the Savoy theater, which he recently purchased from Nave & Sparks. Whereas the theater had not been operating on Sunday, Mr. Jackson stated that, starting August 12, the theater would open at 1 o'clock Sunday afternoon and run until 6 o'clock, with a two-hour lay out until 8 o'clock so as not to interfere with churchgoers. However, the ministers formed a committee and protested. Mr. Jackson stated that he had the same privilege of running a picture amusement house on Sundays as the operators of the bathing beach did in charging for Sunday afternoon amusement there. The preachers protested to M. H. Nane, operator of the beach, who agreed to close on Sundays, and residents of the city will not be compelled to do any Sunday bathing at home or in an unfrequented portion of the river. A petition is now being circulated by the church people and will shortly be placed before the city council, this petition asking that the theater be closed on Sunday.

Liberty Theater at Mt. Sterling Open.

Mt. Sterling, Ky.—N. A. Wilkerson, owner of the Liberty theater, formerly the Paramount, recently reopened the house, which has been closed for a year or more. The theater has been remodeled inside and out and under Mr. Wilkerson's capable management should do well, as he has had much experience in the district.

Hopkinsville's Princess Brightens Up.

Hopkinsville, Ky.—Manager Stockley has reopened the Princess theater, which has been renovated and generally done over. The lighting fixtures have been replaced with more attractive ones, bronze rails installed around the balcony, and much paint has been used.

FOREST CITY, ILL.—The Folly theater is putting out a monthly program in the form of a book mark. The Folly is running "Liberty" and conducting an essay writing contest for children.

LaSalle, Ill.—The Werner theater suffered a film fire.

North Chicago, Ill.—The library board has leased the Auditorium to Mr. Jeffries, who will use the building for a moving picture theater beginning September 1. If the venture is successful a year's lease will be taken.

Decatur's Avon Theater Changes Hands.

Decatur, Ill.—The Avon theater, opened last fall by Joseph Allman, has been leased to outside capital and Manager Carrier and the owner will take up activities in connection with the amusement business elsewhere. The house is closed at this writing and will be reopened after a general overhauling.

E. H. Gilley Heads Escanaba Mutual.

Escanaba, Mich.—Everett H. Gilley has been appointed manager of the Mutual Film exchange, with headquarters in this city. He will have charge of the business in the Upper Peninsula, succeeding Eugene Wilson, who has gone East.

Violet McMillan Home for a Rest.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Violet McMillan, after completing several features at Universay City, came to her home here for a rest. She will spend her time at her cottage, "Folger Arms," at Whitefish Lake. Late in September she and John Folger, her husband and manager, will go into vaudeville with an act "In and Out of the Movies."

Kalamazoo, Mich.—The Fuller theater as been reopened after undergoing reecorations. It started with feature picures and will play pictures except when heatrical attractions are booked. Fred tafford and George Spaeth will be mangers.

Taylorville, Ill.—Construction of an ad- tion which will increase the seating ca- acity of the Empress theater has begun. he changes also will provide room for he installation of a balcony should one needed.

Lincoln, Ill.—Seven nights at the Lin- ln Chautauqua will be devoted to mov- g pictures which have been selected by anager Burnstine of the Star theater. mong the pictures selected by him are: "he Boy Who Cried Wolf," "The Message the Mouse," "Lady of the Lake," "Han- l and Gretel."

Percentage Basis and the Average Exhibitor

World's Detroit Correspondent Asks Theater Managers for Their Opinions—Finds Half Are in Favor and Half Against Percentage Plan.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—The Moving Picture World correspondent has been endeavoring to get interviews with leading exhibitors and exchange managers as to whether they would prefer to play a big feature on straight rental or percentage basis. The result has been an even break for both policies. Many exchange men would prefer to get straight rental on pictures which they are somewhat afraid of, and which, to their surprise, often turn out to be big drawing cards; other exchange men prefer to book on percentage only, as it invariably gives them the best end. Then again, the picture stands out on its own merits. Now then, from the standpoint of the exhibitor, he oft would rather book straight rental and take a chance on a picture drawing big business; while others would rather gamble with the exchange man. Where a picture is played on percentage, both the exhibitor and exchange usually go 50-50 on the extra expense of advertising and publicity.

Broadway-Strand Items.

Detroit, Mich.—Harry I. Garson, managing director of the Broadway-Strand theater, Detroit, was home for a few days of last week, and during that time had frequent conferences with the Moving Picture World correspondent regarding future matters.

Mr. Garson announced that he was making comedies, and that if they turned out as good as the first—now being produced—they would be continued at the rate of two a month.

The Broadway-Strand theater will open with its Artcraft-Paramount policy on Sunday, August 26, with "The Amazons," featuring Marguerite Clark. The section attraction will be "The Varmint." The Broadway-Strand will take only the Fairbanks, Harts, Clarks, Fredericks and Jack Pickford pictures, as well as the Clara Kimball Youngs, for the first year.

Fox Manager Gives Private Views of New Film.

Detroit, Mich.—A trade showing of "The Honor System," "The Conqueror," "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "The Spy" is now being made through Michigan by Jos. Kaliski, Detroit manager for Standard pictures. A regular route has been laid out, and exhibitors in the vicinity of each town is invited to attend the screening. Mr. Kaliski says he has instructions from New York to adhere absolutely to the new policy "that the exhibitor must see Standard pictures before he can book them."

J. C. Fishman Gets Christie Comedies.

Detroit, Mich.—J. C. Fishman of the Standard Film Service, Detroit, announces another important acquisition for Michigan—the Christie comedies. Last issue we mentioned that the Standard had secured the Billy West comedies and the Art Dramas. This gives the Standard one of the best line-ups in Michigan, and for an independent exchange the Standard has made wonderful progress. Much credit is due Mr. Fishman and Harry Charnas, of Cleveland, who is general manager of the company. The Standard occupy offices in the Peter Smith building, but will soon move to the new film building.

Third Print of "The Slacker" Ordered.

Detroit, Mich.—Manager George Montgomery has been doing so well on "The Slacker," Metro's latest special production, that he has ordered a third print to take care of bookings in the upper peninsula.

Mr. Montgomery is getting ready for bookings on the new Charlie Chaplin pictures, as they are to be handled through the Metro exchange for Michigan, inasmuch as John H. Kunsky, member of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, controls the Michigin Metro exchange, as well as the new Chaplin pictures.

William F. Klatt Makes Shining Success.

Detroit, Mich.—Among the men who have made good in Michigan is William F. Klatt, who has leased the Regent theater to Charles H. Miles for vaudeville and pictures. Mr. Klatt was one of the pioneers in the picture industry in Michigan, starting in on Monroe avenue, Detroit. He began just about the same time as did Caille & Kunsky, so that he is conceded to be one of the first exhibitors in the world. His first house was the Bijou. Prices were 5 cents; shows lasted about twenty minutes. The Bijou was a tremendous success. Then Mr. Klatt branched out and secured other theaters, forming the Detroit Theaters, Inc. Recently he disposed of the Vendome and Jewell theaters, and about two weeks ago leased the Regent—his biggest house—to Charles H. Miles. He still has the Rosedale and the Gratiot theaters. He owns all theater property outright, including land and buildings; he also has considerable other valuable property.

H. D. Goldberg Transfered to Cleveland.

Detroit, Mich.—Harry D. Goldberg, who for the past six weeks has been acting as agent for Lewis J. Selznick, has been transferred to Clevland, Ohio.

Selznick Fails to Get Injunction.

Detroit, Mich.—The injunction suit of Lewis J. Selznick against the Harry I. Garson Productions, asking that the latter be restrained from doing business in Michigan, came up before the Detroit Circuit Court on Tuesday, August 14. The court refused to grant an injunction to Selznick as applied for.

Stockholders of New Miles-Regent Company.

The Miles-Regent Co. has been formed with a capital stock of $150,000 to conduct the Regent and Orpheum theaters, Detroit. The principal stockholders are Charles H. Miles, Tom Ealand and Fred T. Grennell. Of course, most of the stock is held by Miles.

If present plans materialize, Bryant Washburn may visit Detroit some time within the next ninety days. His pictures will be shown during the next 12 months at the Majestic theater, Detroit, and it may be that Manager M. W. McGee may be able to induce the Essanay people to let Washburn come over for a day or two and get better acquainted with the patrons of the Majestic. We will say this much for Bryant—he is becoming more popular every day right here in the Wolverine state. As exhibitors say, "he gets me the money."

"The Bar Sinister" has been booked by the Washington theater, Detroit, but no date has yet been set for the showing. "The Bar Sinister" is the first of the M. H. Hoffman Foursquare pictures to be shown in this state. George Weeks, division manager, says that first-runs through the territory have already been secured. He is gratified with business thus far, and looks for really big things during the coming fall and winter. D. Leo Dennison is in Cleveland for him, and Hal Smith in Cincinnati. Besides George has his old-time pep, and that means getting business when he goes after it.

Fire Prevention Bureau for Indianopolis

Commissioner of Public Buildings Plans for Inspection and Control of Film Industries—Got Ideas From Chicago and Cincinnati.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—Jacob H. Hilkene, commissioner of public buildings, announced this week that he will recommend the establishing of a fire prevention bureau as a part of the city government to assist his department in enforcing building ordinances for fire prevention, especially in relation to the motion picture industry.

The announcement was made by the building commissioner following his return from Chicago and Cincinnati, where he, with E. M. Sellers, manager of the Indiana Inspection Bureau, and H. H. Friedley, state fire marshal, went, at the expense of owners of motion picture exchanges and theaters in Indianapolis, to study methods for controlling the motion picture business in those cities.

Mr. Hilkene says Chicago has worked out a remarkable system for the control of the motion picture industry. The success of the law depends, however, on the efficiency of the fire prevention bureau and the system of inspection that has been established. Mr. Hilkene says the inspectors in this department are under civil service, and that the appointments are divided equally between the two leading political parties.

Mr. Hilkene says he will suggest that Indianapolis be divided into districts so that it would be possible to have a captain of the fire department in each district to serve on the fire prevention bureau. These captains, he says, could extend the inspection of property to all parts of the city and the inspection therefore could be made more thorough. He says he does not believe such a system would prove a big expense to the city.

The building commissioner announced that he also expects to make a few additional changes in the proposed ordinance governing the storage, handling and manufacture of motion picture films, which is now pending before the council. Although he said nothing definite on the subject, he intimated that he probably will support the insurance men in their demands that the motion picture exchanges be equipped with automatic sprinklers. The owners of the exchanges contend that if such a provision is inserted in the ordinance they will be forced to pay out money unnecessarily for fire protection. It is on this question that the exchange owners and the insurance experts have failed to reach an agreement.

Elkhart Exhibitors to Work with Censors.

Elkhart, Ind.—Managers of three of the four motion picture theaters now operating in Elkhart last week responded to an invitation to confer with the city administration's board of moving picture censors, and, at a meeting in the mayor's office, unhesitatingly agreed to co-operate with the board in preventing objectionable exhibitions in the future.

The theaters represented at the meeting were the Bucklen, the Family and the Hippodrome. The board of censors consists of Mayor Smith, Police Commissioners Brown, Earl and Machan, Chief of Police Riblet and Police Matron Fay.

An informal discussion was held regarding certain kinds of shows that had been offered in Elkhart recently and the censors announced the standard below which they think public exhibitions should not fall.

The managers of the three theaters agreed to hereafter refrain from showing so-called "white slave" films, or those revealing the nude human form, or, in short, most any production which seems to be in violation of the rule against ""children under sixteen," etc. They also agreed to abstain from the use of objectionable advertising, after one of the censors had pointed out that in his opinion some of the announcements thrown on the screen were immeasurably worse than the films themselves.

Manager Young Will Beautify Orpheum.

Gary, Ind.—V. V. Young, manager of the Orpheum theater and several others, has secured a permit for making extensive alterations in his theater at the corner of Eighth avenue and Washington street, the improvements alone to cost about $2,000. Manager Young will also expend about $10,000 in new equipment and scenery for the theater. He expects to reopen the house some time in the latter part of August or first of September.

Gumbiner Brothers Buy Orpheum at Hammond.

Hammond, Ind.—Gumbiner Brothers, who own a chain of motion picture theaters in Chicago, have added another one to their list by purchasing the Orpheum theater here. The theater, which was constructed in 1911 at a cost of $100,000, has a seating capacity of 1,200 and is equipped for vaudeville as well as motion pictures. The new owners announce that they intend to make material improvements in the place.

C. A. Wagner Will Open Show at Elwood.

Upland, Ind.—C. A. Wagner, who has operated a motion picture theater here for the last fourteen months, has leased the show to George Day, of Muncie, and will move to Elwood, where he intends to open a moving picture house.

More Indiana Holdings for Chicago Firm

Bankers and Merchants Theater Company Takes Over Isis at Kokomo—Spending $75,000 on the Variety at Terre Haute.

KOKOMO, IND.—Through a deal consummated last week the Isis theater, in South Main street, one of the most popular motion picture houses in Kokomo, was added to the chain of theaters owned and operated by the Bankers' and Merchants' Theater Company of Chicago. R. K. Mosiman, manager for the Alhambra Amusement Company, who engineered the deal, will remain in charge of the Isis for the new company. The terms of the deal have not been made public.

The chief reason for making the Isis a member of the Bankers' and Merchants' Theater Company chain, according to Mr. Mosiman, is to try to bring better shows for the local patrons. He says that with the power of the Chicago syndicate behind him he will be able to bring many exclusive film features to Kokomo that could not otherwise be obtained.

With the change in ownership, Mr. Mosiman also announced plans for extensive improvements in the building which it now occupies. A contract has already been let for the extension of the room, which it now occupies, clear back to the alley between Main and Buckeye streets. This will double the capacity of the theater, making it possible to seat more than 1,000 persons. Work on the improvements will be started in about two weeks, according to Mr. Mosiman.

The Bankers' and Merchants' company is at present the owner of the Orpheum theater in Fort Wayne, and the old Variety Opera House in Terre Haute. The Variety is at present being torn down and a modern $75,000 theater is to be erected on the site by the Chicago company. The company is also trying to arrange deals for several other theaters in towns near Kokomo, according to Mr. Mosiman.

Meetings of Two Exhibitors' Organizations

Associated Theaters Holds First Meeting for the Election of Officers at West Hotel—Northwest League's Regular Meeting Also on August 14.

By John L. Johnston, 704 Film Exchange Bldg., Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Two bands of exhibitors, each with really beneficial business to transact, were scheduled to meet here Tuesday, August 14.

The Associated Theaters body organized by Thomas J. Hamlin, former editor of "Amusements," was scheduled to hold its first meeting at the West hotel and incorporate for $100,000, elect officers and take the first step towards organizing. Representatives from six states were expected to attend the gathering.

The Northwest branch of the National league was scheduled to hold its regular weekly meeting, with some real action promised. The members of this body were expected to decide whether or not they would continue to use three and six sheets to advertise future productions. The action of those present on August 14 will mean united activity of the entire organization, and the elimination of three and six sheets will save exhibitors a mint of money in the future if the meeting decides to give the large paper "the air." One Minneapolis exhibitor operating two small theaters informed the writer he would save over a hundred dollars a month by adopting the use of one sheets exclusively, by tabooing threes and sixes.

Harry Cohen Still "Under Water."

Minneapolis, Minn.—Harry Cohen has arrived in Minneapolis again after two days spent in New York headquarters to select a new manager for the local Metro exchange. Harry has been in Minneapolis about once a week, every week since January 1, and many thought he would be able to pick a new "boss" right off the jump. However, applications for the position have been so numerous and there have been so many attempts at politics that Mr. Cohen is still "under water." Walter Strauss has been manager pro tem, succeeding William K. Howard, who left Saturday, August 11, for Jefferson Barracks, Mo , to enter Uncle Sam's regular army. Cohen is contemplating a race with Harry Sherman to see who eats up the most carfare between Minneapolis and New York.

Will Lee Horn Be Manager or Soldier?

Minneapolis, Minn.—"Am I, or am I not?" This interrogation is constantly issuing forth from the lips of Lee A. Horn. Mr. Horn is neither delirious or on the verge of insanity, but he has been appointed manager of the new Longacre exchange here, and due to the draft does not know whether he will be able to hold down the job or not. Lee has received a letter from Uncle Sam inviting him to a medical examination next week. Watch next week's edition for solution to this puzzle.

T. L. Hays Opens the New Garrick.

St. Paul, Minn.—Ruben & Finkelstein's tenth Twin City theater opened to the public here Sunday, August 12, when the New Garrick, formerly called the Strand, began a four day run of "The Little American," featuring Mary Pickford. Messrs. Ruben & Finkelstein sprung a big surprise when they announced the manager for the new house. The executive is none other than Theodore L. Hays, perhaps the best known showman in the entire northwest. Mr. Hays has been actively engaged in all branches of theatrical presentation for over twenty years, and was formerly owner of the Grand opera house and interested in the Bijou and Gayety theaters of Minneapolis.

Harry Hollander Becomes Fox Roadman.

Manager Eddie Westcott, of the Fox exchange, has secured the services of Harry Hollander as roadman for the exchange. Mr. Hollander was formerly with the local exchange, but went to New York two months ago to do work on "The Honor System's" eastern campaign. Stuart Acheson, of the publicity department of the Fox headquarters in New York, spent three days here last week planning a local publicity campaign on future Fox features.

M. MacIntyre Now With Rialto Supply.

Manager S. A. Louis, of the Rialto Theater Supply Co., has secured M. MacIntyre, former Fox road salesman, to cover the Northwest territory for his firm.

From the Twin City Exchanges.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Friedman Film Corp. has purchased the rights to display "The Bar Sinister" in Minnesota, the Dakotas and Montana, according to an announcement by President Benjamin Friedman. The film will be shown to Northwest exhibitors in a few weeks at some downtown Minneapolis theater.

Manager Harry Graham, of the K-E-S-E exchange, has announced that bookings on "Do Children Count?" Essanay serial, featuring Little Mary McAllister, have not only exceeded expectations, but have eclipsed any record previously made by a serial from his office.

A. A. Hixon has resigned from the sales force of the Elliott & Sherman exchange, and is spending a short vacation before taking up new work, the manner of which Hix is not announcing.

Frank A. McInerny, former publicity manager for the Eliott & Sherman exchange here, and who went East three weeks ago to become publicity manager for Harry A. Sherman's enterprises, has returned. Mr. McInerney states that he enjoyed the trip, but failed to find Mr. Sherman. If records are correct, Mr. Sherman was half way between Minneapolis and New York when Mac started back home.

Manager H. J. Bayley, of the Greater Vitagraph exchange, has supplied each roadman with a chapter print of "The Fighting Trail" serial.

Edward J. Frye, manager of the XL Films exchange, of Great Falls, Mont., has returned West after securing the right to display several Lochren features in Montana. Mr. Frye also controls the Montana rights to "The Battle of Gettysburg," which he has been playing and dividing proceeds with the Red Cross.

Big Week for Picture Lovers.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Minneapolis moving picture followers had a "big" week beginning August 12.

"The Amazons," featuring Marguerite Clark, began a four-day run at the New Garrick at 20 cents admission.

Billie Burke in "The Mysterious Miss Terry" re-opened the Lyric.

Alice Brady in "Darkest Russia" was the attraction at the New Aster.

The Strand offered Florence Reed in "The Eternal Sin."

The New Unique presented Louise Glaum in "Golden Rule Kate."

Special musical numbers, including jazz music and pipe organ solos, was offered at each playhouse Sunday.

August 12 saw all downtown theaters enjoying an overflow business.

The New Lyric, which reopened August 12 after being closed a week, has been redecorated both inside and outside, and now presents an appearance more suitable to the high class of pictures presented at the theater.

Kansas City Exhibitors Face Car Strike

Downtown Theaters Lose Many Patrons When Street Car Men Go Out on Strike—Suburban Theaters Get the Benefit of Hindered Traffic.

Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Building, Kansas City.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Trainmen on the Kansas City Railways, the company serving the city with street cars, struck Wednesday, August 8, and in the succeeding days when no city street cars were running the business of moving picture theaters was variously affected. Downtown theaters lost fully 25 per cent. of their business; there were far fewer transients than usual, and those downtown wanted to watch the excitement rather than attend a picture show. In the suburbs the reverse was the effect. People could not get downtown in street cars, and they visited their neighborhood shows.

Interurban street cars were running, but these did not pick up city passengers. The entire traffic was cared for by automobiles. Several thousand motor cars were put into jitney service—and this was another but minor factor in the effect on the theaters: the owners did not have time to drive over to their favorite theaters.

Universal Forms New Butterfly Company.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Butterfly pictures, that in the past have been handled by the Universal Film & Supply Co. will now be handled by a company to be known as the Butterfly Super-Photoplay Company The new company will be managed by D. O. Reese. The offices of the company will be at 214 East Twelfth street, which is the home of the Universal company. It has been decided to buy two prints of each picture, beginning August 27.

J. E. Dodson Will Assist Manager Reese.

Kansas City, Mo.—J. Erwin Dodson, formerly manager of the Standard Film Corporation at St. Louis, Mo., has been made assistant to manager D. O R. Reese, of the Universal Film & Supply Company here. He takes his new position August 13.

L. J. Doty Will Travel With Supplies.

Kansas City, Mo.—Leo J. Doty is again a member of the Universal company and will take a territory in Missouri and Kansas as a representative of the supply department.

John H. Morgan Goes to Southwestern Kansas.

Kansas City, Mo.—John H. Morgan, formerly of the supply department of the Universal Film & Supply Company, has been transferred from that department to a territory in southern Kansas.

George Leonard Heads Kansas City Triangle.

Kansas City, Mo.—George Leonard has been made branch manager of the Kansas City Triangle office. He will be directly responsible to the home office in New York City for the Kansas City territory, as he has charge of the road men and everything connected with the Kansas City branch. He succeeds C. D. Struble. Mr. Leonard comes here from Jacksonville, Fla. Assisting him is another new man, E. E. Reynolds, who is office manager. Mr. Reynolds was with the General Film Company at Chicago, Ill., for about six years and has had considerable other film experience.

Triangle Roadmen Attend Banquet.

Kansas City, Mo.—The road men of the Kansas City Triangle office were recently called to Kansas City to attend a banquet that was held at the Baltimore hotel. Those attending were E. D. Lappey, E. W. Green, A. Kahn, H. M. Weinberg, Mr. Heins, the sales manager from New York City, and the heads of the different departments, making a total attendance of fourteen men.

Kansas City Triangle Now in Moriarty Building.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Kansas City office of the Triangle Film Corporation has been moved from Nineteenth and Main streets to Twentieth and Grand avenue, in the Moriarty building. The company occupies the entire second floor, giving the office double the space of the former location.

Standard Film Announces Three New Men.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Standard Film Corporation announces the addition of the following new men who will work out of St. Louis, Mo.; Joseph Bloon, Thomas Leonhard and W. H. Hoppe.

W. C. Ansel Transferred to St. Louis Office.

Kansas City, Mo.—W. C. Ansel, southern Missouri representative for the Standard, has been transferred from that territory to the St. Louis, Mo., office.

J. H. Roth to Manage a Freuler Theater.

Oklahoma City, Okla.—J. H. Roth, formerly representative of Paramount and Art Craft in Oklahoma City, Okla., has resigned his position with the company to accept a position as manager of one of the Freuler theaters in Milwaukee, Wis.

A. W. Friemel Joins Kansas City Feature Film.

Kansas City, Mo.—A. W. Friemel, formerly with the General Film, has been added to the sales force of the Kansas City Feature Film Company. He is now working in the Kansas City office, as his territory has not yet been assigned.

W. S. Merrill Now With Triangle.

Kansas City, Mo.—W. S. Merrill, Southern Kansas representative of the General Film, has severed his connections with that company and is now with the Triangle Film.

A. W. Friemel Goes to Paramount.

Kansas City, Mo.—A. W. Friemel, Oklahoma traveler for the General Film, has resigned his position with that company. He is now with the Paramount company at Des Moines, Ia.

C. W. Hardin Goes to Atlanta.

Kansas City, Mo.—Charles W. Hardin, formerly manager of the Metro here, has gone to Atlanta, Ga., to assist in the taking of contracts for additional film for the E. and H. Film Distributing Company, of which he is part owner. He is the second Kansas City man to be associated in that office, the other being Paul Engler, who has been employed by the old International Film Company, the Greater Vitagraph and the Mutual.

Goldwyn Films at Private Showing.

Kansas City, Mo.—The projection machine of the local Goldwyn office having arrived this company held a series of private showings at the office, three being given on August 8, three on August 9, two on August 10, and one on August 11. The local exhibitors were invited to the showing, which was given on "Baby Mine," starring Madge Kennedy. A few out-of-town exhibitors were also present.

W. H. Rosenbloom in Kansas for Mid-West.

Kansas City, Mo.—W. H. Rosenbloom is now working the Kansas territory of the Mid-West Photoplay Corporation, having been transferred to that territory from the Nebraska territory.

Eldorado, Kan.—The Opera House here will be remodeled into a first-class modern brick theater.

Ogden, Kan.—Steve Clark is erecting a fine new theater building here.

Burton, Kan.—Edgar G. Rollings will soon open a moving picture theater here in a new building having a seating capacity of 275.

Hutchinson, Kan.—The Pearl theater, at No. 7 North Main street, was badly damaged by fire August 3. The loss amounted to $3,500, of which $200 was on the building, the remaining being on the equipment and furniture.

Pleasanton, Kan.—W. E. Stepp is the new owner of the Regent theater here.

Garden City, Kan.—A new theater and office building will soon be erected here on Main street, for which the plans are now being drawn.

Theater Jottings from Missouri.

Slater, Mo.—Mr. and Mrs. William Jenkins of the Auditorium theater here gave a Red Cross benefit August 7, which netted the Relief Workers $135.70. The first part of the program consisted of an excellent Vitagraph feature, "Aladdin from Broadway." The second part was made up of Slater's best talent.

St. Louis, Mo.—The New Orpheum theater at Ninth and St. Charles street, will be opened Labor Day, September 3, with E. J. Sullivan as manager.

St. Joseph, Mo.—The Crystal theater will open August 19, having been closed for redecorating.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Empress theater here has been completely redecorated and will reopen August 13.

New Theaters and Changes in Oklahoma.

Delaware, Okla.—Ralph Sullivan has bought the interest of Louis Warwick in the Nusho theater. The new firm will be known as Green & Sullivan.

Foss, Okla.—The Empress theater here has been leased by Miss Alma Gilham and Miss Modelle Childress, who will continue the shows at this theater.

Miami, Okla.—The Picher theater here has been leased by W. J. Cotter.

Bartlesville, Okla.—The Odeon theater has been purchased by Messrs. C. E. Oliver, Carl Drath and T. C. Steeper, who have already taken charge of their new holdings.

Ada, Okla.—J. F. Painter of Franks, Okla., has bought the De Sota theater here from Charles Chauncey.

Clinton, Okla.—Charles Duffield is contemplating the opening of a large moving picture theater here.

Healdton, Okla.—The Healdton Amusement Company has been chartered here with a capital stock of $2,000 by G. W. Jennings, J. H. Smith and Fred C. Ryburn of this town.

Denver, Colo.—The Plaza theater was damaged by fire to the extent of $500 recently.

Santa Fe, N. M.—The Paris theater has been remodeled by the manager, who has made it thoroughly modern and up-to-date.

San Francisco Briefs.

Charles Rosenthal, of the M. & R. Feature Film exchange, recently made a visit to the new Los Angeles branch. Its latest release, the Ivan production, "Babbling Tongues," is being shown at the Rialto theater.

Chester Roeder, formerly with the Mutual exchange, is now filling a position with the Progressive Film exchange.

The Progress theater on Fillmore street recently broke all former records for attendance with "The Flame of the Yukon."

H. A. Oastler, of the American theater and Nixon opera house, Winnemucca, Nev., was a recent visitor there, having motored down for a two weeks' stay.

Lotz Out of Pathe Exchange.

San Francisco, Cal.—H. E. Lotz, for the past year manager of the local branch of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., has given up this position and left recently for New York to form new connections. Special Representative Charles A. Meade is in charge pending the selection of a new manager, and will probably remain here for several weeks. Before leaving Mr. Lotz was presented with a gold watch by employees of the local office.

Turner & Dahken Circuit Notes.

San Francisco, Cal.—"On Trial," the initial purchase of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, was recently presented at the Tivoli opera house with great success, and will now be shown over the entire T. & D. circuit, after which it will be released to other houses that have booked it from Turner & Dahnken. It was not intended to show this production so early, but unforseen conditions arose in connection with the screening of the "Curse of Iku" and "On Trial," and it was hastily substituted in its stead.

Fred Dahnken, Jr., president of the circuit, will go east shortly to attend a meeting of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and E. B. Johnson will also be off to attend to business connected with that organization about the 24th of August.

The new office building of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit on Golden Gate avenue will be ready for occupancy within sixty days.

J. T. Turner, vice-president and general manager of the circuit, has returned from a three weeks vacation at Shasta Springs.

Universal Jottings.

San Francisco, Cal.—Dave Bershon, manager of the California Film exchange at Los Angeles, and formerly of this city, was a recent visitor here.

Leon Haas, of the local staff, is enjoying a vacation in the southern part of the state, and while away will explore the mysteries of Universal City.

Ed. Fowler, also of the local force, has returned from a vacation spent on the Russian River.

The patriotic spirit of the day has struck the fair employees of the California Film exchange, and during spare moments all are busy on needle work. Miss Stella Uri has joined a sewing club, while the others are merrily clicking their needles in knitting socks for soldiers.

Here and There Among the Theaters.

Oakland, Cal.—The Beach & Krahn Amusement Co. has awarded contracts for the construction of a moving picture theater on College avenue, near Shafter. This will be the third house in its circuit.

Redwood City, Cal.—A fire occurred recently in the Alhambra theater, which is being remodeled. Repairs will be made and the house reopened at the earliest possible date.

Reno, Nev.—The Majestic theater has been refurnished and opened as a vaudeville and moving picture house by the Nixon estate, K-E-S-E features being shown four times a week.

Hollister, Cal.—Stark & Hodges have purchased the Opal theater. They were formerly of Manteca and Lodi.

Association Gets Down to Constructive Work

United Motion Picture Industry of Northern California Holds Meeting—Industrial Insurance and Billboard Advertising are Discussed.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The monthly meeting of the board of directors of the United Motion Picture Industry of Northern California, composed of film exchange men and exhibitors, was held at the Techau tavern on August 8, with a full attendance. Now that all matters connected with organization work are at an end and the campaign for membership has proved eminently successful, this new body of film men is settling down for the constructive work for which it was formed.

At the recent meeting it was pointed out that moving picture houses and film exchanges were being called upon to pay a much higher rate of industrial insurance for their employees than is the case in many other lines and it was decided to investigate this and make an attempt to secure a rate to conform more closely to the actual risk. The organization also hopes to correct some of the faults in the present system of billboard advertising so extensively used here. Much "dead" paper is being left on the local billboards, to the detriment of theater advertising, and it is desired to induce bill posters to remove the notices of special events as quickly as possible in order to make this form of advertising more effective. The strike of photo-engravers also came in for attention at this meeting, exhibitors doing newspaper advertising being seriously affected. At the present time many exhibitors are compelled to have cuts made outside the newspaper offices, a source of considerable expense, and the proposition of curtailing advertising of this kind during the strike was discussed

Imperial to Advance Prices.

San Francisco, Cal.—Owing to the increased cost of film service, advertising and labor, the management of the Imperial theater has had to advance the price of admission to 10, 15 and 25 cents for matinees, and 15, 25 and 35 cents for evenings. This house was one of the pioneers in the 10-cent field and was also one of the first to inaugurate 10 and 20-cent prices. In discusing the advance, Manager J. L. Partington said: "Costs have been steadily mounting skyward and have reached such a point that a higher admission price is absolutely necessary. The public has become accustomed to paying more for everything else and will doubtless see the justice of the small increase asked for high-grade amusement." The Imperial has recently been redecorated, the exterior and lobby made resplendent by a new coat of paint, new lights installed and new furnishings added to the ladies' rest room.

Nat A. Magner Out of the Hospital.

San Francisco, Cal.—Nat A. Magner, of the film exchange bearing his name, has recovered sufficiently from the operation he recently underwent in a local hospital to be out and is again able to come down to his office. His rapid recovery is now expected.

Fine Organ for T. & D. Theater.

Berkeley, Cal.—A large Wurlitzer Hope-Jones unit orchestral organ has been installed in the T. & D. theater, conducted under the management of E. J. Merlin, at a cost of about $30,000, and this is now proving a great drawing card for this house. The task of removing the old instrument and installing the new one was accomplished with a minimum of inconvenience and a piano was used during the time there was no organ in operation The new instrument was formally presented to the people of Berkeley at a free recital held on Saturday morning, with the well-known organist, Albert Hay Malotte, at the console. In addition to installing a new organ in this theater the owners are expending $10,000 in putting in a tea room and children's play room on the mezzanine floor and in renovating the house. On the first of September prices will be advanced to 15 cents for adults and 10 cents for children. This theater is one of the most important in the chain of houses conducted by the Turner & Dahnken circuit and is being kept up to the minute in its appointments and in the class of service rendered.

K-E-S-E District Manager Visits Coast.

San Francisco, Cal.—E. R. Pearson, district manager for the K-E-S-E., arrived in this city recently for a short stay and after inspecting the local exchange and putting in a profit sharing system, left to visit the Los Angeles branch. Before returning east he will return to this city to make another short stay. This is Mr. Pearson's first visit to this territory and he has enjoyed the trip immensely.

Infringement on "The Slacker" Claimed.

San Francisco, Cal.—When the Turner & Dahnken circuit recently featured the Metro production, "The Slacker," and inaugurated a great advertising campaign, the management of the Strand secured the K-E-S-E feature, "The Man Who Was Afraid" and billed this as A Slacker, "The Man Who Was Afraid." The Metro Pictures Corporation at once applied for an injunction against the New York & San Francisco Amusement Co., the Strand Theater company, D. J. Grauman and Sidney Grauman to prevent them from making use of the term "Slacker" in connection with a photoplay and was granted a temporary restraining order. It is alleged that the order was violated and the matter will be aired at an early date in the U. S. Federal District Court presided over by Judge Van Fleet.

Fine New House for Oakland.

Oakland, Cal.—The American theater, San Pablo avenue and Seventeenth street, was opened on August 4 by C. W. & Rex Midgley under very auspicious circumstances. This theater was formerly known as the Reliance, but had been closed for months and the new owners have remodeled and redecorated it, making virtually a new house of it. The exterior lighting has made this spot one of the brighest places in the downdown district. The large marquee is brilliantly illuminated, while a forty foot sign, with an animated border and bearing the name "American," surmounts the house. An animated electric American flag, 5 by 15 feet in size also serves to attract attention, while a large illuminated sign two blocks away on another main thoroughfare directs attention to the location of the house. The theater, which has a seating capacity of 1,600, was packed at both performances on the opening night, the leading attraction being a Metro production, "The Haunted Pajamas." Many San Francisco exhibitors and film exchange men were present at the opening and the floral tributes were unusually plentiful. Music is furnished by an orchestra of twelve pieces, under the direction of John Warry Lewis, and the American quartette was an added feature on the opening night. The prices are 15 cents for the lower floor and 10 cents for the balcony, a pay-as-you-enter system being used, instead of a box office.

Says There is Money in Second Run Pictures

Seattle Exhibitor in Shopping District Raises Price and Changes from First Run Policy for Second Run Pictures—Makes a Success of It.

By J. S. Anderson, East Seattle, Washington.

SEATTLE, WASH.—Neither the war nor summer weather nor anything, except the car strike, have cut into the profits this summer of John Hamrick, manager of the Rex. Mr. Hamrick's theater is a house of about 600 capacity, situated on Second avenue in the very center of Seattle's shopping district. Until this year the Rex had always been operated as a first run house. In the early spring Mr. Hamrick decided to put on second run pictures. It was just a few months after the admission price had been raised from 10 to 15 cents, but the manager did not lower the price in spite of the fact that the finest run houses in the city charge no more for general admission than 15 cents.

The programs at the Rex are composed only of those features which have played to extraordinary business during their first run in the city. The usual plan is to change twice a week, but when a picture warrants it, it is kept on a full week. For special reasons first run pictures are sometimes shown; as, for instance, after "Hell Morgan's Girl" had played a very successful second run at the Rex, a week or two later it was followed by "The Girl in the Checkered Coat," and the fact that the same cast appeared in this picture that had made such a hit in "Hell Morgan's Girl" was made the keynote of the advertising. Excellent business was the result. Mr. Hamrick has no trouble in getting the same admission price for his second run pictures that the first run houses charge, and the first week of the car strike is the only time this summer when his business has not been satisfactory. After that first week people found out that jitneys were just about as good as cars to ride in, and that the Rex was still showing good pictures, so the second week Mr. Hamrick's business came back to normal and has continued that way.

Seattle Paramount-Artcraft Notes.

Seattle, Wash. — Paramount - Artcraft's selective star series opened simultaneously in Seattle, Portland, and Spokane on August 12, with Margarite Clark in "The Amazons." It was shown at the Coliseum in Seattle.

Clarence Hill arrived from the San Francisco headquarters this week to discuss with H. G. Rosebaum, manager of the Seattle Paramount-Artcraft office, the question of opening a branch in Portland. The territory will be as nearly as possible equally divided. Portland is to have the southern Washington territory below Chehalis.

Guy Navarre, road representative, has just returned from a trip through the Oregon territory, having signed every town he visited.

Miss E. Erickson, formerly head stenographer at the Salt Lake City Triangle office, is now stenographer in the contract department of the Seattle Paramount-Artcraft office.

At the Seattle Triangle Exchange.

Seattle, Wash.—H. H. Hurn, manager of the Seattle Triangle office, reports that the "Flame of the Yukon" broke all Saturday and Sunday records at the Strand theater, Walla Walla, and that similar satisfactory reports regarding this feature are coming in from all over the territory.

Mr. Hurn called a meeting of his three salesmen, W. W. Armstrong, Ed. I. Hudson, L. T. Turner, last week to discuss the handling of the new Hart and Fairbanks reissues in which exhibitors have already shown much interest.

T. Thurston, cashier at the Triangle office, has gone on a short vacation to Mt. Rainier.

Other Notes From the Film Row.

Seattle, Wash.—Fred C. Quimby, Northwest supervisor for Pathe, left this week for Butte.

L. J. Schlaifer went to Eastern Montana this week. His partner, Melvin G. Winstock, was in Portland last week looking after the business of their features.

B. L. Daniels, of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, wired to the Seattle G. A. Metcalfe store for two Power's 6B machines this week.

Spokane News Letter

By S. Clark Patchin.

Brief Notes of Local Film Circles.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Ruth Corwin, who recently appeared in "Soul Mates" at the Liberty, is a former Spokane girl. Students of the North Central High school, where she attended, made up a party and attended the theater in a body when the fact was learned.

Mary Pickford played to standing room at the Liberty in "The Little American."

Among pictures which drew well in Spokane the week of August 6 were Norma Talmadge in "The Law of Compensation" at the Clemmer; Bryant Washburn in "The Golden Idiot" at the Casino; Mary Pickford in "The Pride Of The Clan," at the Lyric, and Louise Lovely in "The Gift Girl," at the Rex.

Coeur d'Alene Strand Burns.

Coeur d'Alene, Ida.—Fire of mysterious origin did damage to the extent of $30,000 in the building occupied by the Strand theater at 2 a. m., August 9. This building is now being remodeled by a syndicate of which M. B. Daniels is manager and the syndicate took over this and the Lyric of Coeur d'Alene recently.

The blaze started in the rear of the theater when no one was about and the stage and screen and orchestra equipment and many of the seats were burned. The building is owned by John B. Taylor and the furnishings by O. R. Shern. Mr. Daniels says the building will be rebuilt and pictures will be shown as soon as possible.

Ralph Ruffner's Interesting Career.

Spokane, Wash.—From messenger boy for the Western Union to a railroad telegraph operator, then entering the moving picture business on a piano stool, later to be manager of one of the most up-to-date moving picture houses in the northwest are a few of the experiences of Manager Ralph Ruffner, of the Liberty theater, Spokane, Wash., who now has a machine installed in his three-room office suite on the third floor of the building, and a screen covered by dark curtains to be used for showing him special run or open market pictures.

Additional to the above, Mr. Ruffner has been office boy in a railroad master mechanic's office, operator of a steam hammer in a railroad blacksmithy, office stenographer, city ticket agent, baseball player, a moving picture pianist and organist, and now, when he chooses, he handles the mammoth Wurlitzer, Hope-Jones organ of the Liberty with ease. He can handle any angle of the moving picture business from janitor to operator, decorater, general director, publicity and advertising man, and manager, and put in odd times amusing the patrons by furnishing music for them during the pictures. He is a live-wire at advertising, and is always working up something new to attract the attention of the thousands who pass and enter the theater daily and weekly. He is a good publicity man, and gets by with much free publicity in newspapers here by various ingenious means.

Right now Mr. Ruffner is concentrating his efforts in and using his past experiences in his capacity as manager of the Liberty.

Should the regular operator be unable to work and no substitute be immediately available, Mr. Ruffner peels off his coat and goes to work. Aside from putting in about 16 hours a day at the theater or in connection with it, Mr. Ruffner keeps his muscles limbered up by playing with a 100-pound dumb bell which he keeps in his office, and can easily put it up several times with one hand then hold out at arms length with both hands.

In 1907 he was inveigled into the picture show business. A railroad friend induced him to play the piano at his Comet theater in Vancouver, Wash., across the river from Portland, and he later became manager of this theater. He hit on the idea of extending credit to the soldiers of the fort there, who were paid monthly, and each was allowed a credit up to $3 worth of seats a month. On pay day they squared their accounts—"sometimes"—according to Mr. Ruffner. He said the experiment cost him about $20,000, which he carries as souvenir paper and would sell cheap. He managed a small theater at Ranier, Ore., in 1914, then went to Butte, where he made a signal success of the American theater, and came to Spokane in the spring of 1915 to manage the Liberty, where fortune has continued to smile upon him.

PRAIRIE STATE ITEMS.

By F. H. Madison.

Dakota Theater Notes.

Bismarck, N. D.—The Publicity Film company of this city has made for the State Fire Marshal a film which shows modern fire-fighting methods. This will be used by the marshal's office in educational work.

Morristown, S. D.—John Ritter has purchased the interest of C. O. Dunning in the moving picture show.

Among Nebraska Film Men.

Kearney, Neb.—Local exhibitors have ventured Sunday shows. There is a liberal patronage and it is likely that seventh day shows will become firmly established.

Omaha, Neb.—A daughter, Mona Virginia, has been born to Mr. and Mrs. George H. McCool. The father is booker at the local exchange of the Universal.

Havelock, Neb.—The Joy theater has been sold to R. W. Wolverton.

Omaha, Neb.—The Empress theater has added a ladies' rest room, fitted with Jacobean furniture, writing desk, lounge and chairs.

Longacre Gets Portland Connection.

Portland, Ore.—The Longacre Film corporation, releasing Alice Howell comedies under the brand of Century Comedies, has obtained a Portland connection and will open offices with Bluebird at the exchange of the Film Supply company of Oregon. Gus Metzger, manager, reports that his company will also take care of the distributing company's affairs in Seattle and Spokane.

Eastern Triangle Manager Visits.

Portland, Ore.—Gerald Payne, reputed to be the youngest exchange manager in the District of Columbia, honored Portland with a visit August 8, when he stopped off a few hours between trains en route from Los Angeles to the East. He called on several of Portland theaters using Triangle service, and expressed his opinion that business seemed much better than he had anticipated it would be. He was agreeably surprised with the city.

Organist Writes a Song.

Portland, Ore.—E. H. Hunt, organist at the People's, has written and published a patriotic popular song called "Swat the Kaiser," which had its premier presentation at the People's when it was sung by the Portland Ad Club Quartette. Needless to say it went over big.

New Portland Censor Board Meets.

Portland, Ore.—The new censor board appointed by Mayor George L. Baker in an effort to minimize the heretofore alleged censorship unfairness held its organization meeting August 7. Gus A. Metzger, manager of the Universal exchange, has been made a member of the board since the list of appointees was made public last week. A committee consisting of C. W. Meighan, manager of the People's theater; Gus Metzger, and W. P. Keady was appointed to formulate a new set of rules for the guidance of the viewers of the board. It is anticipated that these rules will give everybody a fair deal.

Pathe to the Front.

Portland, Ore.—That local exchanges are receiving patronage in preference to out-of-town exchanges is evidenced by the way the Pathe exchange is coming into favor with Portland exhibitors. Manager W. W Kofeldt has finally landed Gold Rooster features in the People's theater, Portland's big first run house, to start September 16. He has also placed "The Fatal Ring" at the Pantages, and "The Battle of the Somme" at the Majestic.

C. E. Waite, traveler for Pathe, recently returned from a trip South, and reports business much better than expected.

Portland Exhibitors Do Exhanges' Work

Object to Requirement of Exchanges to Make Collections—Have to Keep Wires Hot With Changing Shipping Orders—Long Distance Shipments Blamed.

By Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theater Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Oregon exhibitors are getting tired of doing office work for Seattle exchange. To obviate long distance shipments, the cause of much complaint by Oregon theater men, and loss of business to Seattle exchanges, the distributors recently hit upon the plan of putting in a lot of small circuits throughout the territory. The circuit scheme is not new, of course, but of late it has become quite popular as a means of quieting exhibitors' complaints about high express rates on shipments to and from Seattle.

The circuit plan worked all right as long as the circuits remained intact as the road man originally arranged them, but when one exhibitor happened to drop out the wires began to hum between Seattle and the remaining members of the circuit, and the exhibitors had shipping instructions to worry about. Of late exchanges have become more presumptious and are ordering exhibitors to ship films C. O. D. to circuit members. The C. O. D. amounts vary each week, according to the way the slow pay circuit member sends his check to the Seattle office, and the member making the shipment to him must receive a notice of the amount each week.

It is causing a lot of dissatisfaction among Oregon exhibitors to be compelled to worry about this routine work for the exchanges just to save express charges on long distance shipments, and they are looking forward to the establishment of more exchanges in Portland.

Goldwyn Holds Trade Showing.

Portland, Ore.—C. F. Hill, new manager for Goldwyn, temporarily moved his sales force down from Seattle for the accommodation of Portland and Oregon exhibitors, and held a trade showing of the first productions released under the new brand. The cozy Sunset theater was the scene of the exhibitions on August 9, 10 and 11 before and after the regular shows. The regular Sunset organist was in attendance at all performances.

Nearly every exhibitor in Portland viewed "Baby Mine," and a number of out-of-town men were also present. Among these were George Bligh, Bligh theater, Salem; A. H. McDonald, Rex theater, Eugene; W. S. Humphrey, Savoy theater, Eugene; Henry E. Morris, Star theater, McMinnville; E. M. Thurber, Orpheum theater, Marshfield; W. A. Long, Star theater, Oregon City; C. C. Ferguson, Baker theater, Newberg, and several others.

Harry C. Arthur, traveling representative for Goldwyn, was in Portland assisting Mr. Hill. Mr. Arthur resigned his position as traveler with Fox to accept the Goldwyn appointment. He recently completed a trip south from Portland, and reports excellent business. He says that the Percy-Moran Company, owning the new Rialto in Medford, were the first exhibitors in the Pacific Northwest to sign a Goldwyn contract.

Local Pictures Go Well.

Portland, Ore.—The People's Amusement Company patronized home industry during the week of August 5, and showed a program consisting entirely of Portland made photoplays. Manager Meighan, of the People's theater, intended to show the pictures during the first split of the week only, but the venture proved so successful that they were retained the full seven days.

The photoplays consisted of a six-reel drama, "A Nugget in the Rough," and a two-reel polite comedy, "The Tale of a Dress." They were produced by the American Lifeograph Company under the direction of Louis Moomaw, formerly with Burton-Holmes in Chicago. Both pictures make use of the excellent Oregon scenery to very good advantage. Ruth Weyland, Hazel Hansen, and Harold Grady are featured.

G. E. Jackson Is Appointed Manager.

Portland, Ore.—With the coming of A. S. Kirkpatrick, formerly Portland Mutual manager and now personal representative of John R. Freuler, with headquarters in Chicago, formal announcement of the appointment of George E. Jackson, former Mutual road man, to the office of manager of the Portland branch was made. H. H. Brownell, well known in Portland film circles, is the new traveler out of the Portland office.

Oscar Hanson, booker, will leave Aug. 16 for a tour of the Mutual offices to install a uniform booking system in all of them. This system has been worked out in the Portland office during the past few years.

Mr. Kirkpatrick is making the present tour for the purpose of systematizing operation in all the Mutual offices, and is delivering a personal message from President Freuler to the branch managers of Mutual west of Denver. The managers east of the Rockies were called in conference in Chicago.

The Portland film fraternity was on hand a hundred per cent. strong to greet Mr. Kirkpatrick on his visit here. His rise in the film circles in Portland were rapid. He resigned a position as efficiency expert with the City of Portland to take up the same line of work with the Mutual when C. J. Kerr was manager of the Portland office. He afterwards became branch manager for Metro, then traveling representative for Mutual, and within a few months manager.

Mr. Kirkpatrick is returning to Chicago by way of San Francisco and Los Angeles.

New Mutual Manager for Butte.

Butte, Mont.—With the transfer of manager Caughman, of the Mutual office here, to the position of traveling representative out of Seattle it is announced that G. W. Whitney has been made manager. The Mutual office is enjoying excellent business.

With the Exhibitors.

Grants Pass, Ore.—The Bijou theater, Caldwell Bros., will discontinue pictures in their house for a short time and run a season of stock. While the summer slump has not been as bad this year as usual the theater managers feel that a little variety in shows will be welcome. The Bijou will resume pictures about Sept. 1.

Roseburg, Ore.—The Majestic theater, Frank Boles, is doing exceptionally well this summer.

Marshfield, Ore.—The Noble theater, Bob Marsden, is installing a new Johns organ.

Coquille, Ore.—The Scenic theater has been reopened by C. A. Pendleton.

Albany, Ore.—E. R. Cummings, the new manager of the Globe, recently made a trip to Seattle to arrange service. Mr. Cummings came to the Globe from Marshfield, where he was manager for E. M. Thurber at the Orpheum.

Emmett, Idaho.—J. M. Houston opened the new Emmett theater here September 9.

Portland, Ore.—Pete Sabo reports new installations of equipment at the Crystal theater, Astoria, and the Arcade, Springfield. W. J. White, owner of the Arcade, has sold his Springfield house.

Portland, Ore.—Sam Bernstein, who recently sold the Gem, has purchased the Elite theater in Rose City Park.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

THE ATAVISM OF JOHN TOM LITTLE BEAR (One of the O. Henry Series—Two Parts).—The cast: John Tom Little Bear (Al Jennings); Jeff Peters (Dan Duffy); Blinkly (J. Abraham); Roy Conyers (Roberto Turnbull); Mrs. Conyers (Marye Brittain); Mr. Conyers (H. E. Smith). Directed by David Smith.

John Tom Little Bear, an educated Indian, Jeff Peters, a medicine fakir, and Mr. Blinkly, a would-be actor, are resting in camp. The Indian is cooking a steak, when from the bushes opposite a tiny cloud of smoke appears. The Indian staggers and extracts from his chest a tiny bullet. He runs to the bushes and drags therefrom a boy of nine years of age holding a tiny rifle in his hands. Using stragetic means the fakir obtains from the obstinate child his name and address. It transpires that the boy, Roy Conyers, ran away from home in order to shoot redskins and that the conductor set him off the train at Kansas. After a few days the Indian becomes sincerely attached to the boy, who confidingly tells John Tom that "Papa is a bad man." The fakir advises that the boy's mother should be telegraphed, and accordingly next day Mrs. Conyers arrives.

That night at the hotel the Indian becomes greatly attracted to Mrs. Conyers, but later he confides to Jeff that he realizes only too well the racial distinction. So he determines to seek the white man's surcease—whiskey. Events move rapidly. Mr. Conyers suddenly turns up at the hotel and kidnaps the boy. When the Indian learns of this he gives a frenzied shriek and chases the kidnapper. Mrs. Conyers is frantic with grief and Jeff is striving to comfort her, when suddenly the Indian appears with the boy in his arms. He explains that he has run fifteen miles. Mrs. Conyers hurries her precious treasure indoors, and Jeff leads the exhausted Indian back to camp. Jeff then picks from the Indian's belt a man's scalp, and he visualizes the grim adventure which the Indian must have experienced in order to rescue the boy. He knows also that John Tom Little Bear may be "Red without—but White within."

FALCON FEATURES.

THE PHANTOM SHOTGUN (Four Parts).—The cast: Van Buren Courtland (R. Henry Grey); Elizabeth Kennedy (Kathleen Kirkham; Frank Marshall (Barney Furey); Hamilton Forbes (Frank Brownlee); Betty Marshall (Gloria Payton); Patton (F. H. Gibson Gowland); Larkins (Wm. Marshall); Harding (Bruce Smith); Capt. Lloyd (Capt. J. E. Nicholson). From story by Stanley Clisby Arthur. Directed by Harry Harvey.

Van Buren Courtland, partner of Hamilton Forbes, loves Elizabeth Kennedy, Forbes' secretary, who is also loved by Forbes. Forbes has Courtland arrested for forgery and, professing friendship, finances his defense. An important state witness becoming confused, Courtland is freed, and after accusing Forbes, goes west to find the bribed witness.

Elizabeth promises to marry Forbes, having been told by him that Courtland is dead. Courtland, seeing the announcement of the engagement, comes east to stop the marriage, but is told by Larkins, a reporter, that the marriage has taken place, and he is persuaded to leave the city. Larkins, who has all along suspected Forbes of the frame-up, follows Courtland to the pier and sees Elizabeth and Forbes boarding the ship. Fearing trouble, Larkins goes along too. Elizabeth is overcome when she sees Courtland. When he explains matters to her she quarrels with Forbes and moves to another stateroom. That night Forbes is killed and Courtland suspected. Patton, a deck steward, is recognized by Larkins as an escaped convict who had been sent to prison on the false testimony of Forbes. Suspected of the murder, Patton denies his guilt to Larkins, but admits he saw the murderer.

That night Patton is also killed and an attempt is made upon Courtland's life. It is known that a shotgun is used in each case, but none can be found on board. The crew mutiny and the phantom gun saves the captain's life. Larkins is the next to be shot and wounded. Finally, the stateroom of Frank Marshall, a passenger, is fired into. Larkins promises to solve the mystery and flips a penny which rolls under the berth. In reaching for it with Marshall's cane the cane breaks, disclosing a hidden shotgun. Marshall confesses, saying that when his sister died, having been ruined and deserted by Forbes, he had sworn to kill her betrayer "in his happiest hour." Patton had witnessed the murder and Larkins' investigations were becoming alarming, so both had to be shot. Elizabeth and Courtland are now free to marry.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

THE MARTINACHE MARRIAGE (Four Parts).—The cast: Sara St. Ypriex (Margaret Landis); Mrs. Martinache (Mollie McConnell); Hermia Martinache (Leota Lorraine); Irene Lawson (Julien Beaubien); Col. Horace Martinache (Philo McCullough); Eric Martinache (Vincent Berresford); Lord Sayle (Harl McInroy); Roscoe Vandercourt (Frank Brownlee). From story by Beatrix Demarest Lloyd. Directed by Bert Bracken.

In Paris Horace Martinache, wealthy young American, aids a ragged young flower girl who was knocked down by his machine. Placing her in a hospital he leaves money to pay for her education when she recovers, and sails for home without further thought of the affair.

Some years later Martinache, still a bachelor, learns that his nephew, Eric, during a trip abroad has fallen in love with an actress and is bringing her home to gain his mother's consent to their marriage. The mother and sisters of the young heir to the Martinache millions are horrified and ask Col. Martinache's aid to break up the match. The latter consents, but orders a a genteel and diplomatic method. Madame Martinache is to invite the actress, Sara St. Ypriex, to be her guest in the household, the theory being that seeing a great deal of each other will cause the lover's devotion to cool. Sara becomes a guest at the mansion and is introduced to the social set which passes its week-ends under the hospitable Martinache roof.

Her beauty earns her new suitors, an Englishman, a nobleman of mediocre character, and Roscoe Vandercourt, a rather strong personality. To make the cure absolute Col. Martinache consents to join the house party and pay attention to the charmer. Sara is agreeably startled to discover in him her benefactor, she having been the flower girl of Paris. Col. Martinache is unaware of the coincidence, however, and his love, encouraged by the deeply grateful girl, becomes reality instead of pretense. Matters are aided when she is annoyed by the nobleman and by Vandercourt. Eric shows his fickleness when Col. Martinache is discovered in Sara's room after his response to cries of alarm. Vandercourt, her attacker, having just escaped. Col. Martinache is now committed more than ever to protect her happiness. He proposes and is accepted, while Vandercourt, now discovered to be an international crook, is removed by an avenging hand, Sara's father having traced him to America after a prison term served as the result of treachery.

KALEM.

THROUGH FIRE AND WATER (An Episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree"—Two Parts).—The cast: Stingaree (True Boardman); Howie (Paul C. Hurst); Kate Proctor (Edythe Sterling); Billy Shuster (Ray Hanford); Sergeant D'Aeth (Hal Clements). Directed by Paul C. Hurst.

Stingaree and his partner, Howie, while riding across Old Man Plain in the bush country of Australia, save the life of Billy Shuster, a worthless vagabond, when that individual drops a lighted cigarette, falls asleep, and catches fire. Shuster's coat is destroyed by fire, and Stingaree gives him his white one.

At their camp, Howie attempts to break a wild colt, but the horse runs away with him and finally throws him. The accident is seen by Kate Proctor, the "hired help" of Mr. and Mrs. Brockton. She helps Howie to the house and bandages his wounded arm. Stingaree, searching for Howie, arrives at the house. He finds a revolver on a side table, and Kate explains that it belonged to her husband, who has stolen her money and left her. From her description of the man, Stingaree recognizes him as no other than the man he has befriended. Shuster, having recognized Stingaree and read of the 500 pounds reward offered for his capture, is now at the troopers' barracks setting Sergeant D'Aeth on the track of the bushranger.

Stingaree rides back to the spot where he met Shuster, and there, to experience the keen delight of throwing Sergeant D'Aeth off the track, he makes new tracks in place of the old ones which have been obliterated. He rides to a stream, which he enters and rides through. Sergeant D'Aeth and Shuster, following his tracks, reach the stream. They decide that each one shall take a side of the stream and search for the tracks until nightfall. Then they shall camp for the night and meet in the morning. By evening neither has found trace of the bushranger, so they make separate camps for the night.

Before dawn, while both his pursuers are sleeping, Stingaree pays them a visit. Coming to D'Aeth camp, he trades hats with the sergeant, and also appropriates his coat. Now, with Stingaree's fancy striped hat, and a white shirt, the sergeant could easily be mistaken for the bushranger. Then Stingaree visits Billy's camp with the sergeant's horse (which he had exchanged for his own) and changes the sergeant's horse for Billy's. Taking Shuster's hat with him, Stingaree hides in the bushes to await results.

When the two pursuers awake they are astounded at the transformations. And when Shuster sees the sergeant on Stingaree's horse, with a white shirt and Stingaree's hat, he mistakes D'Aeth for the bushranger. D'Aeth, seeing Shuster on his horse and wearing Stingaree's white coat, mistakes him for Stingaree. Both open fire, and Shuster is the victim.

Stingaree returns to Kate with the 500 pounds reward which he appropriated from the sergeant. He tells her that her husband, whom he found fatally wounded after a fight from the troopers, sent it to her.

SPARKLE COMEDY.

HER PEIGNOIR (One Reel).—The cast: Ami Simple (Tom Mulgrew); Janice Simple (Estelle Wynne); Mrs. Gay (Mrs Herbert); Mr. Gay (Hamilton Crane). Directed by Charles Pitt.

Ami Simple and his wife never tire of telling their neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Gay, of their wonderfully happy and eugenic marriage. One morning Mrs. Simple, struck by a stunning new peignoir in Vogue, decides to have one and goes at once to her dressmaker. Ami returns home to lunch and cannot get in. With the aid of Gay he breaks in through the window and finds a note on the table which reads: "Have gone to have my peignoir cut out. Janice."

Horrified at the terrible news, Ami calls up the hospital and is told that Mrs. Simple is undergoing ether. Rushing to the hospital he bends over the bed and finds the patient is another Mrs. Simple. He shows the note to the superintendent, who calls in several doctors for discussion. After trying in vain to discover from their medical books what a peignoir is, they conclude it is some terrible new disease and assure Simple that his wife has probably gone to a specialist. Overcome, Simple enters a saloon and manages to take the edge off his sorrow.

Meanwhile Janice returns and Mrs. Gay asks her if the operation was successful. Explanations follow and Janice unwraps a bundle and shows what a peignoir is. Simple wends a crooked path home and when he, too, is told what a peignoir is he flops to the floor.

JAXON COMEDY.

TOUGH LUCK (One Reel).—Pokes and Jabs are behind with their board and are held up by the boarding housekeeper at the point of a pistol. Jabs tells her that they have money hidden in their room and she agrees to wait till they go up and get it. Mrs. Ham goes to market and returns just in time to catch the delinquents about to skip. Jabs escapes, but Pokes is caught by the hair of his head and made to work out the double board bill as cook, waiter and scrub woman. Pokes tries to escape one night, but Mrs. Ham hears the commotion and, mistaking it for burglars, notifies the police.

The cop arrives just as Pokes drops out of the window. They grapple and in the scuffle the cop loses his helmet, revealing Jabs. Mrs. Ham from the window recognizes the pair and is furious. Looking about for a weapon of vengeance, she seizes the packed trunk and hurls it at them. It hits Pokes in the head. Jabs does his duty and arrests Pokes, who appears in court the following morning a wiser and smaller man.

SELIG WORLD LIBRARY NO. 14.

Vast Vineyards of California—The grape is the oldest of cultivated fruits. Its culture in California was begun by the Spanish missionaries about 1770. The grapes are picked by hand, placed in boxes and hauled to the wine presses. When grapes come to the winery they are run through a machine which crushes the grapes but not the seeds. Juice is strained from the pulp and placed in reservoirs. Here's some choice fruit.

The American Rattlesnake—The rattlesnake of Southwestern America is one of the most deadly of poisonous serpents, ready to defend itself, it seldom leads an attack. It feeds on rats, squirrels and rabbits.

The Clay Industry—The clay used is a hydrous aluminum silicate, and is formed from the decomposition of aluminous rocks. Women are employed to cast small statues. Toy animals cast from clay. Casting vases. A statuette sculptor.

The Buddhists Pagodas of Burma—About nine-tenths of the total population of Burma are Buddhists. Although banished from Hindustan, Buddhism prevails in China, Siam, Mongolia and Japan, and its adherents are said to number 147,000,000. The Shoay-Dagon at Rangoon, Burma, is the most venerable Buddhist Pagoda in the world, 070 feet high and supposed to have been built 585 B. C. The Pagoda and surrounding shrines are covered with gold leaf. A Pagoda contains some relic of Buddha, or one of his disciples, such as a bone, a tooth, or a hair. Pagodas at Mandalay, India.

THE SOLE SURVIVOR (Two Parts).—The cast: Joan Darcy (Bessie Eyton); John Gaunt (Charles Clarey); The Mad Scientist (Lafayette McKee); His Slave (Roy Watson); Thomas Wynn (Charles Wheelock). Written by James Oliver Curwood. Directed by F. J. Grandon.

Five young men meet at the home of Thomas Wynn and propose that they shall meet again there five years from that date at nine o'clock in the evening if they are alive.

The years pass and the appointed day is at hand. Only three of the five arrive on time. A letter is received from the fourth, who is dying from a bullet wound in a Bombay hospital. The three friends drink a toast to John Gaunt, the fifth and last man, "wherever he may be."

Then Gaunt appears in tattered clothing and tells a strange story. For three years he had buried himself in the wilds of Central America, in search of gold. He became lost in the jungle. He was captured by a mad scientist, who showed Gaunt a beautiful maiden imprisoned in a cage. The girl was classified by the scientist as one of his "specimens."

Gaunt tells a startling story of his hardships, of thrilling adventures and of his escape. He says that on the Coast settlement he was believed to be insane, and asks his friends to go with him to the rescue of the white girl imprisoned in jungle wilds. They go to the rescue and find the girl just in time to save her from death.

Gaunt has learned to love the girl and on the homeward journey asks her for her hand in marriage.

HER HEART'S DESIRE (One Reel).—The cast: Andres (Wheeler Oakman); John Fordyce (J. F. McDonald); Carolyn Carter (Bessie Eyton); Mrs. Carter (Lillian Hayward). Written by Lanier Bartlett. Directed by Colin Campbell.

Carolyn Carter obeys the commands of her mother, who is socially ambitious, and marries John Fordyce, a wealthy, disreputable rounder. Carolyn soon discovers, as so many women have before her, that a loveless marriage for gold only causes sorrow.

Matters go from bad to worse and finally Carolyn divorces Fordyce and goes away to live among the simple folk, between the mountains and the sea. There she meets Andres, a young shepherd, who is tending his flocks. Andres longs for an education and the beautiful stranger instructs him in book lore. Then it is that love enters the game and joins the hearts and hands of Andres, the shepherd, and Carolyn Carter, and finally she realizes her heart's desire of marriage for love and children.

GOLD SEAL.

THE WINNING PAIR (Three Parts—Release Week of August 27).—The cast: Beatrice (Ruth Stonehouse); Jack (Roy Stewart); John Croft (Alfred Allen); Ezra Moore (Harry Dunkinson); Gerald McLaughlin (Kingsley Benedict); Mrs. Ezra Moore (Evelyn Selbie); Hotel Clerk (Jack Dill); Mose Cohn (Walter Belasco). Written by Eugene B. Lewis. Produced by L. W. Chaudet.

Beatrice was the twenty-year-old daughter of Ezra Moore, grouchy old millionaire shoe manufacturer. Years before he had been in partnership with John Croft, but the partnership had been dissolved over a trivial matter and the two men had not spoken since. John Croft, Jr., or "Jack," a good-natured youth of twenty-four, is in love with Beatrice.

Jack is cut off by his dad, on his refusal to forget Beatrice. Holding herself in some degree responsible for Jack's embarrassing financial condition, Beatrice pays a call on the superintendent of her father's factory, with the result that Jack goes to work for Ezra Moore.

Ezra Moore specialized in men's shoes and John Croft in women's footwear. Beatrice, a "bug" on shoe leather, always kept on hand a supply of from fifteen to twenty pairs of the "fanciest make." As her father did not manufacture her style of shoes, she bought them wholesale from the Croft factory. The bill for Beatrice's shoes amounted to $380, and when her father received it he became greatly aggravated. The old man pointed out to his daughter how she had been flim-flammed on the prices, and what the prices should have been. To show that she was a good business woman, Beatrice had the Croft concern cut down the price of her shoes to meet her father's figures.

Moore had the gout in a bad way and his physician ordered him to the seaside to recuperate, and Beatrice was obliged to go along. The separation from Jack got on her nerves, so she issued orders to the head of her father's factory to give Jack the territory that embraces the seaside resort. One night, while at a week-end country party, Beatrice gets word that Jack will arrive the following day. She can't wait for the morning train. On the pretext that the message is from her father, that he has taken a sudden turn for the worse, she packs her trunk, which contains her full complement of footwear, and leaves for the seaside. On the way her car is wrecked and she is obliged to take refuge in a prominent hotel. The attaches of the hotel assume that she is a saleswoman and this suspicion is confirmed when her shoe trunk falls and bursts open, scattering her footwear over the floor. The trunk is put in the sample room. That night, Gerald McLaughlin, head of a large string of shoe stores, comes in with Jack and the latter is told about the line of shoes a new "drummer" has brought to town. Jack consults the register and wonders what Beatrice can be doing there.

The following morning Beatrice learns from Jack that she is supposed to be a shoe drummer. This appeals to her, and she decides to go through with it. The result is that she lands a half-million-dollar order from McLaughlin for his twenty-six stores. She sends the order to Jack's father. It is followed by a personal letter from McLaughlin to Croft, congratulating him on having such a saleswoman.

Later Jack learns that an army purchasing agent is about to place an order for 350,000 pairs of shoe. With the aid of Beatrice he secures the order and sends it to Moore's factory. The constant effort of Jack and Beatrice has been to effect a reconciliation between their fathers.

SCANDAL EVERYWHERE (Rel. Week of Aug. 27).—The cast: The Western Man (Max Asher); The Soubrette (Gladys Tennison). Scenario written by R. A. Dillon. Produced by Craig Hutchinson.

The soubrette in the country hotel is flirting with a guest. The manager tells the detective to watch her, and she is bawled out for her acts. She leaves the hotel and outside meets Max and his wife. She flirts with Max, and his wife catches them and, bawling Max out, pulls him into the hotel. Max goes to the hotel desk to register, and catches the detective watching him. He slams the detective's head on the hotel desk and, going upstairs, shoots at him when he sees the detective examining the register for his name.

The detective grabs a water pitcher to throw it at Max, who shoots the pitcher out of the detective's hand. Max goes to his room, while the detective, to spy upon him, bores a hole from the room above and sends the plaster down on Max. Max shoots up at the ceiling, and then goes upstairs, to find the soubrette in the room, she returning after the detective vacated it.

She invites Max in, and he orders refreshments when the bell hop comes in answer to Max's shooting at the push button in the room. The detective takes the bell hop's uniform and, disguising himself, serves the drinks. Instead of a horse's neck drink he brings up the head of a horse (papier mache), and Max starts shooting at him.

The detective runs out and tells Max's wife where her husband is. She goes to the room. Max looks for his money and finds it gone. The soubrette, who has taken it, shoves the money in the detective's pocket, and Max, finding it there, starts shooting at him. They go down in a chase to the lobby where, back to the room again, Max jumps at the chandelier where the detective is hanging, and, missing the detective, hangs there and falls with the chandelier to the floor.

He goes right through the floor, down into the dining room. He goes right through the dining room table and into the lobby, where some cops mistake him for the detective, and he flees, followed by everyone. Max doubles on them, then meets his wife. That lady proceeds to take good care of him in a way he did not expect.

JOKER.

WHY THEY LEFT HOME (Rel. Week of Aug. 27).—The cast: Ira Dewberry (William Franey); Mary Mandrake (Zasu Pitts); Flossie Flatter (Lillian Peacocke); Jack Dawson (Milburn Moranti); Character Man (Burt Law); Ira's Father (Bobby Mack). Scenario written by C. B. Hoadley. Produced by W. W. Beaudine.

Ira, who is employed at the oil station, falls in love with Flossie, wife of Jack, as they drive by. Ira later announces to his father that he is going to the city, and does. Mary, his ex-fiance, learns he has gone to the city and consoles the father of Ira by announcing that she, too, is going to bring Ira home.

In the city Ira meets Hank, a property man in a theater, who invites him to come with him behind the scenes. Mary has wandered into the same theater. A drama, entitled "The Salary of Sin," is on, and during the action Jack threatens Flossie if she does not marry him. Flossie scorns Jack, and Jack thereupon steals a sum of money from a desk, places it under a rug and accuses Flossie of stealing it. Ira recognizes the principals. He takes the action literally, as does Mary, in the orchestra section. Ira has seen Jack place the money under the rug. It looks black for the accused Flossie, but Ira rushes on the stage, interrupts the performance and accuses Jack of stealing the money. There follows a struggle, much to the amusement of the audience and the consternation of Mary, who flees the theater. Ira is thrown out and, explaining to Hank, is told that Flossie has children older than Ira and has been married three times. Ira is disillusioned and Mary, happening on the scene at this critical period, the twain are reunited—happier and wiser.

BUSTING INTO SOCIETY (Rel. Week of Aug. 27).—The cast: Lizzie (Gale Henry); Rupert (Milton Sims); "Lonesome" Larry (Charles Dorien); Father (Charles Haeffli); Mother (Mrs. George Hernandez). Scenario by Tom Gibson. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Rupert helped Lizzie hang the clothes on the line until it broke, and then they repaired to the kitchen, where the feminine head of the family, very much the worse for wear, hung over the ironing board. Lizzie would not hear the pleas of her Rupert to be married, for Rupert was only a hod-carrier. There must have existed in the mind of Lizzie some faint premonition of the riches to be hers, for a few minutes later the male head of the family, also very much used, burst in upon the group with the startling information that his lottery ticket had copped the grand prize and that thereafter no more ironing boards for them.

Rupert and his hod were quickly relegated to the back yard by Papa, and he and Lizzie, with, of course, Mama, went to live in a brownstone front. They wanted to get into society bad. So when the Grand Duke Larry comes along they plan a big feed for him. Larry, however, has his eyes only on their jewels, and after giving the silver the once over and dining in state, he holds them up and is about to make a get-away when the trusty hod-carrier looms on the scene.

He has, in all truth, been sticking around Lizzie pretty much despite being thrown out of the back, front and side doors a couple of dozen times, and when he sees the Grand Dooke's change of front he hops through the window and makes him come through. He covers him with the bread knife until the arrival of the officers of the law, and then the reunited family sit down and do justice to the rest of the ducal dinner, with Rupert the prospective son-in-law and hero of the hour.

NESTOR.

THE NIGHTCAP (Rel. Week of Aug. 27).—The cast: Eddie Latelywed (Eddie Lyons); Edith Latelywed (Edith Roberts); Lee Malatrops (Lee Moran). Scenario written by F. A. Palmer. Produced by Roy Clements.

When Eddie Latelywed went to the club, Edith, his wife, hurries over to her mother's home. The two women settle down to a quiet evening, except for the continual stream of advice and warning against the "wiles" of husbands that the worldly-wise mama gives.

Midnight finds the boys at the club somewhat unsteady—with divers highballs to their credit. They leave and, finding the last car gone, they commandeer a cab which stands alone, the driver having left it temporarily. The drive home is productive of laughable incidents and, arriving at Eddie's house (he having invited Lee to spend the night), Eddie discovers that he has forgotten his key, and the couple attempt to get in via the window. Inside, Eddie finds that he has but one clean pair of pajamas, so Lee dons Edith's lacy nightgown.

Edith and her mother, weary of waiting, start home. By the time they arrive the boys are asleep. They go in and Edith sees the arm and head of Lee, who has put her nightcap on, and thinks the worst. Eddie wakes up, grabs a pistol, thinking burglars are in the house, and, seeing his wife, he drops the pistol and starts to embrace her. But mother-in-law is on the job. She picks up the gun and takes a shot at the form in bed. Lee jumps up, explanations follow, and mama's plans and suspicions are foiled with the couple embracing.

STAR FEATURETTE.

HANDS IN THE DARK (Two Parts—Rel. Week of Aug. 27).—The cast: Jonathan Brewer (E. N. Wallack); Helen (Edith Johnston); Howard (J. Warren Kerrigan); Butler (Rex Roselli). Scenario written by William Parker. Produced by Henry McRae.

Helen, daughter of Jonathan Brewer, came to speak to her father regarding her love affair, but before she could make herself heard the old man, a miserly sort of a person, believed she came to request more jewels, and so paid no attention to her. A half hour before Howard, a clerk, and Helen's lover, had been sent from her father's house, accused of wanting to marry her for the possession of the jewels and coins, for which the old miser, in the neighborhood, was more hated than revered.

But Brewer is not long left to rub together his thin fingers over his earthly possessions, for he is killed. Mutely accused by his cigarette case found in the room, Howard is arrested, then convicted, and the day for his execution is set.

To the mountains with her aunt and butler Helen goes, and on the morning of the execution a forest fire routs them from their beds. The butler, acting suspiciously, arouses the girl, who follows him with a gun and, as the flames creep near, she sees him hastily dig up a bag filled with the precious stones. She covers the man with a gun and the rest comes easy. After a record run to the city and to the death chamber, the fire having broken all connections with the telephone to the city, Helen makes the trip, and she saves the life of her sweetheart.

PROPS, DROPS AND FLOPS (Two Parts—Aug. 29).— Shortly after the day began in the property room of the U-Funny theater there entered Griffith, the company's manager, with his associates from town. There was Mrs. Morris, the heavy, and Gladys, the soubrette. Bert, the head prop man, and Walter, his assistant, made a grab for Gladys, who was none other than the affianced of Griffith. Her suitcases and trunks received first attention, despite Mrs. Morris' fondness for both the property man and his assistant, and when her foot caught in a board in the stage and dangled into the prop room there was almost a stampede as to who should come to her assistance first. The climax arrived when Walter and Gladys were discovered in a small canoe in the middle of the lake by Griffith. The boat is overturned and, with the aid of a passerby, the two vacationists are lassoed, and almost dragged over the bridge's railing to safety. Griffith, unable to stand it longer, enters the water, when the rope is snapped, and there ensues a lively fight, with all emerging and seeking refuge in the park until their clothing dries.

A weary Willie passing along, with a penchant for stealing clothes, further complicates matters so, when the trio does finally arrive, much the worse for wear and tear, at the U-Funny theater, where the curtain is already up, some more things begin to happen. Mrs. Morris is justified in feeling slighted, and she plans a few stunts herself, which deprive Gladys of some of the spotlight, especially as she has arrived after Walter, taken from his duties as head prop man, is mustered into soubrette service. Bert finally helps out and becomes a target for the heavy, who hurls knives, daggers, hatchets and other delicate things at his head, shoulders and limbs, to show that she is an A No. 1 marksman, each time just missing a part of Bert's quivering flesh. Finally, when it comes to throwing the burning torches, a fire is started, and while the firemen are arriving other things start to happen, with Gladys, Walter and Mrs. Morris mixed up in the melee. Bert is finally rescued, after a very horrible experience, and Gladys and the chorus find that they have left little of their original abbreviated wardrobes.

JUNGLE TREACHERY (Two Parts—Rel. Week of Aug. 27).—The cast: Betty (Babe Sedgwick); Nathan Briggs (Charles Brinley); Bob (Fred Church); Big Bill McPherson (Fred Montague); Stenographer (Willard Wayne). Produced by Rex Hodge and W. B. Pearson.

Betty had always been a child of nature. Born in the heart of East Africa, she lived with her father, Nathan Briggs, a squatter on English territory, until now always happy.

Big Bill McPherson, the territorial surveyor to the English Government, is trying to persuade his son, Bob, just out of college and anxious to prove his worth, not to go to Africa, as two parties have already been lost there. But knowing that, if he can survey one hundred miles inland, the Government will pay him five thousand pounds, Bob heads an expedition into Africa, leaving with three men.

Nathan is prospering and has to account to no one. He hates the English, as did Betty until recently, and he is surprised to hear from a native that there is an English camp over the ridge. Betty is sent to find out what the men are in the neighborhood for, and on the way falls down a slide and sprains her ankle. The country is full of wild animals. At twilight the beasts of the jungle come forth for their prey and Betty finds herself in danger. She begins to scream for help. Bob hears the cries. He finds Betty and carries her to his tent, where he makes her comfortable and then proceeds to question her as to how she happens to be in East Africa.

Nathan has become anxious about Betty and starts out to search for her, after ordering the natives to get their forces together to attack the Englishmen. Nathan finds Betty at the tent. He swears vengeance. Betty warns Bob to prepare for fight, and by the time the natives arrive the Englishmen have made breastworks from where they fire. They are victorious in the ensuing fight.

Meanwhile, Nathan returns to his cottage. A lion, being attracted by the odor of meat, has entered the house, and as Nathan enters the door backwards, watching the fight in the distance, the animal pounces on him. He is found badly wounded and, knowing that he is about to die, sends for Betty, begging her forgiveness and confessing to Bob that it was he who had kept the English out of the territory, but pleading with him to take care of Betty.

Bob later drives the first survey line into British East Africa, and returns to introduce Mrs. McPherson to Big Bill, who is as happy over the outcome as they.

JERRY'S EUGENIC MARRIAGE (August 30).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Marie (Claire Alexander); [illegible] ([illegible] George); Pete (C. E. Feehan); Postman (Tom Riley).

Disconsolate, with only Pete, his old-time chum, for companionship, Jerry reads of the recent wedding of a man to a millionairess, effected through a newspaper want ad. To him comes the thought that he might be able to put through a similar deal. Jerry writes an ad calling for a beautiful wife, accomplished and affectionate, and clearly states he has no objection to one of wealth.

Jerry selects the picture of Marie as his prospective bride and wires her to come. Marie joins Jerry and together they go to a minister. Jerry offers his stamps for his fee. The ceremony is about to be performed when the clergyman demands Marie's eugenic certificate. They agree to visit the Eugenic Bureau. Marie is put through a severe test that results in her rejection by the physician. She departs for the railroad station to return to her home, while Jerry decides that matrimony is a pretty tough proposition.

REEL LIFE NO. 70 (Aug. 30).—The majority of people post a letter and give no thought to the intricate system required to speed it to its destination. To show what happens to the missive after it is placed in the box is the mission of "Handling the Mail," a leading section of Gaumont's Reel Life No. 70. After screen descriptions of various methods of collection, the work of handling the letter at the post office is described. How money orders are handled is also shown in this section.

"Using the Abalone," a little-known industry of the Pacific coast, is an entertaining series of pictures of the abalone shells, which are so popular in making jewelry, furnishing ornamentation for various articles, and as salad forks, jewel caskets, etc. The shells are removed from the rocks by deftly administered electric shocks, a method which brings the shell away intact.

"Beach Sports of California" will fascinate every one who loves the great out-of-doors. The pictures show fair bathers riding the "sport-fish," the newest sport of California beach resorts. There are also pictures of girls dancing on the beach.

A fourth section shows Bobby Feinberg, aged nine years, doing the difficult lassoe stunts which one associates with Will Rogers on the stage and with the cowboy stars of the Wild West shows. There are also two animated drawings of a humorous nature, founded upon pictures which have appeared in "Life." These are "The March of Science" and "What a Bachelor Sees at a Wedding."

MISS NOBODY (Astra—Five Parts—Aug. 19).—The cast: Roma (Gladys Hulette); Crespi (Cesare Gravina); Malone (A. G. Andrews); Jack Thurston (William Parke, Jr.); Roland Fabor (Sidney Mather). Directed by William Parke.

In the life of Roma there was only one thought, who was she? She was nobody. Ridiculed by her schoolmates, she begs her guardians to tell her the truth. With her happiness at stake, they convince her that she is a distinguished English lady. Vacation time at hand, Roma is greeted into society as Lady Partington. She wins the heart of Jack Thurston, a young Englishman. Roland Fabor, a gentleman burglar, admires her. Lord Pembroke, Thurston's uncle, pays him an unexpected visit and learns of his attentions to Roma. Pembroke is an old friend of the Partington family and he knows that Partington never had a daughter. Becoming suspicious, he places a detective on the trail of Jack. Praising her guardians, Roma has Jack visit them. Unfortunately they are pawnbrokers, and this to Jack seems peculiar. Becoming furious at Jack's actions, Roma denounces him and accepts Fabor against her guardians' wishes, as they know his true character.

At a reception given in Roma's honor, Fabor shows his true colors by stealing a necklace from one of the guests, and immediately leaves and goes to Roma's guardians to have it redeemed. To prove to Roma what he is, they hold Fabor and phone her. Suspecting something, Fabor escapes, leaving the necklace behind. As the detective walks in, Roma has the necklace in her hand and is accused of theft. Pembroke is notified by the detective that he has the goods on Roma. In the presence of Jack, Roma pleads with Pembroke to assist her. She shows him her locket. Opening the locket he steps back astonished.

THE FATAL RING Episode No. 9, "The Dice of Death"—Two Parts—Astra—Sept. 2).—The cast: Pearl Standish (Pearl White); The Priestess (Ruby Hoffman); Richard Carslake (Warner Oland); Tom Carlton (Henry Gsell).

Unaware of danger and ignorant of the fact that the Violet Diamond is not within the safe, Pearl Standish endeavors to open it. The result is an explosion which wrecks the room and hurls Carslake and Pearl to the floor. Tom and Spider learn Pearl's whereabouts. Dopey Ed, Carslake's henchman, regains his senses and shakes Carslake. His first thought is the ring and he eagerly searches the pockets of Carslake. Regaining consciousness, Pearl sees Ed. She throws herself upon him. Pearl opens his hand and the Diamond falls to the floor. Picking the Diamond up, Pearl rushes to the other room, only to be encountered by Ed again, and is knocked to the floor. Tom and the Spider arrive. Dopey Ed sees them and eludes them by jumping through the window. As they pass Carslake, he appears to be unconscious. Going to Pearl, they revive her. Carslake rises and, seeing the Diamond on the floor, picks it up and escapes.

The next afternoon Carslake, unaware of Dopey Ed's attempt to double cross him, plots with him to regain the setting for the Diamond. He sends his men to Pearl's home and by a trick they draw Pearl out into the garage. Binding her hand and foot, they bring her to Carslake's den.

Tom, worried, returns to the Standish home in an attempt to persuade Aunt Ella to prohibit Pearl's further quest for the ring. The phone rings and Tom answers it. Carslake is speaking. "The setting for the Diamond is in the top drawer of her dresser. Bring it to the Grand Central at three o'clock." Tom consents. Tom is at the station at the appointed time and, placing the setting in the ring, passes it into Carslake's pocket. Wiggsey Benson, a successful pickpocket and one-time confederate of Carslake, sees the incident between Carslake and Tom. Walking up to Carslake, he shakes him by the hand and at the same time fetches the envelope from his pocket. Realizing his loss, Carslake immediately follows Benson, and is in turn followed by Tom. Tracking him to an apartment, Carslake enters, while Tom remains outside.

Pearl finds herself locked alone and, in looking for a means of escape, she accidentally touches a wainscoting. Its secret compartment opens and to her surprise she finds the Violet Diamond. Overjoyed, she attempts to escape, but as she is about to go down the stairs she trips and falls to the bottom. Carslake's men bring her back and, wrapping her in a quilt, they place her on the sofa. She appears to be unconscious. Carslake left instructions that if he did not return by three o'clock, Pearl should be killed, and the hour was not very far off.

Carslake had followed Benson into the apartment. Closing the door behind him, he is astounded to see the Priestess and her adherents. Carslake tries to struggle with the Arabs, but is finally subdued. Death staring him in the face, Carslake promises to get the Diamond for the Priestess. Looking at his watch he sees it is near three, so he warns the Priestess to hurry. Grabbing a taxi they leave. Tom follows them. Nearing his den, Carslake sees Tom's taxi behind him. Sending one of the Arabs off the machine, Carslake has him fire and puncture the tires of Tom's machine. Arriving at his den, Carslake jumps off the machine and rushes in. Throwing the door back, he sees his man plunging the dagger in the wrapped up form on the sofa.

EFFICIENCY EDGAR'S COURTSHIP (Essanay—Five Parts—Sept. 3). The cast: Edgar Bumpus (Taylor Holmes); Mary Pierce (Virginia Valli); Mr. Pierce (Ernest Maupain); Wimple (Rodney LaRock).

Efficiency wins success in business; why not in love? Edgar Bumpus, a rising young man, applies this reasoning to his courtship of Mary Pierce. He first eliminates Wimple, his closest competitor, who plays a guitar, by learning to play a saxaphone, which makes louder noise, and by sending Mary flowers and candy each time Wimple calls on her. The plan works O. K., until the saxaphone disturbs Mr. Pierce's slumbers. He and Edgar clash and the latter is forbidden to visit Mary any more.

Edgar employs a clipping bureau to send news items to Mr. Pierce which tells of the troubles young girls get into when their fathers refuse to let them have beaux. One eloped with a milkman; another disappeared. This has no effect upon Mr. Pierce, however, except to make him hate Edgar more. However, the youth's persistence finally wins Mary's love. Then Edgar plays his trump card. He gets Mary to sign a legal agreement to forfeit $10,000 to him, unless she marries him. The two then confront Mr. Pierce with this document. Rather than lose the money, he consents to lose his daughter, the only stipulation being that Edgar will throw away his saxaphone. Thus efficiency triumphs.

T. HAVILAND HICKS—FRESHMAN (Three Parts—On Program No. 7—Aug. 25).—The cast: T. Haviland Hicks (Ray McKee); Jack Merritt (Albert Macklin); Theophilus Opperdyke (James Turbell); Brewsters (William Sherwood). Scenario by Raymond E. Dakin.

T. Haviland Hicks contracts an intimate friendship with Theophilus. They are freshmen. Hicks is saturated with good humor. Theophilus' main characteristic is timidity and the least excitement makes him faint. The sophomores, indignant at Hick's abuse of the banjo, prepare to haze him. Theophilus overhears their scheme and warns Hicks. Hicks hurls a defy at the sophomores to the effect that they are welcome to haze him, but if they fail to do so, Theophilus and himself are to be secure from hazing for all time.

They accept the defy and on the appointed night repair to his room wrapped up in pillow cases. Hicks smashes the dron light against the wall and the room is steeped in darkness. When a light is secured, Hicks is not to be found and the sophomores conclude that he has dived through the window. In fact, he is right among them, wrapped up in a pillow case. The duped sophomores plan to avenge themselves. Hicks gets wind of their scheme and awaits developments with absolute calm.

On the fated night the sophomores drag Hicks out of bed and carry him off to their lair. They proclaim him to be the original "missing link" and urge him to do an imitation of a monkey; but he dives through a window into a tennis net held ready for the purpose by a number of freshmen. The pursuing sophomores encounter a superior number of freshmen and are roughly handled.

Thereupon the sophomores post a defy, daring Hicks and his class to substitute the freshman colors for the sophomore colors, which will be found floating from the flag pole at a stated hour. Hicks dons a coat of mail, disguises Theophilus as a gorilla and succeeds in routing the sophomores and hoisting the freshman colors. Hicks becomes the most famous man at college.

"GALLEGHER" (Two Reels—On Program No. 7—Two Parts—Aug. 25).—The cast: Gallegher (Andy Clark); Stephen Hade (Jack Willard); Dwyer (William Wadsworth); Detective Hefflefinger (Lou Stearn).

Gallegher is a fighter by birth, a student of crime by choice, and an office boy at the "Press" by necessity. His ambition, however, is to become another Sherlock Holmes. A sensational murder case is just going the rounds of all the newspaper offices. A millionaire has been murdered and the disappearance of Stephen Hade, his secretary, together with a large sum of money, leaves no doubt as to the perpetrator of the crime. A photograph and a full description of the murderer appear in every paper, and a reward of $5,000 is offered for the apprehension of the criminal. Particular attention is drawn to the fact that the index finger on Hade's right hand is missing. The reporters of the "Press" are advancing their theories of how Hade is most apt to be caught. Gallegher listens. His theory is that Hade will always be found wearing gloves of which one finger will be stuffed with cotton. The only man on the staff Gallegher respects is Dwyer, the sporting editor, who has just received information of a championship fight that is to be staged at the Eagle Inn at Torresdale on Wednesday.

The office of the "Press" receives a visitor in the person of Mr. Hefflefinger of the Secret Service. Gallegher is so engrossed on the detective's conversation that he neglects his office duties and even accompanies him to his hotel, where he astounds him by his knowledge of criminals, and his offer of assistance towards the apprehension of a notorious forger on whose trail Hefflefinger is just bent.

On his way back to the office he passes the railway station, where he sees a man wearing gloves with the right index finger standing out in a peculiar way. Gallegher decides to stick to his trail and follows him to Torresdale and thence to Eagle Inn. There he learns that Hade is going to attend the championship fight, which is to be staged in a big barn at the inn without the knowledge of the police.

Gallegher dispatches a telegram to Hefflefinger, asking him to meet him at the station, and then hurries back to Philadelphia and to the home of Dwyer to convey the news to the sporting editor. Dwyer sends a note to the city editor urging him to hold back the forms for the next morning's issue as long as possible. Accompanied by Gallegher, he hurries to the station, where they meet Hefflefinger. They get to Eagle Inn. Dwyer is admitted to the barn, while Gallegher and Hefflefinger climb to the hay loft, whence they can look down into the arena. While the fight is going on the police break into the barn and arrest everybody, including Dwyer. Hefflefinger secures Hade and being of the Secret Service is permitted to leave with his prisoner.

Gallegher stealthily secures the "copy" from Dwyer's pocket and, by pretending to be the son of the innkeeper, is permitted to get out of the barn to take leave of his father before he is taken to prison. When Gallegher reaches the outside he leaps into a cab and drives away at top speed. What with cold and maltreatment at the hands of policemen he encounters on the way, it is only by dint of grit and cunning that he succeeds in reaching the office of the "Press" just as the city editor is about to give the order to close the forms.

YOUNG SALTS (600 Feet on Program No. 7—Aug. 25).—This subject reviews the life of the marine. At the Culver Naval School the day begins at six o'clock. The morning is spent in such exercises as boxing, racing, scaling fences and playing tennis. This is followed by a Cutter Drill. In the afternoon a race is usually held between cutters. Water sports play an important part in the life of a marine. The film shows the men giving remarkable exhibitions of fancy diving, sliding down the shute, and of the unique "chain dive." It ends with a series of scenes which show that marines are not only sailors, but crack soldiers as well.

HOLY LAND (400 Feet on Same Reel as Foregoing).—This scenic of the Holy Land opens with a view of the Garden of Gethsemane, now a Russian monastery. Other views include a panorama of Jerusalem from the Mount of Olives; of the busy mart in what was once the Pool of Siloam; of lepers and beggars wailing for alms; of the ancient Wailing Place of the Jews at whose walls men and women are forever wailing, as they did thousands of years ago. Among other scenes are Christian Pilgrims carrying the cross along the way to Calvary; the Gate of Damascus; a caravan going through the desert, and the little town of Bethlehem. Views of the latter include women making cakes and using goatskins as churns, people picking olives on the hills around Bethlehem, and tending their flocks today, just as they did centuries ago.

Fill Up Our Soldiers' Pipes

America's fighting men need tobacco to make trench life a little more comfortable. Here's a chance to treat the boys at the front.

"Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" has been organized to furnish "smokes" for the American soldiers and sailors in active service.

All labor and administrative expenses are contributed, so that every cent you give goes to pay for tobacco which is purchased in large quantities at a low price.

One dollar buys four packages of tobacco and sends them to France. Each package, costing twenty-five cents, has a retail value of forty-five cents and keeps a man in "smokes" for a week. Every dollar sent to "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" buys a bundle of tobacco that would cost $1.80 at your cigar store.

In every package is a post card addressed to a contributor to the tobacco fund. In accepting the package the soldier or sailor agrees to send on the card a message to his benefactor in the United States. According to the plan, every person who gives a quarter gets his receipt from a fighting man in France.

The work of this fund is approved by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy.

Send as many dollars as you can spare. Write your name and address clearly.

TURNING OUT SILVER BULLETS (1,000 Feet on Program No. 7—Aug. 25).—These pictures were taken at the Philadelphia Mint by permission of the United States Treasury Department. We see raw material transformed into a fiery liquid, cast into ingots and pressed in rolling mills, where it undergoes twenty-eight different operations. Another machine pounds out the blanks, which are annealed, cleaned and rounded off at the adges, at which stage they are cast into the coining machine that stamps out the finished coin. This is examined for defects, counted and weighed by machine.

THINK IT OVER (U. S. Amuse. Corp.—Five Parts—Aug. 13).—The cast: Alice Rowland (Catherine Calvert); Henry Whitworth (Richard Tucker); George Baring (A. Lloyd Lack); James Baring (Eugene Borden); Mrs. Martin (Auguste Burmester). Written and directed by Herbert Blache.

The action of this comedy-drama centers around Alice Rowland, an orphan under the guardianship of George Baring, an unscrupulous man, desirous of her fortune. To gain his ends Baring tries to force Alice to marry his son, James. Alice, however, is under the care of Henry Whitworth, an old friend of her mother's, who, although he has no legal jurisdiction over her, nevertheless thwarts the plans of her guardians in several instances. Baring spirits Alice away from Whitworth and confines her in his own home. She escapes and flees to Whitworth in the middle of the night. Both realize that her guardians can claim her legally, and for a time both are confronted with the problem of escaping them. Alice comes to an amazing decision, which startles Whitworth out of his wits. It is that she shall marry him and thus dissolve the guardianship.

FOX FILM CORP.

THE SOUL OF SATAN (Five Parts—Aug. 18).—The cast: Miriam Lee (Gladys Brockwell); Joe Valdez (Bertram Grassby); "Lucky" Carson (Charles Clary); Alden Lee (William Burress); "Chicago" Stone (Josef Swickard); Fanny Stone (Gerard Alexander); Jim Calvert (Norbet Myles); Hazel Valdez (Lucille Young); Miriam's brother (Frankie Lee); Miriam's sister (Marie Kiernan). Directed by Otis Turner.

The story centers about Miriam Lee, whose life of drudgery is unrelieved until Joe Valdez enters it. She does not know that Joe in years past had eloped with Jim Calvert's wife and had been driven from the mining settlement where the event took place. Calvert had sworn he would find Valdez and have his revenge.

Miriam's intimacy with Joe has its inevitable result. Her father forces her from the house, and Joe, simulating sympathy, offers marriage. Joe stages a fake ceremony, but the girl suspects nothing. She rejoices in being joined legally (as she thinks) to the man she has always loved, despite his faults.

Joe prospers as the manager of a high-class gambling club, and Miriam herself becomes known as Myrtle Beaumont, Queen of the Night. Through her Joe has been able to win huge amounts from the rich men she has lured to his establishment.

When "Lucky" Carson arrives in New York, Joe plans to ensnare him. He sends Miriam on her usual errand, but "Lucky" understands the game she is to play, and goes through with it. In the incidents which ensue Carson recognizes Joe Valdez and telegraphs to Calvert in the West. Then Valdez comes face to face with his bitterest enemy.

Miriam, who has prided herself on having been a faithful wife, now learns that she has never been a wife at all. And in the silence of the night, as Joe Valdez lies dead from a pistol shot of Calvert's, Carson tells his tale of love to Miriam.

A DOMESTIC HOUND (Foxfilm—Two Parts—Aug. 18).—The cast: Hank (Hank Mann); Shorty (J. C. Weldon); Mrs. Hank (Eva Nelson); Mrs. Shorty (Katherine Griffith); The Ingenue (Rena Rogers); The Heavy (Harry Moody); The Cop (Harry O'Connor); The Man-with-Money (Robert Kortman).

Hank is the hound. He has an able assistant domestic hound in Shorty. Both Hank and Shorty are at the beach on a vacation, but they are handicapped in their sightseeing trip by the presence of their wives. The hounds make several attempts to visit the pretty ingenue who has just come from the bath-house attired in her bathing suit. They do succeed in escaping from the hotel at which the spouses are staying and meet the ingenue on the beach.

Unfortunately for the hounds, however, the "Heavy" thinks enough of the ingenue to resent the intrusion. He shows his resentment plainly. Hank's face shows it also, when the "heavy" finishes. In the chase that follows, Hank and Shorty run faster along that beach than a man whose clothes have been stolen. Being only mortal, they grow weary of flight and seek refuge under two beach umbrellas.

When they find their wives are the holders of the umbrellas, the outlook does not seem particularly rosy to the hounds. They flee with more determination, if less speed, than before. That evening the two wander to a roof garden. Hank did not know that a man who had a grudge against him had dropped a big roll of bills in his pocket. Consequently, the hound begins dispensing greenbacks right and left until wives, "heavy," cop and the owner of the money appear. Hank and Shorty leave the scene via balloon.

JACK AND THE BEANSTALK (Standard Pictures—Ten Parts)—The cast: Francis and Jack (Francis Carpenter); Virginia and Princess Regina (Virginia Lee Corbin); Prince Rudolpho (Violet Radcliffe); the King of Cornwall (Carmen Fay DeRue); Blunderbore the giant (J. G. Tarver); the Giantess (Vera Lewis); Francis' Father (Ralph Lewis); Francis' Mother (Eleanor Washington); Virginia's Mother (Ione Glennon). Adapted for the screen by Mary Murillo. Directed by C. M. and S. A. Franklin.

William Fox's version of "Jack and the Beanstalk" requires a modern setting, or prologue. before Jack's adventures begin, bringing the film story right down to every-day reality. Jack, at first, is just a healthy, normal kiddie, who, in modern life is known as Francis, and his little neighbor is called Virginia. When we first meet them in the picture the mothers have gone to an afternoon tea, leaving Francis and Virginia with a nursemaid. She does the most natural thing in the world—reads them a story of "Jack and the Beanstalk." Then the wonderful idea comes to Francis. He is quite sure that all that is necessary to find the enchanted forest is to go and look for it. He has his toy automobile, too. And so he conspires with his little playmate, Virginia, and they start forth, with their dog "Sport," to find the place in the woods where the terrible giant lives.

Fortunately the children take plenty of wraps with them, for the inevitable dark creeps upon them and even the courage of the giant-seeker is taxed a bit as he listens to the screeching of the owls and he feels that sleep is creeping upon him. He cares tenderly for his little friend as she gathers her tiny robes about her, and finds the softest place on the ground. Then Francis himself succumbs, and the Dream God waves his magic wand, and lo, and behold, Francis becomes the Jack of Beanstalk fame, and Virginia is the Princess Regina.

Everybody knows the age-old story of "Jack and the Beanstalk." Jack sells his mother's cow for a sack of beans. Instead of being delighted with his bargain she scolds him roundly and throws the seeds out of the window. They are magic seeds, however, and sprout immediately. The next morning the seeds have become a wonderful vine, which grows until it has reached the clouds.

Jack is filled with the spirit of adventure, and, besides, his fairy godmother has told him that fortune awaits him if he but climb the stalk. Jack starts out and finally reaches the top, arriving in a country where a terrible giant dwells. Here again Jack's fairy godmother meets him and tells him he must slay the giant and secure all his riches, thus avenging Jack's father. While in the lands above the clouds Jack meets Princess Regina, whom he rescues from the giant. Jack finally causes the terrible giant's death and marries the Princess—and they live happily ever afterward.

In the epilogue Francis and Virginia, who are asleep in the wood, are found by their distracted parents and taken home.

THE GIRL WITHOUT A SOUL (Rolfe—Five Parts—Aug. 13).—The cast: Unity Beaumont and Priscilla Beaumont (Viola Dana); Hiram Miller (Robert Walker); Ivor (Fred Jones); Dominic Beaumont (Henry Hallam); Henrietta Hateman (Margaret Seddon); Louise (Margaret Vaughan). Written and directed by John H. Collins.

Dominic Beaumont, mender of violins, lives in a country village with his twin daughters, Unity and Priscilla. Priscilla has inherited a talent for music from her mother. Unity is skilled in household duties. On account of her lack of artistic temperament her father considers her "a girl without a soul." Ivor, a traveling musician, is attracted by Priscilla and gives her music lessons. He tells her that she has a great future before her. She is unsuspicious of the man's true character, and knows nothing of the girl Louise, whom Ivor also promised "to make," but who now lives in the city in abject misery.

Unity's sweetheart is the village blacksmith, Hiram Miller. To Hiram has been entrusted the church fund for a new organ. Hiram obtains Beaumont's permission to pay for a term at boarding school for Unity. Ivor tells Priscilla the only thing that stands in the way of her success is the lack of funds. Priscilla thinks of the money in Hiram's desk and steals it.

In Hiram's absence the church committeee go to his rooms to get the money to pay for the organ, which has arrived. They find the money gone. On Hiram's return to town with Unity from her graduation, he is accused of stealing the money entrusted to him. In vain he protests. Miss Hateman, on the committee, is also the village storekeeper, and she says that Hiram has plenty of money to buy dresses for young women.

Unity intercepts a note sent by Ivor to Priscilla, telling her where to meet him, so that they may elope. Donning Priscilla's cape, Unity keeps the appointment, and thinking she is her sister, Ivor takes her to a country hotel. He tells her that through a misunderstanding the minister will not be able to marry them until the morning, but asks at once for the money. The disappearance of the money is then clear to Unity. She denounces Ivor, locks him in the room and escapes. When she confronts her sister, Priscilla confesses to having stolen the money. She gives it to Unity, who promises to shield her.

Hiram is placed on trial. Everything looks black for him, when Unity rushes in with the money. She is accused of the theft. She protests her innocence but refuses to say who is the guilty person.

Ivor has escaped from the inn and comes for Priscilla. He asks at once for the money. Realizing that it is more for the money than herself that he has returned she leaves him and rushes to the courthouse, where she tells the truth. Hiram slips from the courthouse, and goes in pursuit of Ivor. He overtakes the musician and takes him back to the village. He hands Ivor over to the authorities.

Priscilla tells her father: "You have always misjudged Unity—it is she who has the soul, not I. I've been narrow and selfish, but I'm going to do better now."

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

BOBBY, BOY SCOUT (Aug. 6).—The cast: The Boy Scout (Bobby Connelly); His Mother (Mabel Ballin); Capt. Barnacle (William Shea).

The picture opens with Bobby engaged in scrubbing his little ragamuffin dog. Then it switches to his mother who has just been ordered out of her seaside cottage because of inability to pay the rent. She tells Bobby that they must move and the little fellow, saddened, goes for consolation to his friend, old Captain Barnacle. The old sailor hears Bobby's story and, to get his mind off it, takes him for an outing on an island across the bay.

On the island, they prepare to cook dinner and Bobby is sent to gather twigs for the fire. While thus engaged, he sees a pair of gun runners loading rifles on a boat and while he is watching the operations of one the other comes up and makes him a prisoner.

Bobby is tied hand and foot and left in a cave. From the men's conversation, he learns that they are violating the federal law and the Boy Scouts' oath comes to his mind. He gets free from his bonds, and, finding a large-calibre revolver, loads it with cartridges he had taken from the Captain's rifle. He surprises the smugglers at the mouth of the cave and commands them to throw up their hands. They, believing the gun unloaded, rush for him and he fires, narrowly missing one of the men.

Captain Barnacle, hearing the report of the shot, rushes to the cave and there helps Bobby make the men prisoners. They are taken back to the mainland and turned over to the federal officers. Later, Bobby is given a reward by the government for his action and the money saves his mother from losing her cottage.

BOBBIE, MOVIE DIRECTOR (Aug. 16). The cast: Bobby, screen star (Bobby Connelly); Bobby's leading ladv (Aida Horton); Bobby's mother (Mabel Ballin).

The picture opens with Bobby trying to work in a new picture when he does not feel like working and the director is despairingly trying to show the little star how to make a proper entrance. Bobby slips away to an adjoining studio, where Anita Stewart and a lot of grown-up Vitagraph stars are putting on a grand ball room scene. He keeps right on moving away from that director until he runs across a friendly driver of a fish wagon who carries him to where a lot of boys are playing marbles.

Bobby is happy. He gets into the game and is having a great time until Aida, his leading lady, perched on a gate, recognizes him.

"I know you," she pipes. "You're Bobby Connolley, who plays in the movies."

The boys all crowd about Bobby. The truant star admits the assertion and adds, when asked what he can do, that "I am a director." Furthermore, he orders them to follow him to the beach where he will show them what sort of a director he is and overrules their decision that little Aida shall not come along.

They all pile into a boat and on reaching the "location" Bobby proceeds to direct the picture "Pokyhauntus," with Aida in the leading role and himself as "John Smith- Injun." Bobby makes real Indians of them and with an old cigar box for a camera leaves little to the imagination.

Meanwhile, Bobby has been missed at home and so has his leading lady and all other members of the "Pokyhauntus" cast. Bobby's mother appeals to Capt. Barnacle, who spies the director and his company through his field glasses and goes to the rescue.

BOBBY, PHILANTHROPIST (Aug. 20).—The cast: The Philanthropist (Bobby Connelly); The Ragged Doll (Aida Horton); Bobby's Mother (mabel Ballin); Captain Barnacle (William Shea).

Bobby one day sees a big, rough man cruelly treating a kitten. Without hesitating, the youngster steps up to the man and upbraids him for his cruelty and takes the kitten away.

The second occasion of Bobby's chivalry comes a few days afterwards when Booby sees a crowd of boys bullying a newsgirl. Rolling up his sleeves and not stopping to count the odds against him, he pitches into the gang. The little girl, Miss Aida Horton, Vitagraph's 3-year-old, gamely backs up her champion, but Bobby is getting worsted when a policeman happens along and the boys scatter.

Bobby then listens to the girl's story she is afraid to go home. He promptly takes her to his home, where his mother welcomes her and decides to keep her as Bobby's sister, when she learns she is a waif whose parents are unknown. The little girl is named Mary and Bobby proudly takes her to Captain Barnacle to whom he introduces her as a "good scrapper."

BOBBY, THE PACIFIST (Aug. 20). The cast: Bobby (Bobby Connelly); Her (Aida Horton); Captain Barnacle (William Shea); Bobby's Mother (Mabel Ballin).

Bobby comes on two boys fighting and when he tries to interfere, the older one turns on him and strikes him. Bobby rolls up the sleeves of his Boy Scout coat and prepares to do battle. Then he recalls the injunction of his pastor, of turning the other cheek when your tormentor hits you on one. He drops his arms and the boy in disgust hits him again and walks away. To make matters worse, his sweetheart has witnessed it all.

A few days later, a ball, thrown in play, strikes a rough man in the face and Bobby, running away, takes refuge in a deserted house. He discovers it is the headquarters of a band of kidnappers and that nis little sweetheart is a prisoner in the next room.

Bobby realizes his opportunity is at hand to show her and his playmates he is not a "'fraid cat." He ties a rope across the top of a flight of stairs, and luring the kidnappers from the room knocks them over the rope and down the stairs. Then he barricades the door from the inside and heliographs to Captain Barnacle for help. The captain arrives just as the kidnappers break into the room.

BOBBY'S BRAVERY (Sept. 3).—The cast: Bobby (Bobby Connelly); His Teacher (Mabel Ballin); Steve (George Forth).

Bobby is in love with his school teacher, Miss Cynthia, and dreams he is a big, brave knight and rescues her from a robber band. To demonstrate his bravery he dashes into the school yard and frightens the children out of their wits. Then Bobby decides he will be a knight and his school chums his loyal warriors. So he "knights" them all by a most impressive oath and arms them with staves. All that is needed now is a bold robber to try to steal Miss Cynthia.

Sir Bobbie and his band are in the woods when the teacher and Steve, who is in love with her, pass, and Bobby hears Steve say something about stealing her and carrying her off. Steve, of course, is a bad robber, and Sir Bobby's work is cut out for him.

One night Steve takes Cynthia for a walk in the woods, and Bobby and his band are on hand to capture the robber. The boys all wear masks and have a sack to tie over Steve's head. The "robber" and Miss Cynthia are seated on a rock and she has just said "yes" when Bobby gives the word. The boys descend on Steve and get the bag over his head, but the man, after a brief struggle, throws them off. All flee but Bobby, and he is a much abashed Sir Galahad who stands before Miss Cynthia and tells her the whole story. But she and Steve are too happy not to forgive Bobby and his henchmen, but the youngsters, meeting later, vote to disband after taking a new and more solemn oath to remain "bacheloors fourever."

Hal Page becomes infatuated with Carline Shrefton, a woman who lives by her wits. Because of his inheritance she makes a play for him, and throws down her first suitor, Burt Staley.

Both men meet at her house one night; a quarrel starts between them and Staley is killed. Hal's brother, Stephen Page, is Mayor of the city. He arrives at the house, and when Hal confesses his guilt he spirits him out of the city, and arranges things so that Staley's body is picked up in an alley the next day.

One year later Steve is engaged to marry Marion Hayward, daughter of the district attorney. Hayward is about to convict a crooked political band headed by Jim Reede, who, strange to say, is married to Carline. The latter goes to the Mayor and threatens to expose him unless he gets district attorney to let up on her husband.

He refuses. She goes to the district attorney, who also refuses to let duty interfere with friendship. She sends for reporters and just when it looks as though exposure must come, Hal mysteriously turns up. He tells all that he did not kill Staley—took blame to shield the woman Carline. Staley was killed in a struggle with Carline.

Hayward verifies what he says, then sends for Carline and she breaks down under grilling. She signs a confession exonerating Hal. Reede is sent away.

JEWEL PRODUCTIONS, INC.

PAY ME (August).—The cast: Joe Lawson, alias "Killer" White (Lon Chaney): Martin (Ed Brown); Hal Curtis (William Clifford); Hilda Hendricks (Evelyn Selbie); "Mac" Jepson (Tom Wilson); Marta (Dorothy Phillips); Nita (Claire DuBrey); Bill, the Boss (William Stowell).

Hal Curtis and Joe Lawson, partners in the Unity Mine, have a disagreement. The latter, in a fit of anger, strangles Curtis, and accidentally shoots Curtis' wife. He then deserts his own wife and child, and elopes with Hilda Hendrick. As they are leaving, Hilda hears the cries of a child, and upon investigating, discovers Curtis' little daughter in the arms of her dead mother. She insists upon caring for the baby, and so Lawson has to consent that Curtis' daughter shall be taken along with them.

Seventeen years elapse, in which time Lawson has changed his name to White, and has become the prosperous owner of the Nugget, a dance-hall and gambling saloon, in the heart of the lumber country. There his record as a "bad man" has earned him the prefix of "Killer." His partner's daughter, known as Marta, now a beautiful young woman, is discovered in the fields by a lumberjack, who becomes interested in her at once. That night, much to his disappointment and chagrin, he finds Marta, dressed in a bizarre costume, acting as custodion of the roulette wheel in the "Killer's" establishment. However, he learns with relief that she is forced to do this by her foster-parent, and at once constitutes himself her protector, which is not all to the liking of "Mac" Jepson, also in love with the girl.

Quite by chance, a stranger wanders into the Nugget. He is Hal Curtis, and in the worn, haggard woman who is in the saloon he recognizes Hilda, and questions her as to the whereabouts of his daughter. She points across the room to the roulette wheel, where Marta is presiding. Hal, enraged, swears vengeance on the "Killer," and is backed up by the young lumberjack and his gang from the camps. There is a fight between Jepson and Marta's proctector, who is none other than "Bill" Lawson, son of the "Killer," whom he deserted. Bill bests Jepson, and brings on a general fight between the lumberjacks and the employees of the Nugget. Just as Curtis, with murder in his heart, aims his gun at the "Killer," a shot rings out and cheats him of his vengeance. Hilda, who has been persecuted and abused bv White from the day she ran away with him, is the murderess.

On his deathbed White tries to make what amends he can for his many misdeeds. He dies without his son's becoming aware of his identity, tell him that Marta is not his daughter, but that of Curtis, and the two young people go forth into life together.

BUTTERFLY PICTURES.

THE LAIR OF THE WOLF (Five Parts—Aug. 20).—The cast: Margaret Dennis (Gretchen Lederer); Oliver Cathcart (Joseph Girard); Jim Dennis (Chester Bennett); Raymond Taylor (Val Paul); Robert Shepherd (Chas. Mailes); Bess Snepherd (Peggy Custer); Steve Taylor (Donna Drew); Old Man Taylor (George Berrell). Scenario by E. Magnus Ingleton. Produced by Chas. Swickard.

Oliver Cathcart's manners are perfect, thinks Margaret Dennis, a widow, as she enters his office with her son, Jim, to secure a position from the latter. Cathcart has a charming personality, but behind it lies a sensual and brutal nature. He is feared by his employees, among whom is Raymond Taylor, a young man whose family has been ruined in a financial deal with Cathcart. His mother died as a result and his father, Old Man Taylor, is now a drunkard, depending entirely upon the eighteen-year-old sister, Steve. Raymond and the old man vow to get revenge on Cathcart. Jim learns of Cathcart's bad reputation. Later when she announces that she is going to marry Cathcart, Jim makes his mother choose between him and Cathcart, and tells her he never wants to see her again. They go to a country estate called "The Pines," but by the villagers, "The House of Gloom." Here Margaret learns of her husband's true character.

The garden of "The Pines" is cared for by Robert Shepherd, a good man who worships his daughter, Bess. Near them live the Taylors. Steve and Bess are good friends. Old Man Taylor pals with The Man With the Crutch, a short, thin, sinister, lame man, who also craves vengeance on Cathcart because of the latter's treatment of a sister. He and Taylor plan revenge together, and finally the cripple offers to pay Taylor for committing the murder.

Meanwhile, Steve, full of romance and a longing for adventure, and with the ten dollars she has earned by washing, sets out, dressed in boy's clothes, leaving a note to say that she has gone out to see the world. Raymond visits his people and also Milly, Margaret's maid, and his sweetheart. Margaret gives him a message to take to Jim. Cathcart catches Raymond and Jim talking. He fires Raymond because he will not say what they were talking about. Jim wires his mother that he will come to her.

Margaret, having borne Cathcart's brutality long enough, will not let him in when he arrives at "The Pines." He sends Shepherd to the village for a locksmith, but Shepherd goes only a short distance, for he meets a man who proffers to give the message to the locksmith.

Jim arrives and promises to take his mother away the next day. When he leaves by way of a French window he is seen by Milly and Taylor. He gets caught in a rainstorm and seeks shelter in a deserted hut, where Steve is now trying to sleep. He thinks Steve a boy and they become friends. Raymond finds the note by Steve and, thinking Cathcart responsible, goes to the village tavern to find his father and there tells the landlord that Steve has gone away and that Cathcart has discharged him. Raymond starts out to "get" him.

That night Cathcart is killed. Milly testifies to seeing Jim lurking about "The Pines," to the message sent him by Margaret and to the wire received from Jim. Margaret hires one of the best lawyers available and he soon learn's that Jim's only chance is in finding Steve, who can furnish the only conclusive evidence in his favor, for she knows he was a mile away from the house at the time of the murder.

Margaret can bear the suffering of her son no longer and says she killed Cathcart, but Jim urges the court not to believe her. Then the landlord who heard Raymond's threat to "get" Cathcart testifies, and suspicions is cast at Raymond. Robert Shepherd confesses that he killed Cathcart, because, returning to the lodge the night he was sent for the locksmith, he found Cathcart there struggling with Bess. Cathcart's brutality to her aroused for the first time in his life an overpowering passion of hate, which could be wiped out only by killing. Steve, having read an advertisement that a man's life depended upon her and that she was wanted in court, arrives and relates her story. It frees Jim. Shepherd is acquitted on the plea of temporary derangement.

Some time has passed. An odd wedding takes place in the deserted hut where Jim and Steve first met. The only witnesses of the ceremony are Raymond and Milly. Old Man Taylor, because of the shock to his weak mentality, caused by the murder of Cathcart, dies.

STRAIGHT SHOOTING (Five Parts—Aug. 27).—The cast: "Cheyenne" Harry (Harry Carey), "Thunder" Flint (Duke Lee), "Sweetwater" Sims (George Berrell), His Daughter Joan (Molly Malone); His Son (Ted Brooks); Danny Morgan (Hoot Gibson); Black-Eyed Pete (Milt Brown). Produced by Jack Ford.

"I am only a girl—not a fighter. But I would not wage war on women or—old men," said Joan. Danny Morgan uncovered, stared at her with open admiration, then stuttered: "Neither will I. I'm with you." "Thunder" Flint, cattle king, had reached a cruel resolve—to drive the Nestors out of the country. To "Sweetwater" Sims, their leader, he sent warning, delivered by Danny to Joan, daughter of the Nestors. Flint sends the foreman to find "Cheyenne" Harry for "the work." Harry is found asleep in a saloon, where every one is afraid of him as a "gunman." Harry agrees to meet Flint in Diablo.

At their rendezvous near Diablo, Black-Eyed Pete and his gang are splitting the spoils of a marauding expedition. Harry meets two of the outlaws, who tell him they are cached up near the Big Rock. They seem to be friends.

Danny and Ted, "Sweetwater" Sims' son, enter the saloon at Diablo together. There they come upon Harry, who, hearing that Ted is a Nestor, begins insulting him and shoots at both of them, but they escape. Flint does not place all of his trust in "Cheyenne" Harry, and sends for "Placer" Fremont, a gunman of unsavory reputation. Fremont and Harry meet at the saloon; each is suspicious of the other; each handles his gun while he drinks. Flint enters and sizes up the situation. Harry asks Flint if Fremont is another "killer" he has imported. Flint introduces Harry and Fremont, who merely extend a casual greeting. Flint is surprised and assures them that there is no cause for trouble, as they are both on the same job and there is plenty of work to be done.

Ted and Danny ride to the cabin to tell Sims that Flint's "killers" have arrived and to prepare for trouble. Joan is greatly agitated. The next day Ted goes for a bucket of water and finds a sign warning the public that the spring is private property and that trespassers will be shot on sight. Fremont, hidden in a tree, raises his rifle and fires at Ted, who rolls down the bank—dead. Joan tells her father where Ted has gone they rush to the spring and are grieving over the body of the boy when Harry rides by. The father tells Harry that he supposes he is one of the "killers," come to gloat over their "dirty work," but Harry insists that he did not know of their trouble, that he is a man and doesn't make war on children and old men. Harry tells Joan that if this is a sample of the work he was brought here for he's through, and from now on she can count on him whenever she needs him. Harry later informs the foreman that he's through with Flint and his outfit.

When Flint hears that Harry cannot be depended upon, he sends Fremont to Diablo to "get" Harry. But Danny, hearing these instructions, warns Harry, who lays for Fremont, and, in the act of being shot, kills Fremont. Flint and his gang start out that night.

Danny has told Sims and Joan of the coming raid, and the girl rides out to warn all the Nestors, who ride from all directions to the cabin. Harry meets Joan and tells her that there are so many of the raiders that unless they get help they are lost. He rides to the camp of Black-Eyed Pete, where he asks for help. The outlaws rush to the battle, arriving in time to save the Nestors.

The next day while Joan is caring for Danny's wounds, Sims asks Harry to remain at the cabin, but Harry declines, saying that there is something "just over yonder" which keeps calling to him. He tells Sims that he will let them know at sundown. Danny comes to him as he is thinking out his problem. Harry tells him to go back to the little girl. Joan is disappointed at first to see Danny instead of Cheyenne, who is left facing the setting sun alone.

HER MERRY MIX-UP (Aug. 7).—The cast: The Girl (Margaret Gibson); Her Husband (James Harrison); Her Friend (?) (Ethel Lynne); Her Brother (Eugene Corey); Basement Ben (Eddie Gribbon).

Margaret, in clandestine consultation with a book agent regarding a birthday gift for her husband, Jimmy, is discovered when he returns home unexpectedly. She sends the agent hurrying off and refuses to reveal his identity to her husband, who leaves the house in anger. Ethel, to whom he tells his troubles, later sees Margaret get into a taxicab with her brother, who is spending an hour or two with her between trains. Notified of this, Jimmy, who does not know the brother, follows the pair to a cafe, and later sees Gene kiss Margaret bood-bye.

In the meantime, Basement Ben, the bold burglar, burgles the bungalow of James and Margaret, and when Gene decides to pay a final visit to his sister's home, hides in a closet with the swag. As Gene sits awaiting his sister's return a bill collector calls, and also decides to wait. When the furious Jimmy is seen coming up the walk flourishing a gun, the two take refuge in the same closet that holds the burglar, and all crouch in fear and trembling while Jimmy rages outside. His jealous suspicions are confirmed when he finds on the library table a bouquet of flowers bearing a loving message from the giver, but really left at Jimmy's house by mistake.

While he is out of the room, Margaret and the book agent arrive to make a final decision on the gift for Jimmy, and when Margaret hears her husband approaching she hastily shoves the agent into the closet, which is already full to overflowing. Jealous Jimmy shoots through the closet door when he finds the book agent's hat on the library table, and the four trembling ones file into the room. After explanations are made, Basement Ben quietly sneaks out with his loaded suit case, only to run into the arms of a cop.

A SMOKEY LOVE AFFAIR (Aug. 14).—The cast: The Girl (Betty Compson); The Boy (James Harrison); The Detective (Eddie Gribbon).

Jimmy starts from the office for a two weeks' vacation at the beach. On the train he sees Betty, also bound for the seashore, and attempts to become acquainted with her. Meeting with continued rebuffs, he resolves to win her in spite of everything, and when they arrive at the beach he follows her to the hotel, and incidentally arouses the animosity of the house detective. Jimmy secures a room across the hall from Betty's, and when she orders her breakfast served in her room the persistent Jimmy bribes the waiter to exchange coats with him, so that he may take the tray in to her. Betty calls the house detective, and has Jimmy ejected. When she goes for a ride on the board walk in a motor chair, it is Jimmy who turns up as the driver, and narrowly escapes arrest.

•At length the love-sick swain hits upon a means of gaining her favor, and decides to rescue her from a fake fire. Lighting a towel, he places it against her door, and when the smoke pours into her room she is glad to be carried out by her heroic suitor. When she discovers his deception she is furious, and returns to her room. By chance a real fire breaks out, and when Jimmy again cries out a warning at her door she refuses to respond. In desperation he at length breaks in her door, and Betty picks up a shoe and knocks him senseless. At this juncture she is hurried out by firemen, and when she discovers that the hotel is really on fire she returns with the men to rescue the unconscious Jimmy. A kiss restores him to consciousness, and Betty nurses her hero back to health.

THE LESSON (August).—The cast: Helen Drayton (Constance Talmadge); "Chet" Vernon (Tom Moore); John Galvin (Herbert Heyes); "Tub" Martin (Walter Hiers); Henry Hammond (Joseph Smiley); Mrs. Hammond (Lillian Rambeau); Ada Thompson (Dorothy Green); Harriet Reeves (Christy Walker). Direction Charles Giblyn.

In a small American town, Helen Drayton, the belle of the neighborhood, has for a long time been "going with" Chet Vernon, but while she likes Chet she is inclined to rebel at not being allowed a wider range of choice. So she welcomes the visit of John Galvin, a young architect. A swift courtship is followed by an elopement, and Helen finds herself keeping house for a young husband who has still to make his place in the world. But while Galvin can always find plenty of money to spend downtown, he is stingy with Helen, expecting her to finance a whole wardrobe with a ten dollar bill. Through Mrs. Hammond, wife of one of Galvin's business acquaintances, Helen finds a means of getting money by exercising her talents for interior decorating.

Meanwhile Chet Vernon, tired of the lack of opportunities in the little town, also comes to the city. With a mutual friend he calls on Helen, and they arrange a theater party, Galvin excusing himself on the ground of important business. After the theater Chet, Helen and their friend go to a cafe, and Chet sees Galvin buying wine for Ada Thompson, the niece and secretary of Hammond. He does not tell Helen, however.

The Hammonds invite Helen and Galvin to their seashore home for a house party, and Calvin's attentions to Ada Thompson are very noticeable. Helen suspects nothing, however, until one afternoon, passing a secluded summer-house, she sees something which causes her to rush to her room, pack her grip and hurry to the city. Galvin follows her, and in a stormy scene she tells him that he has not even been supporting her.

Helen then embarks in her decorating business on a large scale, obtains a divorce and eventually finds happiness with her girlhood sweetheart.

THE LIVING BOOK OF NATURE (By Raymond L. Ditmars—Babies of the Farm).—A pleasing picture of pigs, kittens, calves, infant birds and the like, and prepared along sympathetic and entertaining lines. The theme couples the lives of the commoner creatures with animals of the wiles and displays their play, tribulations—and dangers. Everybody is interested in baby animals, and the wonderful clarity of photography in this picture imparts the nearest possible impression to life itself upon the screen.

Attractive titles, brimful of information, but radiating freshness and vigor, flow through the scenes.

Stronger Light

The light from an Alternating Current arc comes alternating from both carbons, while from a Direct Current arc it always comes from the same carbon. The Direct Current arc can therefore be arranged so that the maximum amount of its light always passes through the lens, while it is impossible to do this with an Alternating Current arc. A Direct Current arc also gives off more light for the same current than an Alternating Current.

milks Rokeby regularly for large sums of money. When Rokeby's ward, Marie Dacre, becomes infatuated with a young fortune hunter, the latter falls into the clutches of Donavan and when Marie finally turns the fortune hunter down the two men form a diabolical plot to get the girl's money. This plot almost succeeds, but is finally frustrated in a remarkable manner by Rokeby. Then Rokeby's long love for his young ward meets the reward it merits.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES CORP.

PARAMOUNT-BRAY PICTOGRAPHS. — The 80th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs shows the working of the Fansworth Institute of New York City, where the deaf and dumb are taught to hear and talk by means of the sense of feeling.

Otto Luck is also seen in this number, in "A Flivvered Romance," perhaps the most amusing cartoon in which this unique character has yet appeared.

The beach sports in southern California showing scores of girls in bathing suits that are not considered conventional at all bathing beaches, also makes an excellent hot-weather attraction.

PARAMOUNT-BRAY PICTOGRAPHS. — The 81st release of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs contain, for the first time after a long absence, another of the inimitable Colonel Heeza Liar animated cartoons. The Colonel is seen as a temperance advocate, but an unfortunate experience in the movies causes him to relinquish his ideas on the subject.

"A Day at Coney Island" is also shown in this release; a subject that is of great interest to millions all over the country who have never been fortunate enough to visit the great amusement centre.

A land and water submarine, the invention of Simon Lake, makes an exceptionally interesting feature of this issue, inasmuch as it is an amplification of the under-water boat.

A series of interesting and instructive views of the tea industry in China and Ceylon are also contained in this number.

IVAN FILM PRODUCTIONS, INC.

BABBLING TONGUES (Six Parts—August—State Rights Production).—The cast: Paul, a young author (James Morrison); Therese Moreau (Grace Valentine); Jose Moreau, Therese's husband (Arthur Donaldson); Louis Moreau, Jose's brother (Paul Capellani); Marie Moreau, Louis' wife (Louise Beaudet); Felix, their son (Gladden James); Henrietti, his sister (Carolyn Birch); Viscount de Bellerive (Richard Tucker); M. Ettiene Le Moyne (Robert E. Hill). Written by William Humphrey and George E. Hall. Directed by William Humphrey.

Jose Moreau, a rich merchant about forty years of age, is ideally married to Therese, a beautiful woman in her early twenties, who adores him. He is a generous and kindly man, and upon the death of an old and honored friend, to whose assistance in the past he owes his present fortune, he adopts into his household the son of this friend, Paul. Paul is twenty-six years old; he reads poems and writes plays, and is a thoroughly fine fellow. Paul feels an almost filial affection for Mons. Jose and a wholesome brotherly friendship for Therese. He accompanies Jose and Therese everywhere in the social world; he sits in their box at the opera, acting as Therese's escort when her husband is detained by business.

Society, with sinister imagination, begins to look askance at the triangulated household. tongues begin to wag, and gossip grows. Tidings of the evil talk about town are brought to Mons. Jose by his brother, Louis, who advises that Paul had better be requested to live in quarters of his own. Jose repels the suggestion as insulting; but Louis persists that only by such a course may the family name be rendered unimpeachable upon the public tongue.

Paul, to still the evil rumors, goes to live in a studio alone. This simple move on his part suggests to everybody that he must have had a real motive for making it. Gossip increases, instead of diminishing; and the emotions of Therese and Jose and himself are stirred to the point of nervous tensity. Mons. Jose in spite of his own sweet reasonableness, begins subtly to wonder if there could be, by any possibility, any basis for his brother's vehemence. Louis' wife, Marie, repeats the talk of the town to Therese, and turns her imagination inward, till it falters in self-questioning. The world at large whispers unthinkable and tragic possibilities to the poetic and self-searching mind of Paul. He resolves to seek release in leaving for foreign shores. But before he can sail away he overhears, in a fashionable cafe, a remark which casts a slur on Therese, and strikes the speaker of the insult in the face.

A duel is forthwith arranged to take place in a vacant studio adjacent to Paul's. When Mons. Jose learns about it, he is troubled by the idea that another man should be fighting for his wife, and rushes forthwith to wreak vengeance himself on the traducer. Therese hears the news, and in order to prevent both her husband and Paul from endangering their lives, she rushes to Paul's rooms to urge him to forestall hostilities. Meanwhile her husband encounters the slanderer, and is severely wounded. He is carried to Paul's studio. Hearing people coming, Therese hides herself in Paul's bedroom, where she is discovered by her husband's attendants. Jose, wounded and enfevered, now at last believes the worst.

Paul seeks and slays Jose's assailant. But now the whole world credits what the whole world has been whispering. In vain Paul and Therese protest their innocence to Louis and his wife. In vain they plead with the kindly and noble man they both revere and love. Jose curses them, and dies believing in their guilt. Then at last, when they find themselves cast forth isolate by the entire world, their common tragic loneliness draws them to each other. They are given to each other by the world. The insidious purpose of babbling tongues has been accomplished; Paul takes Therese for his own.

TRIANGLE FILM CORPORATION.

THEY'RE OFF (Five Parts—Aug. 19).—The cast: Rita Hackett (Enid Bennett); Randolph Manners (Rowland Lee); Daniel Hackett (Melbourne MacDowell); Judge Peterson (Walter Whitman); Uncle Mose (Samuel Lincoln). Directed by Roy Neill.

While Daniel Hackett, millionaire broker and turfman, with his daughter Rita was on a tour of the South their machine broke down near an old Southern mansion. Rita expressed a desire of owning a home like it. Hackett became angered when told by the owner, Randolph Manners, that it was not for sale, and informed him that he usually got what he went after. Hackett, learning that the young Southerner was heavily interested in the tobacco market, forced him, through his Wall street manipulations, to sell the estate and everything else he owned.

The new owners took possession. Rita found an old crinoline dress which she put on. Thus garbed she accidentally ran into young Manners and his colored servant, Mose. Recognizing the dress as his dead mother's wedding gown, he ignored her. Realizing what she had done, Rita determined to see Randolph and explain. Learning that he had taken a temporary residence in the old training quarters, Rita feigned a fall from her horse near the place. Randolph ran to her assistance and took her to his cabin. Rita burst out laughing and Randolph, realizing the trick she had played on him, became angered. Mose left them alone. When Rita learned how her father had forced the estate from him she determined to regain it for him.

Upon returning to the mansion, her father presented her with the deed to the estate, which she refused, explaining that she had learned how he had obtained it. He was dumbfounded, but instead gave her a black horse, Satan, which he had entered in the coming race, explaining that another one of his horses, Wasp, would win but that Satan would take second place.

Rita found Randolph worried over the fact that his horse Vixen had gone lame and could not be entered in the race, but consoled him by telling of her scheme to paint Satan up with white feet and enter him in the race against Wasp, she to be the jockey. Despite Randolph's protests, Rita made him accept a bill of sale for Satan. Rita won the race and also Randolph. Hackett, upon trying to purchase Satan, was told that the mansion would be the only consideration and agreed. Upon learning that the horse was Satan and the jockey Rita, he became indignant, but after noting the very apparent interest between Rita and Randolph decided that he hadn't lost anything, anyway.

WOODEN SHOES (Five Parts—Aug. 26).—"Pampy," a Dutch girl, has an invalid father dependent upon her for support. With her companion, Hans, the fat boy, she proves a quaint sight as she clutters up and down the cobbled street in her wooden shoes selling flowers to the tourists who visit the village and serving as their guide. "Pampy's" father dies leaving her alone and penniless with her only hope for the future being to get to America where her grandfather will provide for her.

"Pampy's" father before his death had written to the grandfather about "Pampy," but the answer had been intercepted by the unscrupulous proprietress of the inn where "Pampy" stays. Later on we find her and her companion in America having come over in the steerage. How "Pampy" found her grandfather as well as the artist for whom she had posed in Holland and whose interest in her from their separation had developed into a strong love makes one of the most charming stories ever transferred to the screen.

New York City.

Gentlemen

I want you to know that after experimenting with several other makes of machines we have finally decided to ag in use the Simplex projectors simply because we have been convinced that there is nothing on the market that will give the net results obtained from the Simplex projectors.

As you know, the Rialto standard demands the very finest work possible, regardless of expense, and it is the aim of the writer at all times to improve and to not alone keep up the standard but to make it better and better, and in adapting the Simplex machines for this theatre after these experiments is a tribute to you and your product that I know you will be glad to receive

Very truly yours,

SLRothapfel

FOTOPLAY YOUR PICTURES

Follow the crowds to the successful picture house. They go eager and expectant and leave pleased and satisfied. They become regular patrons—and bring their friends. They boost the pictures—for better music makes better pictures.

The FOTOPLAYER registers the joys and griefs of the silent drama with masterly expression. Your comedies get bigger laughs—Your dramas become more intense. The traps for laughter—The stops for the tonal beauty of the orchestral organ make your audience catch the thought and the spirit of the picture.

The FOTOPLAYER renders that harmony of music and screen action essential to artistic and box-office success. The instrument may be played manually or by hand-cut rolls—requiring no experienced operator.

The FOTOPLAYER operates all day and half the night—built simple and strong to withstand long and hard service—it is the only practical instrument for your house. The FOTOPLAYER solves your music problem.

We construct orchestral pipe organs to meet your specifications

SPEER HOLD-ARK CARBONS

clearly demonstrate the advantages of a metal-coated carbon in the lower holder.

The illustrations present craters that are perfectly formed. The hard core holds the arc—the metal coating offers a minimum resistance—the result is an intense white light, and a picture projected without a flicker.

Exhibitors Are Making Large Extra Profits

Regardless of Population

Theatres in the biggest cities and the smallest towns both, are making $2.00 to $15.00 clear profit daily from the Butter-Kist Pop Corn Machine. This machine is just what every theatre needs to pay off the rising expenses of film rental, etc. Occupies only 5 square feet of floor space—little more than a chair. Plenty of room in the lobby or down by the piano. Pays 233⅓ per cent on investment. Draws people from blocks around. Increases theatre attendance. Actual records from theatre managers to prove it.

BUTTER-KIST Pop Corn Machine

Self-operating—requires no extra help or stock investment. We'll send signed evidence that men in your business are earning $600 to $3120 a year Net Profit from this great invention. No other makes Butter-Kist Pop Corn with the toasty flavor—advertised to millions of magazine readers at our expense. Over 60,000,000 packages sold last year. Send the coupon for photographs, proof of profits, price and easy terms.

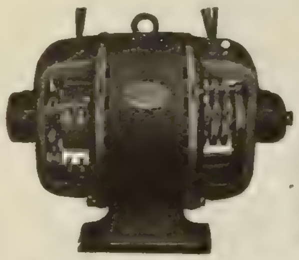
"MARTIN" ROTARY CONVERTER



FOR REAL SUN-LIT PICTURES

PERFECT REEL DISSOLVING

The voltage of the "MARTIN" polyphase converter is maintained constant, so that the starting of the second arc does not disturb the light given by the first, making the dissolving of the reels as simple as if the arcs were operated in a Direct Current district. Our emergency panel does away with expensive compensarcs and cuts the wiring and installation cost in half.

Outside and Inside

An attractive exterior will draw strangers into your theatre, but clear pictures are necessary to bring them back a second time.

An absolutely essential factor in securing clear and sharply defined pictures is a lens of the finest quality.

You can purchase a

Marlux

lens for a sum you would spend without a moment's hesitation upon some detail of exterior decoration.

If you are in the picture business to make money get a Marlux lens at once, and so make certain that no other theatre is showing clearer pictures.

Reduce Your Operating Cost and Get More Uniform Lighting

by equipping your present carbon-arc machine with the Sheck Universal Adapter for the New Mazda Projector Lamps.

YOU will want to adopt this new, modern idea because it will make your theatre the most popular in town.

Projection with the new Sheck Universal Adapter and Mazda Projector Lamps has proven a success in the theatres where used on test during the past two years.

Our first announcement received the attention and interest of hundreds of progressive exhibitors.

YOUR theatre can be equipped with the Sheck Universal Adapter without interrupting your program schedule, and at a cost no greater than the saving in bills for electric current effected by the new equipment during the first year.

So at no extra cost you will be able to get better projection on the screen, eliminate "flicker" and eye strain, and therefore get the crowds in your theatre.

This is a progressive proposition for progressive exhibitors. Write for the facts, TODAY!

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG

and

Her Own Company

THIS supreme screen favorite is the first to be announced in the list of great screen stars and directors, whose productions are to be released and marketed through SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION, details of which organization are presented on the following page.

Clara Kimball Young will be seen as the star of eight pictures to be released during the coming year. The great following which this splendid emotional actress gained with "The Common Law," "The Price She Paid," and "The Easiest Way" will eagerly welcome her appearance in the first of these eight productions — "Magda," a photoplay adapted from the famous play of the same name.

Select Pictures

WITH this announcement SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION introduces itself. SELECT PICTURES will offer to exhibitors the productions of the screen's most brilliant stars and directors. The first of its presentations is described on the preceding page.

SELECT stands for what its name implies; a medium for the distribution of the most select, the most choice, the most individual productions of film manufacturers anywhere and everywhere.

SELECT has advantages not shared by any other distributing organization in the film industry. Its producers are stars and directors whose places as great box-office attractions have been won through years of diligent service to the motion picture public of the world. SELECT'S personnel is composed of men who have fashioned successful careers because their progressive ideas have coincided constantly with the ideas of the progressive exhibitors.

SELECT PICTURES enters the field of photoplay distribution fully grown, its stars and directors bearing names that are household words throughout the land. Its organization is composed of branches situated in all the large cities of the United States. The following SELECT exchanges are now open for bookings:

OUR exhibitors everywhere are calling Klever Komedies "the single reel comedies with a story." Instead of being an insult to the intelligence of even an average man Victor Moore Comedies are really very funny, and "The Cinderella Husband" is a fair example.

Give single reel comedies a chance. You will find these safe, sane and funny. The best theatres show them—why not you?

"Polly Of The Circus" Cost $250,000

AND GOLDWYN presents this to the exhibitors of America at the regularly scheduled price with the hope and the certain knowledge that every exhibitor playing it will reap immense profits.

A production so big that it would make a fortune if handled separately—a picture so fine that many who have seen it say: "Why do you let it go out to exhibitors at regular contract prices?"

And it is true that it is worth double or triple the price you pay for it under a Goldwyn contract. . . . But a group of skilled and earnest people have worked a year to make this and other pictures like it, firm in the belief that exhibitors everywhere will support a company capable of such achievements as Goldwyn Pictures.

These productions are worth more than we ask for them and they will make more money for exhibitors than any pictures now being made by any other producing organization in the world.

Mutual Pictures for the Coming Year

By JOHN R. FREULER, President Mutual Film Corporation

In this statement I am privileged to announce to Exhibitors throughout America the plans of the Mutual Film Corporation for the coming year—plans which I believe will mean much to those interested in box-office receipts.

For the Season of 1917-1918, the Mutual Film Corporation will release eight Mutual Pictures—"BIG STARS ONLY"—every month—Two Big Star Features Each Week. These attractions will include the Charles Frohman Successes in Motion Pictures and a complete new variety of high class feature productions by prominent authors and playwrights.

Among the stars to be presented in these coming Mutual Pictures are Mary Miles Minter, Ann Murdock, Gail Kane, William Gillette, Julia Sanderson, William Russell, Olive Tell, Juliette Day, Edna Goodrich, Margarita Fischer, Anita King and others.

These attractions will be of the highest class in every respect. They will be directed by such noted directors as Albert Capellani, Rollin Sturgeon, Lloyd Ingraham, Edward Sloman, John B. O'Brien, Henry King, Dell Henderson and Harry Pollard.

They will be leased to Exhibitors under the Mutual's New Service Contract, providing from five to ten reels daily—one to seven days each week—or they may be booked in series of stars, on open booking or on a basis of two or more Mutual Pictures—"BIG STARS ONLY"—each week regularly.

This new Mutual Policy for 1917-18 has just been put into effect in all our exchanges. Exhibitors who have not yet received detailed information regarding booking dates, prices, etc., should communicate immediately with the nearest Mutual Exchange, before the territory is closed.

Raise your admission to 15c and play Mutual Pictures—"BIG STARS ONLY"—under the new Mutual Policy of TWO-A-WEEK.

READ
These Reviews!

Read what the trade journal reviewers say after witnessing the opening installments of Signal's greatest serial:

WILLIAM J. McGRATH In Motion Picture News Says:

"Here is Helen Holmes once again in a railroad story—not a repetition of previous Helen Holmes productions, but something new! It has a mystery angle that is as fresh and as new as a dime out of the mint. It is the ideal serial with every chapter a whetter of appetite for what is to come. As one looks at it he is forced to commend inwardly and outwardly too, the creative ability of Frederick Bennett, well known war correspondent, who wrote the scenario, and the genius of J. P. McGowan who directed it. It is a Helen Holmes picture in the first place and that gives it a great get-away. Then, to cinch the prediction of its success, is that all-absorbing, new and tantalizing mystery tang that is bound to pervade it to the end."

Exhibitor's Herald Says:

". . full of action and suspense. There is no reason why this serial should not excel any of the previous Helen Holmes railroad photo-novels. There is thrill after thrill and every foot of celluloid contains action."

Motography Says:

"It is 'sure-fire.' The mystery element should make it interesting to even those who do not care primarily for railroad thrills."

Exhibitor's Trade Review Says:

'There are no dull moments, no dragging, there is plenty of quick action and an unbroken chain of thrills."

YOU can't pull a ton with a hair! You can't drive a nail with a feather!! Neither can you run your business successfully unless you constantly work for yourself!!

You rent a special picture! You can only run it for a fixed time at a fixed price. Why? You only rent!

You rent a special picture! It makes a hit. You want a rebooking. You can't get it. Why? Your nearest competitor has already secured it to profit by your work.

You will see, if you analyze this situation, that you are renting star features without protection. Nothing is assured to you.

Now, why not buy the film for a year instead of renting it! Get an unlimited run with a rebooking privilege. Secure control of a restricted exhibiting district under a twelve-months contract, which you only can cancel.

This all costs more, but cutting out competition makes it worth more. You pay for fire insurance as assurance against loss.

Buy the picture to assure profit; don't rent and really only advertise a later run for a competitor. Actual ownership for one year is worth the difference in price.

Read the Paralta Plan book on common sense feature booking and then—

TRIANGLE DISTRIBUTING CORP.

TRIANGLE

The Triangle Code

Story. Triangle will secure the best stories that are written — stories that have been widely read — stories by the best known authors in the country — stories with a "punch."

Production. Triangle has always stood for high quality in production — pictures with a real box office value. This same high standard will be absolutely maintained.

Price. Triangle productions will be sold at prices that will enable an exhibitor to pay for his film service and other expenses and retain a profit for himself. The small town as well as the city exhibitor will be considered. No exhibitor need advance admission prices for Triangle plays.

Star. Triangle has made stars and will continue to make them. Read over the list of the stars of to-day and see how many were made by Triangle. Triangle stars, moreover, will be offered at a price that guarantees a profit to the exhibitor.

Equipment. Triangle studios at Culver City and Hollywood, Cal., are the finest in the country. No producing company has at its command studio facilities that are the equal of Triangle's.

Trade Mark. The Triangle trade mark is a real asset to exhibitors, for in the minds of the public it stands for motion picture quality.

Triangle is a business proposition for business men. Watch Triangle grow.

The ITALIAN BATTLE FRONT

Bigger Business Can't Be Done

fills the sitting and standing room of every large, legitimate theatre in every city in which it is shown at every performance at prices up to $2.00
and keeps it up week in and week out

Then

it just isn't possible to obtain a bigger box-office attraction

Such is the record of "The Italian Battlefront" in New York, Pittsburg, Boston everywhere it has thus far played.

MRS. CASTLE PILOTS AN AEROPLANE

Pathé

Probably more newspaper space has been given to

than any player on stage or screen today.

No woman in America is so much written and talked about. No hamlet is too remote to have heard of her and she is a favorite in the largest cities. In "Patria" she proved her tremendous drawing power. That is

Box office value

It is that remarkable popularity, plus superlative direction, the best stories, and splendid casts that will make Pathé's Mrs. Castle features

The SEVEN PEARLS

WITH

MOLLIE KING

AND CREIGHTON HALE

Some additional reasons why you should book The Seven Pearls

¶ Feature production is the fourth big reason why "The Seven Pearls" is a serial for you to book to get 15 weeks' big business. The national advertising that is being done on this serial will bring the crowds for the first episode. Feature production, with the box office stars and the great story, will bring them back week after week.

¶ National advertising, is the fifth strong argument for this serial. In all the great Hearst newspapers and magazines "The Seven Pearls" is getting extensive advertising and publicity. In the best newspapers of every big city the same advertising is being done.

It is the Pathé policy to help you get the business on Pathé serials

Pathé

Praise is sweet but better still the consciousness that it is deserved.

The praise expressed in the scores of letters from exhibitors who find that

THE FATAL RING—

PEARL WHITE

is truly a wonderful box office attraction, is deserved. "The Fatal Ring" is a big attraction for any house.

"In forty-five minutes we had them standing," say two Texas exhibitors.

Directed by Geo. B. Seitz
Written by Fred Jackson
Scenarios by B. Millhauser

"We believe in giving credit where credit belongs—hence this letter. We started 'The Fatal Ring' on July 21st and we have established a new record for attendance. Last Saturday we opened our house at 1 o'clock p. m. and in 45 minutes we had them standing. That continued until we closed at 11 o'clock at night. Furthermore, everybody was more than pleased with the picture and many compliments were showered upon the management. This is all the more gratifying, as our patrons are very discriminating persons who would not hesitate to say the opposite if they felt it. We have run many Pathe Serials and they have always been money getters."—Gwynn & Blar, Terrell, Tex.

for three weeks, filling the house to S. R.O., performance after performance.

When Victor Hugo's great classic was first brought out in this country four years ago it played 26 weeks in New York, proving the extraordinary hold that the immortal story has upon the public. Today revised, improved and brought up to date, millions wish to see it where thousands saw it before.

"What was the marvel of dramatic skill four years ago remains a marvel. You cannot doubt the worth of the motion picture after you have seen 'Les Miserables'. Exquisite detail."—Oma Moody Lawrence in Chicago Post.

"Infinately better than most of the present day pictures."—Louella Parsons in the Chicago Herald.

"This picture is a marvel, and marvellously well played. Hugo's story is presented faultlessly."—Mae Tinee in Chicago Tribune.

"The crowded house at Orchestra Hall, on Sunday night, the line reaching out on the avenue from the box office is recommendation enough for 'Les Miserables'. It was a warm night and a myriad of counterattractions, but the Hall had as many as it could hold."—Chicago Examiner.

N.S. Kaplan's Repertory of Russian Plays was actually produced in Russia by famous Russian stars, from the stories of world renowned authors, a combination that brings to America

"Pictures That Are Different"

Centuries of oppression and suffering have left the impress of intensity on the Russian people. Eighty per cent. of the population were slaves, released from bondage as recently as 1861.

This intense feeling is reflected in the acting of Mozukin and his wonderful feminine associates of the Moscow Art Theatre.

Their portrayal of the stories of Tolstoy and his celebrated contemporaries visualizes the happenings of real life, expressed naturally by authors who have not stooped to appeal to shallow minds which demand that every story, every play, every picture shall end:

FOLLOWING THE LEAD of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD any amount of so-called exhibitor helps have been advertised.

Every publication having any bearing whatever on the moving picture industry claims a department through which they want to help the exhibitor if he will send his address and the name of his house. It sounds good, but—Just think for yourself a moment.

The exhibitors of today are just as intelligent and in many cases know more and are better posted in the show business than those who have appointed themselves advisors. So why waste your time. If you had a physical ailment you wouldn't run up any brown stone stoop and ring the bell because some doctor put an attractive sign out, would you? Of course you wouldn't. You would look for a doctor who really knew more than you did about every thing physically.

Your business should be treated similarly—it is just as important to life as your body.

When troubles are encountered in the exhibiting end of the motion picture business, look for expert advice—take out your copy of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and study its special departments. They are compiled and edited primarily for the exhibitor.

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the oldest trade paper in the business. It started with the industry. It has a well-known and expert staff of moving picture specialists who have studied the picture business and know what is needed.

If you haven't sent in your renewal, DO IT NOW—or if you are not yet a subscriber, begin today. No successful exhibitor would be without the "WORLD."

Facts and Comments

WILLIAM JOHN WATKINS, a long time and regular editorial contributor to the Moving Picture World, passed from this life on August 22, after a brief illness, at a hospital in Brooklyn, N. Y. The deceased was one of the oldest employees of the Vitagraph company in point of service, having joined that organization in 1900 and continued with it almost to the day of his death. His intimate knowledge of the motion picture business and his early newspaper training made him a valuable commentator on trade subjects. The files of this paper indicate that his first contribution appeared in the issue of February 13, 1909, under the pen name of "The Man About Town," for his identity was never disclosed. From that time until the current issue, with but few omissions, his articles appeared regularly and were read with considerable interest. His last contribution was written the week before his death and appears in this issue. The deceased was a man of education and ability and made many friends. The Moving Picture World regrets his untimely demise and the consequent severance of long and pleasant relations.

A VERITABLE fever of organization seems to have struck the motion picture business. This week's news contributes no less than four efforts among various branches of the trade to get together. Two organizations are of state right buyers; one is of state right producers, and the fourth is of exhibitors on lines similar to both the Exhibitors' League and the First National Circuit. Two seem to have accomplished the work of organization and the others give promise of accomplishing as much. After that time only can furnish proof of their utility. Altogether these efforts indicate a desire to standardize the methods of production and distribution of motion pictures, an end greatly to be hoped for in the present state of affairs.

OPINION in some localities near big camps is, it is reported, reluctant to permit motion picture shows to open Sundays. The soldiers off duty need these places of innocent amusement and the military authorities will perhaps insist that they have them. What the official arrangements in the matter are to be has not been reported as we go to press, but that any arrangements are needed throws a shaft of light into the mental workshops of people who are so hide-bound as to oppose these shows. What some people see is what they have always seen and their make up is such that they'll never see anything else. 'Tis also a safe bet that a majority of them never saw the inside of a picture theater.

SYSTEMATIZING and classifying the information necessary today in any line of business is no easy task, but is, as a matter of fact, a science. The matters covered in each weekly issue of the Moving Picture World are so varied, cover so many different subjects that are of especial importance to every theatre manager that they become invaluable if located at the moment they are desired. It is more than anyone can expect to do, however, to read weekly so much that is pertinent and know just where to lay a finger on it when required. We index as fully as space permits, but some system of filing paragraphs under main heads and sub-divisions for music, projection, advertising, etc., becomes imperative for those who would secure the fullest benefit from this trade paper.
